BIOGRAPHICAL

JOSHUA THOMAS WESTBROOK TILLAR.

So comprehensive in their scope and so effective in their results were the labors of Joshua Thomas Westbrook Tillar that he was long recognized as one of the most prominent and capable men of the state—a dynamic force in those business circles which make for the material upbuilding and progress of the commonwealth. There were also various other phases of his life which brought him before the public and made him loved and honored of his friends. There were military and legislative chapters in his life record that indicated his marked fidelity to duty; and his generous support of church and charitable work were potent elements in the success of his activities along those lines.

Mr. Tillar was born in Southampton county, Virginia, April 6, 1833, a son of John W. and Christian Lundy Tillar. The father, a Virginia farmer, was a soldier of the War of 1812. The mother was born in Greenville, Virginia, and for many years they made their home in Southampton county. Joshua T. W. Tillar was educated in the country schools of his native state and aided his father on the homestead plantation to the age of sixteen years, when he was employed in the sheriff's office of De Soto county, Mississippi. He was a youthful merchant at the age of nineteen years, conducting a store at Hernando, Mississippi, until 1857, when he removed to Selma, Drew county, Arkansas, and devoted his attention to cotton planting and merchandising. With the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in Company D, Colonel Albert Rust's Third Arkansas Regiment, and served until the close of hostilities, attaining the rank of major. With his return to Drew county he entered again actively into the business of merchandising and managing his plantations, there continuing to make his home until 1888, when he removed to Little Rock, where he concentrated his efforts and attention more largely upon banking, becoming a stockholder or director in many of the financial institutions of importance in the state, as well as of several banks in Texas. He also invested extensively in real estate, and at the time of his death was rated as the largest owner of lands, improved and unimproved, in Arkansas. He erected residences and business houses in Pine Bluff, and also the Richelieu Hotel in Little Rock. He was likewise identified with railway construction in the state, and was one of the organizers of the Arkansas Building & Loan Association, of which he retained the presidency for six years. He was likewise the president of the Bank of Little Rock and of the Pine Bluff Compress Company; while with the Arkansas Fire Insurance Company and the Goodbar Shoe Company of St. Louis his position was that of vice president. He became the founder, a director, and the first president of the Citizens Bank of Pine Bluff, and a director in the German National Bank of Little Rock; also in the National Live Stock Bank of Fort Worth, Texas. He was also connected with other banks in Texas and in Arkansas and his labors were at all times a vital element in the growth and progress of the community in which he conducted business affairs. The town of Tillar, Arkansas, founded in 1879, was named in his honor.

On the 24th of October, 1855, Mr. Tillar was married to Miss Antoinette Pruitt, who was born in De Soto county, Mississippi, January 30, 1840, a daughter of Jacob M. and Nancy P. (Johnston) Pruitt, the latter a representative of one of the pioneer families of Mississippi. Her father became an early resident of Arkansas, and the family lived for many years in Selma, Drew county. He was a planter by occupation. To Mr. and Mrs. Tillar were born nine children: Calista Antoinette, the eldest, became the wife of W. W. Holmes, and died leaving one child, a daughter, who is now Mrs. W. C. Adamson of Little Rock; Flora Virginia, the second of the family, is the widow of Nathaniel Holmes, and is very prominent in social and philanthropic circles in the capital city. In her own right she has large real estate and other interests. She takes a most active interest in charitable and benevolent work and in the church as well. She is now chairman of the social service department of the Missionary Society of the Methodist church, was formerly one of the directors of the Young Women's Christian Association, is active in the Tuberculosis League and is chairman of the juvenile court board. She has two children: Antoinette and Lilla Westbrook. The former is now the wife of Arthur C. O'Conner of Detroit, Michigan, and the mother of one son, Arthur C., Jr.; the second daughter, Lilla Westbrook, is the wife of R. M. C. Glenn of Montclair, New Jersey, and has one son, R. M. C., Jr., and one daughter, Virginia Glenn; Thomas Franklin Tillar, the third member of the Tillar family, who was a banker, merchant and plantation owner at Tillar, Arkansas, is deceased. He married Jennie G. Holmes, a granddaughter of Findley Holmes, who came to Arkansas from South Carolina. She is a member of the Daughters of the Revolution, and also of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and is prominent in both organizations. She is, also, the president of the Fine Arts Club, and holds a high place socially. She has one daughter, Emma, who is the wife of Dr. F. O. Rogers, living at Little Rock; Elizabeth Tillar, who married John Honeycutt, was the fourth of the family, and died in early womanhood; Benjamin Johnston Tillar, residing at Fort Worth, but with large business interests in Arkansas as well as in Texas, is mentioned elsewhere in this work. He married Genevieve Eagon, daughter of Dr. S. Eagon of Dallas, Texas, who was one of the most prominent physicians and surgeons of the southwest; Lilla May, the sixth member of the family, is the wife of Judge W. T. Simmons of Fort Worth, Texas; Minnie, the seventh member of the family, died in early life; Ida is the widow of Walter S. Allen of New Bedford, Massachusetts, and has a daughter, Ruth, and now resides in Colorado Springs, Colorado; James Garland Tillar completes the family. Both parents have departed this life. The death of Major Tillar occurred in Little Rock, June 5, 1908. His wife died in Little Rock April 28, 1918.

Not only had Major Tillar gained the distinction of being one of Arkansas' foremost citizens and capitalists, he was also a dominant figure in democratic politics, both state and national, and possessed a fine sense of civic duty. He was a delegate to the democratic national conventions which nominated Horace Greeley and William J. Bryan for the presidency; and during 1873-4 he was a member of the Arkansas legislature, and was in Little Rock during the Brooks-Baxter war. He was also president of the first Silver Club organized in Arkansas. In 1881 he was the Arkansas commissioner to the New Orleans Exposition and was a national commissioner to the World's Columbian Exposition held in Chicago in 1893. He belonged to the Methodist church and to the Masonic fraternity. When he passed to the home beyond, a most fitting, merited and beautiful tribute was paid to him by the Rev. A. C. Miller, who said: "Just twelve years ago, I had the privilege of first meeting Major Tillar; but not until the last two years did I really know the man. During this short period circumstances revealed to me his inner life and gave me glimpses of his real character. Rugged and apparently unapproachable, he was tender as a woman and deeply appreciative of true friendship. Too full of business for much conversation during office hours, he would hold the welcome visitor to his home for discussion of affairs of state and of moral and religious themes. Not himself a public speaker, he admired genuine oratory, and was a most attentive hearer at church. Worshiping his Christian mother's memory, and reverencing her religion, he believed in the church and took pleasure in its services. With an intensely practical mind, he stumbled at some of the difficulties of theology and creed. Unwilling to study the books on these subjects, he delighted in submitting these questions to trusted friends and was grateful for their endeavor to throw light into dark places.

"The greatest, the most difficult problem, he frankly acknowledged, was himself. He believed firmly in God and was willing to trust God's goodness and His justice. Strong and self-reliant in the familiar affairs of life, he confided to those whom he believed worthy of trust, questions outside the realm of his experience.

"With limited early advantages, struggling at first against heavy odds, nevertheless by industry, patience, economy, prudence and clear business insight, he slowly, but surely, succeeded in his chosen realm, the world of finance. He was justly proud of his achievements, but was not haughty, nor given to ostentation, nor to boasting. His growing fortune did not alienate him from friends, nor unduly exalt him. He keenly enjoyed the vigorous exercise of overcoming business obstacles. He had a grasp of details, as well as of the larger problems of finance.

"Not a speculator, he moved forward with sure and steady step to the goal. Working for half a century in a slowly developing state, where few have become rich, he overcame all difficulties, and attained the first rank in his calling. The same energy, the same ability in a more developed community would have given him rank with the great financiers of the nation. He was one of Arkansas' great men. Not as the poet, the orator, or the soldier, did he by some brilliant flash of genius shoot as a meteor into public view; but quietly, patiently, laboriously, he toiled up the heights. A brave soldier, deeply interested in political affairs, he was no less a patriot when he was wresting broad acres from forest and swamp, establishing banks, organizing industries, and furnishing employment for hundreds of his fellows.

MRS. ANTOINETTE TILLAR

"The man who makes openings for others may serve them better than if he had made them mere pensioners on his bounty. Attentive to his business and devoted to his family, our honored friend concentrated his great intellectual powers upon the problems which his practical life daily thrust upon him. Business was not merely his occupation, it was his recreation, the solution of its problems, his joy. He had beautiful day-dreams and builded air-castles that the world suspected not; but his busy brain and strong body would not turn aside.

"With his vigorous constitution fourscore years seemed a reasonable expectancy; but to him relaxation from accustomed task seemed worse than death; and yet to continue also meant speedy exhaustion of vital powers. Ten years more of gradual breaking from the strenuous life, of fruition of high hopes, and of perfecting of cherished plans would have harmonized with our human ideas; but 'man proposes, God disposes.' Shocked by the sudden death of his closest friend, Judge W. S. McCain, he becomes bewildered. The clear brain hesitates, the firm step falters, the brave heart beats slow. Tired, he sleeps! God touches him! He goes to solve the mysteries too deep for human ken!" The memory which Major Tillar left behind him is cherished by many friends and is of inspirational value in the lives of others. The work that he did is still manifest in the stimulus which he gave to Arkansas' growth, development, and greatness.

DALLAS T. HERNDON.

Dallas T. Herndon is a lineal descendant of several colonial families of Virginia, of whom the Gaines and Ruckers are, perhaps, best known. Of the origin of the name Herndon, the following account is a quotation from a genealogy of the family by John W. Herndon, of Alexandria, Virginia, as published in the Virginia Magazine of History and Biography, Vol. IX, No. III (January, 1902), et seq.:

"Among the names inscribed on the roll of Battle Abbey as having come with William the Conqueror into Britain, in 1066, is that of Heiroun. He is the ancestor of the family of Herons, as they were afterwards called, which, for centuries, were prominent in the affairs of the land of their adoption. One branch of this family, probably to distinguish it from another, assumed the suffix 'don,' which, according to some authorities, means the 'Herons on the Hill,' according to others, the 'Herons of the Valley.'

"In 1193 a member of this family accompanied Richard III to the Holy Land, for his escutcheon is carved on a stone gateway in the city of Rhodes. A modification of these arms, argent, a heron volant azure, between three escallops sable, is also found in stained glass in Lincoln Inn Chapel, London."

G. G. Rucker, in some "Sketches of Pioneer Families of Elbert County," Georgia, says, "The colors in the shield, translated, mean: Or, generosity; Argent, peace and sincerity; Sable, constancy; Azure, truth and loyalty. * * * The Herndons (or Herondons) were seated in Kent county (England) as late as the 18th century, where Herndon Hall is still standing; but now the name is borne only by the Virginia family and their descendants scattered all over America." (See also Robson's Dictionary of British Heraldry, Vol. II, published, Sunderland, 1830.)

The earliest authentic record of a member of the Herndon family in America is of William Herndon, "who patented lands in St. Stephen's parish, New Kent county, Virginia, in February, 1674." Of this William, it is known, also, from original court records, that he was born, 1649; married, 1677; died, 1722. His wife, Catherine Digges, was born, 1654; died, 1727; was the youngest daughter of Edward Digges, governor of Virginia, 1655.

Of the marriage of William and Catherine, there is record, known, of the birth of but one son, Edward, born 1678; married, 1698; died, 1722. His wife was Mary Waller.

Edward and Mary had, first, a son, Edward, who married Mary Brock, whose descendants are traced at length in the "Genealogy of the Herndon Family," by John W. Herndon. (See reference above.) Another son, William, was born, 1706; married (first) 1730; (second) 1735; died, 1783. Ann Drysdale, whom William first married, was the daughter of Lieutenant-Governor Hugh Drysdale. She died, perhaps, childless, and he married, again (1735), Sarah Leftwich.

William and Sarah had Edward, born, 1737; married, 1762; died, 1831. This Edward was a lieutenant, 1779, in Captain Rice's company, Colonel Francis Taylor's regiment, Virginia Guards; from June 1, 1779, to August 1, 1780, was captain of a company in Colonel Taylor's regiment; resigned, 1781, at Albemarle Barracks. His wife, Mary Gaines, daughter of James Gaines, of Culpeper county, was born, 1742; died, 1829.

Edward and Mary had eleven children, seven sons and four daughters: William, born, 1764; Benjamin, 1765; Elizabeth, 1766; Rachel, 1767; Edward, 1768; John, 1771;

Mary, 1774; George, 1776; Nancy, 1780; Joel and Henry (twins), 1782. Benjamin Herndon married, 1787; died, 1805. His wife, Susan Ahart, daughter of Michael Ahart, of Culpeper county, was born, 1769; died 1835. They moved to Georgia shortly after marriage, probably about 1793; settled near the then village of Ruckersville, in Elbert county. Benjamin bequeathed, by will, recorded April 23, 1805, at Elberton, "unto my dearly beloved wife, Susannah Herndon, all my house and plantation and lands, with all the rest of the property I now possess, to be hers and at her sole disposal enduring of her life," etc.

Benjamin and Susan had, Michael, born April 26, 1788; Mary, 1790; Edward, 1795; Elizabeth, 1798; Fanny, 1800. Michael Herndon was born in Culpeper county, Virginia; was taken by his parents to Georgia when only four or five years of age; married March 2, 1812; died April 10, 1857. His wife, Sarah Seals, was born August 29, 1796; died December 22, 1837. They resided near Ruckersville, where, by inheritance and enterprise, Michael died possessed of a considerable estate in lands and slaves.

Michael and Sarah had thirteen children: Benjamin, born, 1813; James, 1815; Elizabeth, 1817; George, 1819; Elmira, 1821; Thomas Jefferson, 1823; John Seals, October 25, 1825; William Theodore, 1827; James Edward, 1830; Margaret, 1833; Sarah, 1834; Elbert, 1836; Michael Ahart, 1837. John Seals Herndon married December 8, 1853; died June 10, 1900. His wife, Susan Brown, was born September 3, 1833; died June 22, 1920. Susan, an only child of the marriage of Elbert Brown and Elizabeth Herndon, the latter a daughter of Benjamin Herndon, was a first cousin of her husband. They resided nearly fifty years on a plantation near Hartwell, the county seat of Hart county. In the War of Secession, 1861-65, he was commissioned a captain in the Confederate army.

John Seals and Susan had: George Elbert, born July 2, 1855; John Alpheus, June 19, 1857; Corneila, December 30, 1864; Thomas Oscar, April 22, 1867; Flora, June 16, 1869; Claudius Michael and Clayton Milton (twins), September 2, 1871; Ida, April 11, 1875; Eula, April 12, 1880. John Alpheus Herndon married November 1, 1877; died November 1, 1908. His wife, Mary Mildred Brown, was born July 4, 1860, only daughter of Francis Marion Brown, who was a son of Sagwell Brown and Mary Gaines Herndon, daughter of Edward Herndon (brother of Benjamin mentioned above) and Nancy Rucker, both of Culpeper county, Virginia.

John Alpheus and Mary Mildred resided at Elberton, where he engaged in farming. They had Dallas Tabor, born August 28, 1878; Lois Ida, March 6, 1880; Thomas Vandiver, September 16, 1883. Lois Ida married November 8, 1899, Lon. N. Fortson. They have two sons: Herndon H., born May 31, 1905; Dallas V., born May 5, 1908. They reside at Elberton, Georgia, where he is engaged in farming and mercantile business. Thomas Vandiver graduated at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, 1904; studied at University of Virginia, 1904-05, 1905-06; prepared for the ministry, Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky, 1907-08, 1909-10; married June 26, 1912, Martha Washington Collins of Russellville, Kentucky. They have three children: Virginia Mary, born June 6, 1913; John Williams, June 13, 1914; George Collins, March 6, 1916. They reside at Bay City, Texas.

Dallas Tabor, after three years in high school at Elberton, attended, 1897-99, the Southeast Alabama Agricultural School, at Abbeville, in preparation for college; went from there to the Alabama Polytechnic Institute (Auburn), where he graduated in the class of 1902; was given a fellowship by the faculty and completed the next year graduate courses in history and political science; spent two years, 1904-05, at Barton Academy, Mobile, Alabama, as instructor of history; recalled to the Alabama Polytechnic in the fall of 1905, he was an instructor in the department of history until 1908; was given a fellowship in the University of Chicago, where he pursued, 1909-11, graduate courses in history and political science, specializing in original research; was elected secretary of the Arkansas History Commission in August, 1911, which position he has held continually since. For some account of his work in perfecting a state department of public archives and history in the capitol at Little Rock, see Chapter XXXIII, Vol. I, of this work.

WILLIAM M. SIMMS.

William M. Simms, who has passed the ninety-first milestone on life's journey and for the past three decades has made his home in Benton county, where he was formerly actively identified with horticultural pursuits, has lived retired at Rogers since 1907, enjoying in well earned rest the fruits of his former toil. His birth occurred in Sangamon county, Illinois, on the 1st of January, 1830, his parents being William and Delilah Simms, both of whom were natives of South Carolina. Robert Simms, the paternal grandfather, was born in Virginia and died in Illinois in 1830. The parents of Mr. Simms of this review removed to Illinois in 1816, settling first on a farm in St. Clair county, while subsequently they took up their abode in Sangamon county, that state. Both passed away in Illinois. William Simms was a Methodist preacher and contributed much to the moral development of the districts in which he labored. His political support was given to the whig party.

William M. Simms is the youngest and the only surviving member of a family of ten children. In the acquirement of his education he attended school in Illinois, being a classmate of Abraham Lincoln, who was his first cousin and whom he knew intimately. He heard the famous Lincoln and Douglas debate in 1848. On the 24th of February, 1865, he joined the Union army as a member of Company A, One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he did guard duty until the close of the war, being discharged in October, 1865. He now receives a pension of seventy-two dollars per month. After being mustered out at Memphis, Tennessee, he returned to Illinois, where he successfully devoted his attention to farming for many years. In 1892 he came to Arkansas and purchased a large orchard in Benton county, where he resided until 1907, when he removed to Rogers. It was not until he had reached the age of seventy-five years that he put aside active business cares. His years of intense and well directed activity were crowned with a gratifying and well merited measure of success, for he started out in the business world empty-handed and by diligence, determination and industry reached the goal of prosperity.

In 1856 Mr. Simms was united in marriage to Miss Juliette Hammond, a native of Ohio. They became the parents of five children, three of whom survive, namely: Mrs. Emma Amelia Watson, who is a widow residing in Denver, Colorado; Etta Jemima, the wife of Ed Barklow, who is engineer at the hospital of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company in Pueblo, Colorado; and Will H., who lives with his father. The last named worked in the silver mines and wedded Della D. Newkirk. Mrs. Juliette Simms was called to her final rest in 1906, her death being deeply deplored by many friends as well as by her immediate family. She died in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which she was a devoted and consistent member.

Mr. Simms gives his political allegiance to the republican party, which was the defense of the Union during the dark days of the Civil war, and he maintains pleasant relations with his old military comrades through his membership in the Grand Army of the Republic. After many years of usefulness he is spending the evening of life in well earned retirement, enjoying the veneration and respect which should ever be accorded one of his years whose career has at all times been upright and honorable.

HAMLET GOUDELOCK.

Hamlet Goudelock, postmaster of Eureka Springs, to which office he was appointed in 1920, was born in Hall county, Georgia, on the 8th of May, 1864, a son of R. W. and Theresa J. (Garvin) Goudelock. The Goudelock family originally came from Ireland and the Garvins from England. The paternal grandfather, James Goudelock, was born in South Carolina and in later life removed to Georgia, where he resided until his death. He was an extensive farmer and slave owner. David Garvin, the maternal grandfather, was born in Georgia and resided in that state throughout his life. R. W. Goudelock was born in South Carolina and removed to Georgia with his parents when but a small boy. He was married in that state to Miss Theresa J. Garvin, a native of Georgia, and they removed to Bellefonte, Boone county, this state, in 1870. In 1877 they took up residence in Berryville and the father was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, there, for some years. He served in the Confederate Army under Wade Hampton and he participated in many of the important engagements of that conflict, receiving but one slight wound. To the union of Rev. Mr. Goudelock and wife seven children were born: Hamlet, whose name initiates this review; D. L., engaged in the cattle business in Utah; Reid, operator of a sawmill near Monroe, Louisiana; Ella, the wife of Leo Dubois, a mechanic of Eureka, Utah; Roxanna, the wife of E. T. Lucky, engaged in the sawmill business at Monticello, this state; Martha, deceased; and Atlanta, who lives in Eureka Springs, where she is employed in a feed store. Mrs. Goudelock was a consistent member of the Missionary Baptist church and fraternally her husband was identified with the Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His death occurred in Eureka Springs in 1909, at the age of sixty-six years and Mrs. Goudelock's demise occurred at the age of sixty-two years, in 1908. They were well beloved and highly respected citizens of this community.

Hamlet Goudelock received his early education in Berryville and in due time enrolled as a student in the Clarke Academy there. Upon the completion of his education he engaged in farming and teaching school for some time and for twelve years he was employed in the freight office of a railroad company in Eureka Springs. He had come here in 1891, and in April, 1902, he severed his relations with the railroad company and engaged in the transfer and fuel business. Some time later he established a flour and feed business and was successfully engaged in its conduct until 1920, when he disposed of his interests. In that year he was appointed to the office of postmaster and he has since served in that capacity.

In 1889 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Goudelock to Miss Sarah Moore, a native of Carroll county, this state, and a daughter of Albert Moore, one of the pioneer farmers of that county. To their union six children have been born: Ralph, who is employed in the offices of the Frisco Railroad at Springfield, Missouri; Hugh, associated with the Kansas City Southern Railroad, with headquarters in Kansas City; Fred, engaged in the transfer business in Eureka Springs; Ruth, who for several years was employed in the railroad offices in Harrison, Arkansas, but is now at home; Eugene, attending the State University at Fayetteville; and Laura, a student in the schools of Eureka Springs. Fred is a veteran of the World war, having enlisted in the navy in the early part of the war and serving until the signing of the armistice closed hostilities. He drove a truck in navy shore duty in France.

Since age conferred upon Mr. Goudelock the right of franchise he has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Mrs. Goudelock is a consistent member of the Baptist church. Fraternally Mr. Goudelock is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having passed through all chairs in both organizations. Mr. Goudelock is recognized throughout the community as a self-made man, for he has been in the business world on his own account ever since he was a boy. He is tireless in his devotion to the duties devolving upon him as postmaster and he is considered one of the substantial citizens of Eureka Springs.

SAM CARPENTER.

Sam Carpenter, postmaster of Arkadelphia, was born in the house in which he is now residing, on the 27th of August, 1882, a son of Flavious J. and Jane Elizabeth (Wallace) Carpenter, further mention of whom is made in the sketch of Flavious Carpenter to be found on another page of this work.

In the acquirement of an education Sam Carpenter attended the common schools of his birthplace and in due time became a student in Ouachita College, Webb's School at Bellbuckle, Tennessee, the McTier School at McKenzie, Tennessee, and subsequently the Arkansas State University. He withdrew from the latter institution but a short time before he was to have graduated and in 1906 he went on the road for the Waters Pierce Oil Company, with which concern he was associated for some eighteen months. He then returned to Arkadelphia and took charge of the various business enterprises of his father, which included an ice plant, a transfer business, real estate business and extensive farm holdings. In 1914 he was appointed postmaster of Arkadelphia and he assumed the duties of that office on the 1st of July of that year. He has since been active in this capacity and has won the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. He believes every public office to be a public trust and is tireless in his devotion to the duties devolving upon him as incumbent in that office. He is stockholder in the Merchants Bank and one of Arkadelphia's alert and enterprising business men.

Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, holding membership in Arkadelphia Lodge, No. 1149, and he is likewise a member of the Woodmen of the World.

BARTON R. SMITH.

Prominent among the energetic, farsighted and successful business men of Hamburg is Barton R. Smith, who has been engaged in the abstract business since 1911. A native of Ashley county, he was born near Berea, on the 11th of November, 1883, a son of Charles H. and Mollie (Judkins) Smith, both of whom are deceased. The grandfather on the paternal side was John W. Smith, a native of Alabama. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army and died as the result of exposure and poor food. Charles H. Smith was born in Ashley county, Arkansas, July 11, 1860. On becoming a man he engaged in farming in Drew county.

near Midway, and he was active along that line at the time of his death on February 4, 1892, when he was in his thirty-first year. In 1880, in Drew county, Mr. Smith had been united in marriage to Miss Mollie Judkins, who died February 8, 1892, at the age of twenty-eight years. She was born and reared in Drew county, her parents having been among the early pioneer settlers there. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Smith six children were born, four boys and two girls, Barton R., whose name initiates this review, being the second in order of birth. Three boys are deceased.

In the acquirement of an education Barton R. Smith attended the public schools of Ashley county and after graduating from the high school, enrolled as a student in Beauvoir College at Wilmar. For eight years after putting his textbooks aside Barton R. Smith taught in the district schools of Ashley county, serving two years as county examiner, but in 1907 he resigned his position as examiner to accept the office of deputy circuit clerk of Ashley county. He held that office until 1911, at the termination of which time he made his initial step into the abstract business here, in association with W. R. Goyne and J. R. Woods, the money for establishing the business being advanced by their many friends. Both Mr. Goyne and Mr. Woods are prominent residents of this community, the former having served as circuit clerk of Ashley county for some time and the latter, who was for many years a traveling salesman, is now a member of the state senate. The success of the business seemed assured from the start and two years later Mr. Smith bought out his partner's interests. He continued to operate the business on his own account until 1917, when he associated with G. P. George, they being the only abstractors in Hamburg. Mr. Smith has concentrated his energies upon his business affairs and is known throughout Hamburg as one of the town's most progressive citizens. In 1916 he was called to public office, having been elected mayor of Hamburg and he gave to the city a most businesslike administration, which was marked by a great development in the public welfare. Mr. Smith is active in financial circles as a director in the Farmers Bank & Trust Company and he likewise has some land interests.

On the 6th of October, 1913, was celebrated the marriage of Barton R. Smith to Miss Addie McDougald, a daughter of Bryant McDougald, one of Ashley county's prominent citizens. To their union two children have been born: Edwin, six years of age; and Adelle, aged four. Mrs. Smith is well known in this community and takes an active and prominent part in club and social life.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Missionary Baptist church and Mr. Smith is a generous contributor to its support. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Prairie Lodge, No. 465, F. & A. M. of Hamburg, and he is likewise a member of the Woodmen of the World. In matters of citizenship he takes a progressive stand and whether in office or out of it seeks the welfare and development of his community. He has a wide acquaintance among the leading citizens of Ashley county and the social qualities of his nature have gained him a wide circle of friends.

ROBERT A. RAGSDALE.

The qualifications of the able and successful lawyer belong to Robert A. Ragsdale, who possesses a mind naturally analytical, logical and inductive. Moreover, he has prepared for his profession with great care and in presenting any cause before the court it is at once evident that he has thoroughly studied the vital questions at issue and is well prepared to protect his position by precedent and by legal principles. Mr. Ragsdale was born on a farm in Pope county, Arkansas, May 28, 1884, his parents being L. T. and Isabelle (Boggess) Ragsdale. The grandfather in the paternal line was Thomas Ragsdale, a native of Tennessee, who came to Arkansas in the '20s, casting in his lot among the pioneer settlers of the state. He built the first mill in Conway county and also had the first cotton gin there and in many other ways was closely associated with the early development of that district, whereby was laid the foundation upon which has been built the later prosperity and progress of that section. He died at his home at the old mill many years ago. The maternal grandfather of Robert A. Ragsdale was W. C. Boggess, a native of Kentucky, who arrived in Arkansas in 1845, settling in Jackson county. He followed mercantile pursuits, conducting a store at Pottsville, Arkansas, for about a half century.

It was in Conway county, Arkansas, that L. T. Ragsdale and Isabelle Boggess were united in marriage, the former a native of that county, while the latter was born in Kentucky. Their wedding was celebrated at the historic old Ragsdale mill and L. T. Ragsdale devoted a number of his years to the milling business. He was later educated in the University of Arkansas and obtained a medical degree, after which he devoted his attention to the practice of medicine at Atkins and at Pottsville, Arkansas. His last days were spent in Russellville, where he departed this life June 12, 1918. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity and also to the Presbyterian church, while his political belief was that of the democratic party. He served throughout the Civil war with the Confederate army, rising to the rank of lieutenant. He went to the front with the first company from Morrillton, was wounded at the battle of Shiloh, while at Fort Donelson he was captured and was being held as a prisoner of war at the time hostilities were brought to a close. He owned considerable farm property and was in very comfortable financial circumstances during the later period of his life. To him and his wife were born nine children, of whom five are living: A. S., an oilman, who was formerly engaged in the practice of medicine at Pottsville for a number of years but now lives in Russellville; J. L., who is postmaster of Russellville; Robert A., of this review; Allien, who lives with her mother; Wade, who conducts a garage in Russellville; and E. H., who was a farmer and died October 16, 1921.

Robert A. Ragsdale pursued his education, after attending the public schools, in Hendrix College and later was graduated from the George Washington University in 1915, on the completion of a law course. He afterward returned home and entered upon the active practice of his profession, to which he has since given his attention. He was admitted to practice before the supreme court of the United States January 14, 1918, and had previously been admitted to practice in all of the courts of the state. He was the first man ever admitted to practice before the United States supreme court in the uniform of the navy. He entered the navy early in 1918 and was discharged in December of that year. He was connected with the intelligence office and served most of the time at Newport News, doing convoy work largely. He now concentrates his efforts and attention upon law practice, which is growing steadily and satisfactorily.

On the 26th of May, 1921, Mr. Ragsdale was married to Miss Celeste Campbell, who was born in Missouri and was reared and educated in Little Rock. She is a daughter of R. A. Campbell, a lumberman of Little Rock. During the World war Mrs. Ragsdale served as a Red Cross nurse and went to France, being connected with hospitals in Europe for nine months. She is a graduate of the Cleveland (Ohio) Hospital and of St. Vincent's Hospital at Little Rock and she had charge of the Arkansas University Medical Clinic at Little Rock before entering war service. She also had charge of the Pope county health work in Russellville for fifteen months and taught hygiene in the public schools of this county. She was highly commended by many magazines for her system of teaching hygiene, her labors being most effective in that particular. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ragsdale are members of the Episcopal church, loyal to its teachings and active in its work. Mr. Ragsdale also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and in politics he is a democrat but without aspiration for office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his professional interests. In a calling where advancement depends entirely upon individual merit he is steadily working his way upward and step by step he has advanced until his position in the ranks of the legal fraternity of Pope county and of Arkansas is a most creditable one.

JOHN F. RUTHERFORD.

It has been said that he lives best whose life touches the broadest and highest interests. In this respect John F. Rutherford can be said to have lived long and well. There are few whose contribution to Pine Bluff's upbuilding and development was of so comprehensive and so valuable a character. Prominently connected with the lumber industry, he was also the founder and promoter of the electric street car system and of the electric light plant. Many other business enterprises benefited by his cooperation and felt the stimulus of his enterprise and sound judgment. The story of his career is of inspirational value, showing what can be accomplished through individual effort, intelligently directed. Mr. Rutherford was born in Washington county, Arkansas, near Fayetteville, on the 15th of December, 1859, and after attending the public schools he continued his education in the University of Arkansas. In later years he was made a member of its board of trustees and held that position until within a few months of his demise. He continued to reside in Fayetteville until twenty years of age and after leaving school he was first employed by the firm of Reed & Ferguson of that city. It has often been said that seemingly trivial incidents shape a career and it is well known that at the outset John F. Rutherford had no intention of becoming identified with the lumber industry, but an accident drew his attention to the possibilities underlying the timber belt. It was in connection with the lumber interests of the state, however, that he was destined to rise to greatness, for through many years he figured most prominently in lumber trade circles. It was when the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad was building an extension of its line from Monett, Missouri, south through Arkansas, the line passing through a section rich in agricultural resources, that the contract for a portion of the construction work was secured by J. D. Scott & Sons, railroad contractors. A little later Mr. Rutherford took a contract from this firm and thus he assisted in building that part of the line from Fayetteville south to Van Buren, Arkansas. His contract consisted largely in supplying the bridge timbers and heavy construction material, which he cut from the native white oak found along the right of way. It was in this manner that Mr. Rutherford first became identified with the lumber business. He had the sagacity, however, to recognize what the future had in store for a district so rich in natural resources as western Arkansas, and long after the Frisco line had been completed to Van Buren, Mr. Rutherford continued to supply ties, bridge timbers, etc., for its maintenance. Thus more and more he broadened the scope of his activities in connection with the lumber trade in the southwest. At length he traveled over the state in search of a favorable location, wishing to take up his permanent abode at an advantageous point in this state. He was particularly impressed with the possibilities surrounding Pine Bluff, then a small town of but fifteen hundred inhabitants. He carefully considered the situation from various standpoints and at length determined to take up his abode here. From that time forward until his death he was closely associated with the business of manufacturing and selling lumber, with Pine Bluff as his headquarters. It was in 1885 that he organized what was known as the O. D. Peck Company and began operations here as a lumberman. In 1889 the business was reorganized under the style of the Bluff City Lumber Company and later the corporation acquired the big mills at Kearney and at Clio, together with large and valuable tracts of timber land in a number of adjoining counties. Continuously Mr. Rutherford broadened and expanded his interests until he was occupying a position among the most prominent lumbermen of the state. His plans were always carefully formulated and promptly executed. He seemed almost intuitively to recognize the possibilities of a business situation and he never allowed an opportunity to be passed heedlessly by. He did not confine his attention exclusively to his lumber interests, for he became actively identified with other corporations. He was the head of the Citizens Light & Transit Company of Pine Bluff and he had large investments in coal mining properties in western Arkansas. He also contributed to the organization and promotion of banks and other important business enterprises and was the very embodiment of the spirit of progress which has been the dominant factor in the upbuilding of this section of the country. Aside from becoming president of the Bluff City Lumber Company of Pine Bluff and of the Citizens Light & Transit Company, he was also the chief executive officer of the Citizens Land Company of Pine Bluff and the Greenwood Coal Company of Greenwood, Arkansas, and vice president of the Clio Lumber Company at Clio, Arkansas, the Bastrop Sawmill Company of Bastrop, Louisiana, the Pearce Lumber Company of Kearney, Arkansas and the Morris Lumber Company of St. Louis. He was instrumental in organizing the Simmons National Bank of Pine Bluff, the Consumers Ice & Coal Company of Pine Bluff, the Central Mill & Lumber Company and others. These lumber interests had combined assets of two and a half million dollars and all were in good operation. One of the local papers at the time of his death said: "Several months ago the Clio Lumber Company was placed in the hands of a receiver at Mr. Rutherford's request, to protect creditors, and the Mercantile Trust Company of Little Rock, which was named as receiver, made a report last month showing that the business is now on a paying basis and its future success is assured. He had also completed arrangements for financing and practically rebuilding the Citizens Light & Transit Company in this city and he was preparing to place the bonds for this improvement when he was stricken. After struggling for some time to overcome the effect of the money panic several years ago, Mr. Rutherford was just on the eve of successfully carrying out all his plans and had his life been spared a short while longer he would have been victor in a great struggle which required that genius and judgment which marked him as a great business man and financier. All of his companies were so well organized that it is stated there will be no change in the policy and the various concerns will continue to be operated as in the past. Some time ago when all other opportunities for securing another railroad outlet for Pine Bluff seemed lost Mr. Rutherford became the man of the hour and made plans for extending his lumber roads so as to give a connection with the Rock Island Railroad west of here by the construction of the Pine Bluff, Oklahoma & Texas Railway and was still planning to carry out this project when he was fatally stricken. The panic several years ago prevented Mr. Rutherford from carrying out other plans he had been working on, but he was a man who never despaired or gave up and had he lived everyone who knew him expected much greater things of him. Mr. Rutherford was one of those big men who knows how to do big things. He made several fortunes and reinvested the money in greater projects. Thousands of people were benefited by his investments and the entire city of Pine Bluff was a great beneficiary of his efforts and his successes and failures were keenly felt by the business interests of Pine Bluff."

On the 8th of November, 1891, Mr. Rutherford was united in marriage to Miss Mary Frances Jones and they became the parents of four children, who, together with the mother, survive the husband and father. These are: John F., Jr.; Norma, now Mrs. Everett Owens of Pine Bluff; Augusta, who is the wife of John T. Scogin, Jr., of Atlanta, Georgia; and Allen Scott. Mr. Rutherford belonged to Pine Bluff Lodge, B. P. O. E.; to Lafayette Lodge, No. 101, K. T.; and to the Hoo Hoos, the most prominent organization among the lumbermen of the country. He and his family occupied a beautiful home on West Sixth avenue and Mr. Rutherford ever found his greatest happiness in promoting the welfare and comfort of those of his own household. He gave his political allegiance to the democratic party and at one time served as chairman of the democratic state central committee, in which position he rendered signal service to the organization but he was never active in politics as an office seeker. He was a member of and one of the most generous contributors to the support of the Baptist church, with which his widow and children are also identified. He stood as a stanch defender of every interest calculated to promote the general welfare of city or state, and no cause or interest promulgated for public benefit sought his assistance in vain. He was but fifty-two years of age when he died on the 26th of July, 1911, and as a mark of respect the flag over the Board of Trade building at Little Rock was flown at half-mast and places of business closed at the time of his burial. One of the local papers wrote of him editorially as follows:

"The passing of John F. Rutherford is a distinct loss to Pine Bluff, the community, Jefferson county, the state of Arkansas and the southwest. He was a builder and he benefited Pine Bluff as no other citizen, living or dead. From a business standpoint his death is regrettable and there is not, perhaps, a citizen of Pine Bluff that does not deeply mourn his untimely end. As age is reckoned, John Rutherford was a young man, but he has long been in the forefront of many enterprises and did far more for the community than our citizens will ever realize. He had big ideas and his enterprises were all planned upon a wide scale and in attempting to further his own private interests he was of incalculable benefit to everybody around him. He gave to Pine Bluff its first big lumber industry and was the founder of our electric street car system. He established an electric light plant and was the promoter of numerous other enterprises that did much towards a wider development of Pine Bluff and the enhancement of its real estate values from which all enjoyed distinct benefits. Like all other men who attempt great things, he was often the subject of severe criticism, but he went his way, looking neither to the right nor to the left, and established a fortune which came altogether from judicious investments and a fearless energy that he put into everything that he undertook. When the York interests were withdrawn from his enterprises he went bravely ahead, and just at the time when the successful culmination of his affairs was almost a fact, death removed Henry Duncan, whose interests in the business were withdrawn, leaving Mr. Rutherford to cope with conditions single-handed and alone. He was still undaunted and took the management of his vast interests in hand and battled for their mastery as no man ever fought before. To these reverses were added financial stringency in the east and while he had ample securities he could not finance it and the affairs of the Bluff City Lumber Company went into the hands of a receiver. The average man would have quit here, but John Rutherford was no quitter. No soldier ever battled more bravely against superior forces than he. He felt, with easier conditions in the east, which have come, but too late for John Rutherford, he would soon be in command of the Bluff City Lumber Company again and there were many who shared this feeling with him. Mr. Rutherford very aptly has been called the 'Man of Iron,' for those who knew him intimately can truthfully say that nothing on the earth or under it ever made him look backward when he once put his hand to the ploughshare. Neither friends nor enemies could restrain him. He fought his battles like a soldier and was never whipped except by the icy hand of death. The Commercial regrets his loss more than it can express in these few weak and fruitless words. His life was an inspiration to the poor boy of the community because Mr. Rutherford started life as a poor boy and reached the top rung purely upon his own efforts. He was an inspiration to the business man because he never permitted any condition, no matter how uncertain, to discourage him. He was an inspiration to the good citizens because he was one himself. He lived a moral, useful and enterprising life and died as he had lived, fighting for his life. Around his death hovers a peculiar sadness—sad because he did not live to see the materialization of his plans or the accomplishments of his ambitions. No man fought harder for success and none deserved it more. He brought wealth and affluence to others, as well as to himself, but his tangled affairs cheated him of the pleasures that were his by right of conquest. Tersely stated, a big man is dead. An exemplary husband and enterprising citizen has passed away. Pine Bluff has lost its biggest asset."

John F. Rutherford could truly be called one of the captains of industry of the southwest. He formulated comprehensive plans, he accomplished his purposes and he builded for the future as well as for the present and for the community at large as well as for himself. His life was a beneficent influence in the community in which he so long lived and where he was most highly honored by all who knew him.

ROBERT J. WHITE.

Robert J. White, an attorney of recognized ability practicing successfully at the bar of Paris, was born in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, June 19, 1863, and is a representative of one of the old southern families. His grandfather, John White, was born in Virginia, whence he removed to Kentucky. He married into a prominent family of Virginia, wedding Miss Estes and after residing for some time in Kentucky they established their home in Tennessee, where Mr. White owned and conducted a large plantation. Both died prior to the Civil war. Their son, Robert White, Sr., was born in Virginia, February 22, 1805, and died on the 20th of May, 1880. He was educated in the schools of Kentucky and there prepared for and took up the practice of law. Later he removed to Charleston, Missouri, where he engaged in law practice until the Civil war, when he joined the Confederate army. He was not only following his profession at that time but was also serving as a member of the state senate of Missouri and served as a member of the constitutional convention of Missouri when the state attempted to secede. In 1861 he volunteered for service and became a first lieutenant, raising a company, which was attached to General Price's army. He lost his eyesight while on active duty with his company in the south and afterward joined his wife at Pine Bluff, whither she had gone with her family and her slaves. Robert White was well-to-do at the time when he entered the Confederate army but largely lost his possessions ere the war was brought to a close. His eldest son, Silas W. White, also went to the front with his father and became a colonel. It was in Clinton, Kentucky, that Robert White was united in marriage to Miss Mary Frances Cook, who was born in Calloway county, Kentucky, in 1837, and died in 1908. She was a daughter of Jesse Cook, also a native of Kentucky, where he spent his life, passing away at Columbus, that state. He was a minister of the Christian church and was also a teacher and surveyor. To Robert and Mary Frances (Cook) White there were born four children. Mr. White had been previously married and by his first union had five children, all of whom have departed this life. Mrs. White had also been previously married, becoming the wife of Judge Emmerson and they had two children, one of whom survives, Kate M., who is the wife of Walter A. Edwards, a farmer, living on her mother's old homestead at Nimrod, Perry county, Arkansas. Three of the four children born to the second marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Robert White are living: Frances is the deceased wife of Judge John H. Lake. The others are: John H. White, a prominent attorney who served as a member of the state legislature from Logan county from 1905 until 1907 and in the state senate from 1909 until 1911, while at the present time he is devoting his attention to farming and lives in Paris, Arkansas; Robert J., of this review; and George H., who is a resident of Perry county, Arkansas. He was elected county sheriff at the age of twenty-four years and filled the office for six years. He also represented Perry county in the state legislature for two terms, or from 1913 until 1915, when he retired to the farm and devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits until 1919, when he was elected county judge. He declined to become a candidate for a second term and now resides on a plantation at Nimrod. The mother, Mrs. White, was a member of the Christian church. Mr. White gave his political allegiance to the democratic party and both were highly esteemed, enjoying the confidence and goodwill of all who knew them.

Robert J. White, whose name introduces this review, who was the eldest of the four children born of his parents' second marriage, was educated in the common schools of Yell and Perry counties and when his regular school work was completed he began reading law. He studied under the direction of J. F. Sellers and was admitted to the bar on the 15th of September, 1885. Immediately afterward he opened an office at Perryville, where he continued in the active practice of his profession until 1890, there becoming a partner of W. S. Eakin, who was a son of Judge John R. Eakin, a member of the supreme court. Mr. White removed to Paris in October, 1890, and through the intervening period has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, trying all kinds of cases and trying them well. His preparation is thorough and exhaustive, his presentation of his cause accurate, clear and cogent and at all times his reasoning is sound and his deductions logical.

In December, 1886, Mr. White was married to Miss Maggie B. Rowles, who was born in El Dorado, Arkansas, and reared in Mississippi. She died in April, 1898. Of their four children three are living: Sid H., the eldest, a graduate of the Paris high school, read law under his father, was admitted to the bar in 1916 and then practiced with his father for two years. He afterward followed his profession independently in Paris until 1920, when he went to Okemah, Oklahoma, where he is now a very successful attorney; Mary, who has engaged in teaching since the age of sixteen years, was educated in the Paris schools, in the University of Arkansas and in the Teachers' Normal School at Ada, Oklahoma, from which she was graduated. She is now teaching mathematics in Hartford, Arkansas; Margaret is the wife of Omer A. Young, secretary and business manager of the Agricultural School at Russellville, Arkansas. In 1899 Mr. White was united in marriage to Miss Lillie B. Swaim, who was born in Winona, Mississippi. They became parents of five children, four of whom are living: Robert J., nineteen years of age, and a student in the State University; Lois, also attending the State University; H. Kent and Evans Blackstone, both pupils in the Paris schools. Mrs. White is a consistent member of the Baptist church. Mr. White belongs to the Masonic fraternity and in politics he is a democrat. He served as county judge of Perry county when but twenty-four years of age and declined to stand for reelection. He now has a large practice, to which he gives his entire time and attention and his devotion to his clients' interests is proverbial. He has been admitted to practice in all the courts and it is doubtful if any lawyer in western Arkansas has a larger or more distinctively representative patronage.

DAVID F. TABER.

David F. Taber of Fort Smith, is the proprietor of the American Laundry and is a business man whose life has been characterized by unfaltering diligence and persistency of purpose. Louisiana claims him as a native son, his birth having occurred in Shreveport in 1879, his parents being John W. and Regina (Mullen) Taber. He was reared and educated in the place of his nativity, supplementing his public school training by study in the Thatcher Institute and thus becoming well qualified for life's responsible duties. He started out in the business world in connection with an insurance agency, of which his father was the head. In January, 1913, he came to Fort Smith, Arkansas, where he embarked in the laundry business, starting in a small way. As the years have passed he has developed his interests, however, until he is now at the head of a first-class laundry of substantial proportions. He has ever maintained the highest standards in the character of the work done and his treatment of his assistants and his patrons perhaps is the strongest element in his success. He is straightforward with all and what he says he will do, he does. In a word, his promise can ever be depended upon and his success is justly merited because of his industry and reliability.

Mr. Taber was married in 1903 to Miss Blanche Florsheim of Shreveport, Louisiana, and they have become parents of three children: David, Jr., now ten years of age; Ida Prager, five years of age; and John W., who is one year old. Mr. Taber belongs to the Business Men's Club and closely studies all the questions which are of vital importance to the welfare of the community, giving his support at all times where he thinks the public welfare can be conserved.

VIRGIL F. YATES.

Virgil F. Yates, deputy county collector of Miller county, was born at Brightstar, Arkansas, December 17, 1879, and is a son of Judge James W. Yates, a native of North Carolina, who was reared in Georgia and came to Arkansas in the early '60s, settling on a farm. He cleared and developed one of the first farms in his section of the state. He was a son of William Harrison Yates, who came to Arkansas at the same time, and thus the family has been connected with the progress and development of the state through several generations. Judge Yates was in the Confederate service from the outbreak of the Civil war until the close of hostilities. He then returned to the farm and resumed the further development and improvement of the property.

In 1888 he was elected to the position of county judge and served upon the bench for two terms, while for twenty years he filled the position of justice of the peace and made a most creditable record during his judicial service, his opinions always being characterized by fairness and impartiality. He belonged to the Baptist church, in which he served as deacon, and was moderator of the Enon Baptist Association for about eighteen years. He died in that faith on the 4th of December, 1910, when seventy-two years of age. In early manhood he wedded Mary Richardson, who died about forty hours before her husband, and thus the worthy couple who had for so long traveled life's journey together were separated by death for only a very brief period.

Virgil F. Yates was reared upon the old home farm, enjoying the experiences and the opportunities of farm life and obtaining his education in the common schools. He continued at home until taking up his abode in Ravana, where he remained for several years. He afterward went upon the road and traveled for a number of years, save during the period when he was agent for the railroad and when he was engaged in mercantile business at Brightstar, for his father and uncle for six years. Later he kept books for the Block Bayou Lumber Company at Myrtis, Louisiana. He worked in the circuit clerk's office until 1920, when he accepted the position as deputy tax collector for Miller county and is still connected with that office.

Mr. Yates was united in marriage to Miss Ella Gildon in 1906 and they have become parents of two children who are living, Drefka and Bhema. Mr. Yates has membership in the Masonic order and has served as Master two terms. He is a consistent and faithful member of the Baptist church, his entire life being actuated by the teachings of that denomination.

LOUIS E. LOVE, M. D.

Dr. Louis E. Love, actively engaged in medical practice in Dardanelle, was born in Desha county, Arkansas, August 24, 1855. He comes of a family long represented in the south. His grandfather, Edward Love, was a native of North Carolina and was prominently connected with the iron industry, owning large iron works in his native state. His son, Isaac Love, was born on the French Broad river in North Carolina and in early manhood came to Arkansas, where he married Elizabeth Ferrell, a native of this state and a daughter of David C. Ferrell, one of the pioneer settlers of this commonwealth. She died leaving an infant son, D. C. Love. Isaac Love then married Virginia Dumond, who was born in Desha county, this state, a daughter of Louis Dumond, who was a native of Canada and of French descent. In early life he became a resident of Arkansas and was one of the builders of the Arkansas Post, living near the post for a number of years. He fought the Indians in an early day and met with all of the hardships and privations of pioneer life. For a number of years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Love resided in Desha county and in 1868 removed to Yell county. In later years the father retired from active business and was living in Dardanelle at the time of his demise. His wife was reared a Catholic, while Mr. Love was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and also belonged to the Masonic fraternity. In politics he was a democrat and during the Civil war aided in the recruiting service and in supplying provisions to the army. To him and his wife were born three children, two of whom are living: Louis E. and Frances, who is the widow of George Cole and lives in Dardanelle.

Dr. Love acquired his education in the graded and high schools of Dardanelle and afterward became a student in the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, from which he was graduated in 1877. He then located for practice in Dardanelle, where he has remained throughout the greater part of the time through the intervening years to the present. He took postgraduate work in St. Louis and also with the Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota. He devotes his attention to general practice and is skillful in all branches of the profession. He was also for a number of years associated in mercantile business with his brother-in-law, T. E. Wilson, and he owns considerable farm interests. He is likewise a director in the Dardanelle Bank & Trust Company and thus his activities have covered a broad field and have shown marked judgment in investments but nevertheless the major part of his time and attention has been given to his professional duties. He served as state medical examiner in 1907 and he is a member of the Yell County and of the Arkansas State Medical Societies.

In June, 1909, Dr. Love was married to Miss Rena Hall, who was born in Arkansas, a daughter of L. C. Hall, who was one of the prominent and early settlers of Dardanelle. He is still living and has retired from active business. The family of Dr. and Mrs. Love numbers three children: Virginia Dumond, Louis E. and Anna Louise, all in school. Dr. and Mrs. Love belong to the Presbyterian church and are interested in all those forces which make for progress and improvement in the community. Fraternally he is a blue lodge Mason and politically he is a democrat. He has ever combined a broad humanitarianism with comprehensive understanding of the scientific principles of medicine and thus he has gone about doing good among his fellows, his many friends and acquaintances bearing testimony to the sterling worth of his character and his capability along professional lines.

EDWARD GRADY THOMPSON.

Edward Grady Thompson, banker and capitalist, who was generally considered one of the wealthiest men in Little Rock, died at his home at No. 1702 Gaines street on the 3d of March, 1921, at the age of sixty-eight years. His birth occurred in Lewis county, Missouri, on the 1st of September, 1852, his parents being Almarine Moorhill and Helen (Waters) Thompson. The family was of Virginia origin.

Edward Grady Thompson supplemented his preliminary education by a course of study in LaGrange College at LaGrange, Missouri, from which institution he was graduated in 1871, and then joined his elder brother, William J. Thompson, who had settled in Augusta, Arkansas. He was a lawyer by profession and for some time engaged in active practice. Later he further extended the scope of his activities to include the banking business and real estate investments, giving all of his time to the supervision thereof. Mr. Thompson resided in Augusta for nineteen years, engaged with his brother in extensive business as a banker, planter and merchant. The two brothers, with the late Rufus W. Martin, built the railroad from Brinkley to Newport, which is now leased to the Rock Island system. In 1892 he came to Little Rock and established himself in the stately home which he occupied until his death. Here he soon became a prominent factor in financial circles, joining his brother and J. E. England in forming the Citizens Bank. Under their wise and able management this rapidly became one of the foremost financial institutions of the city and in 1904 it was consolidated with the Exchange National Bank, on whose board Mr. Thompson became a leading director. He was also a director in the Union Trust Company and its active vice president until the change in the federal laws compelled him to choose between the two institutions, when he resigned his directorship in the latter to devote himself to the Exchange National Bank, where he and his family held extensive interests.

Especially kindly and charitable in spirit and disposition, he won many friends and his death was the occasion of deep grief to hundreds who knew and esteemed him. His estate, which was large, embracing excellent business property and other realty investments, is being carefully administered by his family. At the time of his demise the Gazette printed the following tribute: "Mr. Thompson was one of the ablest and most farseeing of all our business men; a man of quick perception and unerring judgment, who not only handled his own extensive affairs with consummate wisdom, but who conducted the equally extensive affairs of the estate of his deceased brother and of many relatives and friends. His judgment was so sound and his industry so unflagging that many desired his counsel and assistance, and his kindness was so unlimited that he was willing to bear all the burdens that were laid upon his shoulders. He was one of the most honest of men, so that he was trusted by all; but his most striking characteristic was his absolute kindness of heart. He must have been a good judge of human nature, for in his long business career he made practically no mistakes, so that success crowned his every effort; but no one living ever heard him speak unkindly of any man. He must have known that some men were bad and unworthy of his confidence, but he simply let them alone, and pursued the even tenor of his way, which was filled with sweetness and light. He was a most devoted husband and father, a public-spirited and patriotic citizen, whose life was as blameless as that of a little child. There was about him a singular purity and a gentleness like that of a woman, and he passed through the world with no soil upon the pure vesture of his soul."

At Augusta, in 1873, Mr. Thompson married Miss Frances Gregory. The children of this marriage are: Mrs. Leah T. Rose, Mrs. Helen T. Bogart and Mrs. Lottie T. Hancock. The wife and mother died February 23, 1908. On the 12th of July, 1910, Mr. Thompson wedded Mrs. Erminie Waters, who survives him.

Mrs. Erminie Sager Thompson, widely known in Little Rock, was born in Stevens Point, Wisconsin, and is a daughter of Archibald Douglass and Isabel (Gamble) Sager. Her father was born at Oswego, New York, and her mother at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. They lived for many years in Wisconsin, where Mr. Sager engaged in business as owner and operator of extensive stone quarries. He was a representative of one of the old colonial families, his people being early pioneer settlers of New York, where later he was closely associated with business affairs. He died in the year 1906.

His daughter, Mrs. Thompson, the eighth in order of birth in a family of nine children, pursued her education in the schools of Stevens Point and in early womanhood she became the wife of Thomas Crowhurst Waters, a native of Canada, who was for a number of years a successful lumberman in Michigan and later in Arkansas, where he was associated with his brother-in-law, George H. Van Etter. He died in 1902 and eight years later Mrs. Waters became the wife of Edward Grady Thompson. She is a woman of marked strength of character, noted for her sympathetic nature and her sound judgment as regards charitable and benevolent projects, as well as business transactions. She is not a society woman in the usually accepted sense of the term but is a leader among those who give their attention to the serious and vital questions and interests of life, particularly among those who are the supporters of any project planned to help the unfortunate. During the World war she was the first chairman of the Red Cross workroom, which she organized and equipped through donations, entirely without help from the chapter. She gave her entire time to this work until it was completely organized and equipped. In October, 1917, she resigned to become state chairman of the Fatherless Children of France, in which connection she continued for a period of three years, caring for some four thousand children. She votes with the democratic party and is a member of Christ church (Episcopal). She is actuated by a most thoroughly Christian spirit, reaching out along the lines of helpfulness to all who need assistance, encouragement and a kindly word, and she sheds around her much of life's sunshine.

GORDON N. PEAY, SR.

Gordon N. Peay, Sr., president of the W. B. Worthen Company Bank of Little Rock, is a representative of one of the oldest and most honored pioneer families of the state. His grandfather, Major Nicholas Peay, came to Arkansas from Kentucky and was long closely associated with the development and progress of the early days that constitute the foundation upon which the upbuilding and the prosperity of the state in later years has rested. The trip to the western wilds was made in two keel boats, which he purchased at Louisville, Kentucky, and on which he transported his family, his household goods and provisions, as well as two wagons and a team of horses. The boats were floated down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to the mouth of the Arkansas river, from which point they were poled and cordelled up the Arkansas river to Arkansas Post, from which point, owing to the low stage of the water in the river, the journey to Little Rock was made by the overland route. The family arrived in the embryonic metropolis of the state on the 18th of September, 1825, after having been nearly sixty days on the trip. Major Peay and his family were entertained by Major Isaac Watkins, one of the representative pioneers of Little Rock, until it was possible to transport the boats containing their household goods to their destination, in Little Rock, in the latter part of October. At the time when Major Peay established his home here there were but nine families in Little Rock and the entire population did not exceed one hundred and fifty persons. The major rented a two-story frame building on the west side of Main street, near Markham street, and there opened the first hotel in town. In 1827 he purchased six lots on the corner of Scott and Markham streets, where a larger building was erected and where he was associated with John English in the hotel business, under the firm name of English & Peay, until 1840, when the building was destroyed by fire. In the following year the firm completed a three-story brick hotel and gave to the same the name of the Anthony House. This became known far and wide as the chief hotel in the state in its day and the building remained one of the landmarks of Little Rock until 1876, when it was destroyed by fire. Major Peay, who gained his military title by reason of his service in the Indian wars, died in 1842, and his wife was summoned to the life eternal in 1846. In an issue of The Gazette of June 20, 1826, appears the following: "Entertainment at Little Rock by N. Peay, late of Shelbyville, Kentucky, in the house near the river bank, lately occupied as a tavern by Isaac Watkins." His home, known as Walnut Grove, was situated "near Little Rock." The death of Major Nicholas Peay on the 3d of May, 1843, "at an advanced age," is mentioned in The Arkansas Gazette of May 17 as follows: "At the organization of the Territory of Arkansas he was one of the first pioneers, and for more than twenty years has resided among us respected and beloved by all. Though formed of the milk of human kindness, he had a soul to seek and brave the battle's din. In the last war (1812), when foreign atrocity had dug up the tomahawk and scalping knife, and the tocsin was sounded on the northwestern frontier, with the fierce spirits of the 'dark and bloody ground,' he responded to the war cry of Harrison, Shelby, Desha and Johnson, and on the tented field discharged this highest duty to his country, 'without fear and without reproach.'" His wife, Mrs. Juliet Peay, died March 28, 1847, and the Arkansas Democrat of April 9 following spoke of her as being "in the fifty-third year of her age, a lady possessed of rare culture and virtues." She was born in Frederick county, Virginia, and accompanied her parents on their removal to Shelbyville, Kentucky. Married in the latter state, she accompanied her husband to Little Rock in 1825, and possessing courage as well as culture and refinement, she bravely faced the conditions of pioneer life which here confronted her. She was survived by five children: Gordon Neill, John C., William Nicholas, Juliette and Sophronia.

Gordon N. Peay, son of Major Nicholas and Juliet Peay, was born in Nicholasville, Kentucky, in 1820 and was therefore but five years of age when his parents came to Arkansas. He was reared in Little Rock and became a prominent factor in its financial circles, while in other ways he was also closely identified with the development and upbuilding of the capital city. He served from 1854 until 1868 as receiver of the old Real Estate Bank of Little Rock and made a striking success of this difficult undertaking. He filled the position of clerk of the circuit court of Pulaski county for twelve years, was for several years clerk of the chancery court and for an extended period filled the office of master in chancery. A contemporary writer has spoken of him as "a man of distinctive business sagacity, while his sterling attributes of character gained for him the implicit confidence and esteem of all who knew him." When the Civil war broke out he was captain of the Capital Guards, a local military organization, which was mustered into the Confederate army as Company A, Sixth Arkansas Infantry, under command of Colonel Richard Lyons. Later Gordon N. Peay succeeded to the colonelcy and saw much arduous military duty in Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia. He participated in many of the most hotly contested battles of the war and in the latter part of 1863 returned to Little Rock, where he served as adjutant general of Arkansas under Governor Harris Flanagin until almost the close of hostilities between the north and the south. He was a most stalwart advocate of the democracy and a recognized leader in its local councils. He belonged to the United Confederate Veterans' Association and held membership in other fraternal and social organizations. He was also a communicant of the Episcopal church, as was his wife. A man of marked intellectual force and broad vision, he left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the history of city and state through many years.

Colonel Gordon N. Peay was married in Little Rock, in 1856, to Miss Susan Crease and they became the parents of three sons and five daughters, of whom two sons and three daughters are yet living. The mother was a daughter of John H. Crease, who was born in London, England, and died November 25, 1872. The Arkansas Democrat of November 10, 1848, said of him: "John H. Crease was induced to come to Arkansas in the year 1837 at a salary of thirty-five hundred dollars, at that period being not more than adequate to the arduous and responsible duties of cashier of the principal bank of the State Bank of Arkansas, and the expenses of living then greatly enhanced. This salary was reduced by successive legislatures from time to time until the session of 1844, when it was reduced to one thousand dollars. The bank had been previous to the session of 1842 put into liquidation, and during those two years Mr. Crease had performed the duties of financial receiver. * * * As a bank officer he never made an enemy or incurred displeasure, but on account of the rigorous discharge of his duties and a zealous concern for the welfare of the bank without knowing the face of any man. * * * At the close of his official career and as a result of the last thorough and searching investigation which had been made of the management and conditions of the bank the standing joint committee on the State Bank for the session of 1844 wind up their report in the following language referring to Mr. Crease: 'In conclusion we beg leave to state that the financial receiver has afforded every facility, rendered every aid, and made every explanation necessary to the understanding of the condition and situation of the bank by your committee, and the manner in which he has kept his books, which bear upon their face an elaborate, clear and most satisfactory account of all the money received and paid out by him, and of every other transaction to which any reference has been necessary, as well as the manner in which he has discharged every other duty connected with his office cannot be too highly commended.'"

Gordon N. Peay, Sr., grandson of John H. Crease and the seventh in order of birth in the family of Colonel Gordon N. and Susan (Crease) Peay, obtained a public school education and has devoted his life to banking save for six years, during which he served as county treasurer of Pulaski county. He has also become a director of the Capital Building Association and one of the directors of the Terminal Warehouse Company and other corporations which figure prominently in the business development and progress of the community. He is now president of the W. B. Worthen Company Bank, which was organized January 1, 1871, by W. B. Worthen and Edwin W. Parker. Prior to this time Mr. Worthen had been associated with Gordon N. Peay, Sr., in the real estate and brokerage business and following the death of Colonel Peay, in 1876, Mr. Worthen entered into partnership relations with Edwin W. Parker and established a banking and brokerage business which they conducted for many years under the firm style of Parker & Worthen. In June, 1888, the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Parker retiring in order to again engage in the real estate and brokerage business, while Mr. Worthen continued in the banking business under the name of the W. B. Worthen Company, Bankers. In 1902 the business was incorporated with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars, with Mr. Worthen as the president and Gordon N. Peay of this review as cashier. The bank developed and prospered with the growth of the city and state and in 1904, because of too limited space at the location which they were then occupying, a removal was made to the northwest corner of Markham and Main streets, then the very heart of the business section. At that time the deposits of the bank had reached three hundred thousand dollars, considered a very large figure. Following the death of the founder, Mr. Worthen, in 1911, Gordon N. Peay, Sr., succeeded to the presidency, while George G. Worthen, son of the founder, became vice president. During the strenuous financial times following the armistice the Worthen bank added over one million dollars in new deposits within a year. At present the capital and surplus is five hundred thousand dollars, while the deposits amount to two million three hundred thousand dollars. Recently an addition has been made to the bank in keeping with the former attractive quarters and has added many new conveniences to the building, including a directors' room, offices for the insurance and real estate departments and offices for the different officials of the company.

On the 16th of October, 1889, in Little Rock, Mr. Peay was married to Miss Zilla Cole, who was born in Mitchell, Iowa, June 25, 1871, a daughter of Charles H. Cole. She was educated in St. Mary's College of Albany, New York, and by her marriage has become the mother of two sons and a daughter: Gordon N., Jr.; Helen Frances, now the wife of W. A. Thompson of Little Rock; and George Hastings, who was born April 25, 1899.

Politically Mr. Peay has always been an earnest democrat and has ever been most loyal to the interests and institutions of his native city and state. During the World war he served on various war boards, was division chairman of the War Savings Stamps campaigns and largely aided in promoting the sale of Liberty bonds. Fraternally he is a blue lodge Mason, an Elk and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His religious faith is indicated in the fact that he is a communicant of Christ Episcopal church and is now serving on its vestry. He represents a family that for three generations has borne an active and helpful part in promoting the development and progress of the capital city and, building upon the foundation of service and public spirit laid by his grandfather and his father, he is carrying his efforts into still broader fields of usefulness, being classed with the men of recognized worth in all that pertains to Little Rock's development and upbuilding.

S. E. SMITH, M. D.

Dr. S. E. Smith came to Pine Bluff to enter upon the practice of medicine here following his discharge from the army as a veteran of the World war. He was born in Ashley county, Arkansas, in September, 1885, a son of Samuel and Mary (Cammack) Smith, the former a native of Alabama, while the latter was born in Ashley county, Arkansas. The grandfather in the paternal line died while serving in the Confederate army during the Civil war. The Cammack family were among the pioneer settlers of Ashley county and became actively identified with the early development and later progress of that section of the state. Samuel Smith has figured prominently in connection with public affairs in Arkansas, serving for eight years as county judge of Ashley county, his record upon the bench being distinguished by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution and by marked fidelity to duty. To him and his wife were born six sons and one daughter: Guy E.; S. E.; Oscar D., a graduate of the agricultural department of the University of Arkansas, and now a teacher in the Agricultural School at Monticello, Arkansas; Russell A.

and Homer A., both of whom served in the navy during the World war; P. Armon, a student in the University of Arkansas; and Beulah.

Dr. Smith, whose name introduces this review, pursued his education in the University of Tennessee at Nashville, where he won his medical degree. He has ever been a close and discriminating student of professional interests and since leaving college wide reading has kept him in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and practice. He entered upon the active work of the profession in Ashley county in 1911 and afterward practiced in Bradley county from 1913 until 1918, making steady progress in his chosen life work. In the latter year he entered the military service of the country as a member of the Medical Corps and was commissioned a lieutenant. He served at West Point, Kentucky, and at Camp Knox and following the close of the war he was mustered out and came to Pine Bluff, where he has remained. He has made continuous advancement in his chosen life work and his success is due to his thorough preparation and his conscientiousness in the discharge of all of his duties. He is most careful in the diagnosis of his cases and allows nothing to interfere with the faithful performance of the daily tasks which are his.

Dr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Valie L. Caldwell of Giles county, Tennessee. Fraternally he is a Mason and his religious faith is that of the Baptist church. He and his wife are widely and favorably known in Pine Bluff, although residing here for but a few years, and the hospitality of their home is greatly enjoyed by the many friends whom they have made.

WILLIAM ROBERT DONHAM.

Carlyle has said, "The story of any man's life would have interest and value if truly told." It is the purpose of the historian to set forth in this record a tale which in the telling should have inspirational value to all who read it, for Judge William R. Donham has attained distinction and prominence as a representative of the bar and has left the impress of his individuality indelibly upon the judicial history of the state. For many years he practiced successfully at Benton and since 1917 has made his home in Little Rock, following his profession in the capital city throughout the intervening period to the present. It is such men as Judge Donham who have been the real promoters of Arkansas' development and greatness. A native of this state, he was born near Monticello, in Drew county, September 14, 1875, his parents being William C. and Mary (Hales) Donham, both of whom were natives of Mississippi and belonged to old and prominent southern families. The father, William Carroll Donham, was reared and educated in his native state and with the outbreak of the Civil war he joined the Confederate army and became a second lieutenant of the Ninth Mississippi Infantry, engaging in active military duty until his capture at Dalton, Georgia, after which he was held as a prisoner of war until the cessation of hostilities, being incarcerated at Fort Delaware. Soon after the close of the war he removed to Arkansas and purchasing a tract of land in Drew county turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. In 1877 he established his home in Grant county, where he again engaged in farming until 1881, at which time he disposed of his property there and took up his abode in Jefferson county. In 1886 he removed to Saline county and continued to engage in farming which had claimed his attention up to this time. His progressiveness was not only manifest in the manner in which he conducted his agricultural interests, but also in his relation to the public, his aid and influence ever being given on the side of progress and improvement in all that related to the welfare of community, commonwealth and country. The democratic party numbered him among its stalwart supporters and while he never sought nor desired public office he was at all times keenly interested in everything that pertained to civic advancement. He belonged to the United Confederate Veterans' Association and he was an equally loyal member of the Missionary Baptist church. His death occurred January 3, 1913, while his wife died some years before—in 1894.

It was in the schools of Jefferson county that Judge Donham began his education, which he continued in Saline county, following the removal of the family thereto when he was a lad of about eleven years. After leaving the public schools he spent one year as a student in the Arkansas Industrial University at Fayetteville and then matriculated in the law department of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, where he continued his studies for another twelve months. In further preparation for the bar he entered the Missouri Law College at St. Louis, there remaining until his graduation with the LL. B. degree as a member of the class of 1902.

Judge Donham was admitted to practice before the circuit court at Benton upon successfully passing the required examination and at once took up the active work of the profession. To an understanding of uncommon acuteness and vigor he added a thorough and conscientious preparatory training and in his practice has exemplified all the higher elements of the truly great lawyers. He is constantly inspired by an innate inflexible love of justice and a delicate sense of personal honor, which controls him in all his personal relations. His fidelity to the interests of his clients is proverbial, yet he never forgets that he owes a higher allegiance to the majesty of the law. His diligence and energy in the preparation of his cases as well as the earnestness, tenacity and courage with which he defends the right as he understands it, challenges the highest admiration of his associates. He invariably seeks to present his arguments in the strong clear light of common reason and sound logical principles. He built up a large and lucrative practice and has appeared in connection with many important cases which have been brought before both the state and federal courts, including the supreme court of Arkansas and the supreme court of the United States. In 1908 Mr. Donham was elected to the bench of the county court of Saline county and at the close of his two years' term was reelected, so that he served upon the bench until 1912. A contemporary writer has said of his judicial career: "His administration has been specially notable from the fact that he has succeeded in greatly reducing the debt of the county, in addition to carrying out a progressive policy in the constructing of good roads and bridges throughout his jurisdiction. In every respect he has been a highly satisfactory incumbent of the office of county judge."

On the 4th of November, 1897, Judge Donham was united in marriage to Miss Ruth A. Smith, who was born and reared in Saline county, a daughter of John W. Smith, a representative agriculturist of that section of the state. Judge and Mrs. Donham became parents of four children: Blanche, who is now the wife of Dr. Sidney R. Crawford; Grace, who on the 15th of March, 1921, became the wife of Thomas Gray; John Smith, born in 1905; and Ruth, who completes the family. Both Judge and Mrs. Donham are members of the Missionary Baptist church and in its work have taken active and helpful part, doing all in their power to promote the growth of the church and extend its influence. Since coming to Little Rock Judge Donham has been made a director of the Baptist State Hospital in this city. In politics he has always been active as a supporter of democratic principles, but has never sought nor desired office outside of the strict path of his profession. Fraternally he is a Mason and his life has been guided by those principles which constitute the basic elements of the craft.

ROBERT H. WHITEHEAD, M. D.

By way of the teaching profession Dr. Robert H. Whitehead has arrived at that limitless field of labor known as medical practice and after thorough preliminary training he entered upon his chosen life work in 1915. In 1920 he removed to Gillett and in the intervening period of two years has become well established in his profession in this city. He was born at Tichnor, Arkansas, in 1885, a son of Robert G. and Harriett (McClanahan) Whitehead. The father was born in Perry county, Indiana, and was a son of Jacob Whitehead, who removed from Boston, Massachusetts, to the Hoosier state and who was of Irish extraction. With the outbreak of the Civil war Robert G. Whitehead joined the Union army and served with the Fourth Indiana Cavalry through the period of hostilities. In this he displayed the characteristic loyalty and military spirit of the family, for his father, Jacob Whitehead, had served in the Mexican war and his grandfather was a soldier of the War of 1812. Robert G. Whitehead was united in marriage to Harriett McClanahan, whose father removed from Hickman, Kentucky, to Arkansas, settling near the present site of Tichnor.

Robert H. Whitehead is the only one of his parents' children who reached adult age. He was educated in the public schools of Stuttgart, Arkansas, and in Hendrix College, thus laying a broad literary foundation upon which to rear the superstructure of his professional learning. Having decided upon the practice of medicine and surgery as a life work he entered the St. Louis University Medical School and has since taken postgraduate work in Chicago. He then located for practice in his native city and in 1920 came to Gillett, where he has continued in medical practice. He was previously identified with professional interests here, however, as principal of the Gillett School in 1908-9 and superintendent at De Witt, Arkansas, in 1909-10. He had also taught school at Tichnor and his work in the educational field constituted the initial step toward his other professional activity. He now devotes his time and attention unremittingly to the practice of medicine and is most careful in the diagnosis of his cases, his ability bringing him rapidly to the front. He applied for service in the World war but the armistice was signed before he was called upon for active duty.

Dr. Whitehead was married to Miss Lu Ola Hinman, a daughter of J. D. Hinman of Gillett, Arkansas, and they have become parents of two children: Robert H. and Lois Marie. Dr. Whitehead belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a loyal follower and exemplar of the principles of the craft. He is the president of the County Medical Society and is also a Fellow of the American Medical Association, through which connections he keeps thoroughly informed concerning the latest scientific researches, investigations and discoveries of the medical profession, being quick to adopt and utilize any new method which his judgment sanctions as of real value in the treatment of disease. In his profession as in other relations of life he is actuated by a most progressive spirit.

ALBERT BELDING GAINES.

So closely interwoven with the history of Hot Springs is the life record of Albert Belding Gaines that the annals of the city would be indeed incomplete and unsatisfactory were there failure to make prominent reference to him, who as banker and hotel man did so much to shape the commercial and financial records of the city. His activities were guided by the highest business standards and were the expression of notable ability, of marked enterprise, of keen sagacity and broad vision. Moreover, the personal record of Albert Belding Gaines reflects credit and honor upon Hot Springs inasmuch as he was a native son of the city and his activities were here directed throughout his entire business career. He was born on the 17th of August, 1857, and was a son of William H. and Maria (Belding) Gaines. In the paternal line he comes of English ancestry, representatives of the name crossing the Atlantic from England to Virginia when this country was still numbered among the colonial possessions of Great Britain. On the distaff side he was a direct descendant of William Brewster, who as one of the one hundred and twenty passengers on the Mayflower landed at Plymouth and became one of the first permanent settlers of Massachusetts and New England.

Albert B. Gaines pursued his early education under private tutors and afterward attended the Emory and Henry College of Virginia, while later he became a student in a commercial school in Memphis, Tennessee. He thus had thorough preliminary training for life's practical and responsible duties and as the years passed his interests increased in volume and importance until he was an outstanding figure in the business and financial circles of Arkansas. When twenty-one years of age he organized the Arkansas State Bank of Hot Springs, of which he became the cashier. Later he purchased the city waterworks, which he reorganized and improved and placed on a paying basis. He was constantly watchful of opportunities and neglected no chance for legitimate business advancement, his ability enabling him to improve many chances which men of more limited capacity would have failed to recognize. In 1884 he purchased the interest of Colonel D. C. Rugg in the Arlington Hotel and from that time on his business largely centered in the ownership and management of the great hotel properties for which Hot Springs is justifiably famous. At one time he was president of the Hot Springs water, gas and electric companies and did much to develop and improve these great public utilities. He had splendid powers of organization, with which he combined initiative and marked enterprise. In his later years the development and care of the hotel properties claimed the major part of his interest and to the time of his death he was president of the Arlington and Eastman Hotels of Hot Springs and of Hotel Jefferson of St. Louis.

In February, 1882, at Camden, Arkansas, Mr. Gaines was united in marriage to Miss Mary C. Fellows, a daughter of Daniel Fellows, a planter and merchant of Camden. They became the parents of two sons: Daniel Fellows, who married Miss Dorothea Haley and who is the president of the hotel company, making his home in Hot Springs; and Albert B., Jr., who is living at Englewood, New Jersey.

Mr. Gaines was a member of the Episcopal church and counted it an opportunity and not an irksome duty to extend a helping hand to many a fellow traveler on life's journey. He was also a prominent figure in club circles, belonging to the Englewood Golf Club, the Englewood Club, the Englewood Field Club and the Knickerbocker Country Club, all of Englewood, New Jersey. His political belief was that of the democratic party, but aside from exercising his right of franchise he took no active part in politics. He knew how to maintain an equitable balance between social interests and business affairs, never allowing the one or the other to thoroughly monopolize his time. Nevertheless he ranked as one of the foremost of the progressive business men of Hot Springs, looking ever beyond the exigencies of the moment to the opportunities and possibilities of the future. He labored not only for today but for the morrow and was therefore ready to meet any emergency that might arise. He largely set the standard for hotel service in Hot Springs and the mammoth hostelries of which he was largely owner became palatial in their appointments and one hundred per cent in their service. As a successful business man he became known throughout the country and he stood as a splendid example of that progressive citizenship which has transformed Hot Springs from a provincial town into a great cosmopolitan city with every activity and interest known to the modern-day world.

J. HOMER JONES.

J. Homer Jones is at the head of the firm of Jones & Rigby, a business that was established a half century ago. This company is conducting a foundry and machine shop and does special work along various lines. Mr. Jones, the senior partner, was born in Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, and while residing in his native state learned the blacksmith's trade, especially in connection with the dressing of oil and gas well tools and drills. The knowledge thus acquired has been of immense value to him in the conduct of his business affairs in later life. He came to Fort Smith in 1912, being brought to this city by the Mehlberger interests to do work in connection with oil and gas well drills and appliances. He thus entered into active association with the business of which he is now the head. This concern was established about fifty years ago by Philip Mehlberger and was originally conducted as a foundry and machine shop. Conrad Mehlberger succeeded the original owner and carried on the business for some time, or until it was eventually acquired by J. Homer Jones. The present company of Jones & Rigby does machine work of various kinds and special work, also brass castings, blacksmithing and the work on oil drilling tools and heavy forgings. They do repair work on water well and oil well drills and gas well appliances. Theirs is the only shop in this vicinity where special work of this character can be done. Mr. Jones excels in this class of work, having previously been employed in the oil regions of West Virginia for seventeen years, whereby he gained wide experience that now enables him to meet the demands placed upon the firm in the manufacture and repair of special machinery and oil drills and appliances.

HUGH ANDERSON DINSMORE.

Hugh Anderson Dinsmore, now living retired in Fayetteville, has long been recognized as a leader in political circles in Arkansas, as well as a prominent member of the bar. In both fields laudable ambition, devotion to duty and fitness for leadership have placed him above his fellows. A native of Arkansas, his birth occurred in Cave Springs, Benton county, on the 24th of December, 1850. His parents, Alex W. and Catherine (Anderson) Dinsmore, were natives of Pennsylvania and Alabama, respectively. The father was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and there received his education. He was graduated from Washington College and was a man of great intellect and business ability. His demise occurred in March, 1894. Mrs. Dinsmore was born in Courtland, Alabama, but came to Arkansas with her parents and was married in Benton county. Mr. Dinsmore had come to Benton county in 1852 and was a merchant, well known throughout the community. Five children were born to their union, three of whom are living: Hugh Anderson, whose name initiates this review, the first in order of birth; Mrs. E. P. Watson of Bentonville; and Mrs. John McClune of Oklahoma. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dinsmore were consistent members of the Presbyterian church and in politics he was a democrat and was a member of the Secessional Convention of 1860. During the Civil war he served in the commissary department. The paternal grandfather, James Dinsmore, was likewise a native of Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he lived and died. Hugh A. Anderson, the maternal grandfather, was born at Bryan Station, Kentucky. He subsequently removed to Alabama, where he resided for some time and came to Benton county, Arkansas, in 1836. He was a successful farmer.

In the acquirement of an education Hugh Anderson Dinsmore attended the common schools of Benton county and made his initial step into the business world as clerk in a store, a position he held for two years. He had determined to make the legal profession his life work and as a result read law under Samuel N. Elliott of Bentonville and was admitted to the bar in 1874. In that same year he resigned his office of circuit clerk, to which he had been appointed by Governor Baxter, and the following year he came to Fayetteville and entering into partnership with J. D. Walker he commenced the active practice of his profession. In 1878 he was elected prosecuting attorney and for six years was active in that capacity. At the termination of that time he again entered into practice, so continuing until 1886, when he was appointed United States minister to Korea by President Cleveland. The duties of this office were concluded in April, 1890, he having served for one year under a republican administration, and in September of that year he returned to Fayetteville. Two years later he was elected to congress and for six terms represented his district in that body. In 1905 he retired from active political life and is now residing in Fayetteville. He is living practically retired, his only interest being in the conduct of his fruit farm. At one time he had a stock farm but he has disposed of it. From the outset of his professional career, he enjoyed a large and distinctively representative practice that connected him with some of the most important litigation tried in the courts of the district. His gift of oratory not only proved of value in his court work but also in his political connections.

On the 25th of May, 1883, occurred the marriage of Mr. Dinsmore to Miss Elizabeth Le Grand Fisher, a native of St. Louis, Missouri. To their union one son was born, Hamilton Atwood. He is now residing in El Paso, Texas, and is an attorney there. He attended the Pantops Academy of Virginia and later enrolled as a student in the University of Arkansas. Subsequently he read law in Greenville, Texas, under an uncle, James H. Dinsmore, a well known attorney there for many years, who died in December, 1920. Mrs. Dinsmore's demise occurred on June 19, 1886. Mrs. Dinsmore's parents were Michael and Anna (Atwood) Fisher, and the father was a Presbyterian minister. He was at one time president of the Westminster College at Fulton and at the time of his death was a member of the faculty of the Missouri State University, being professor of latin and ancient languages.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Dinsmore has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party and as before stated, has taken an active part in political affairs. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he has no fraternal affiliations. While a member of congress he was a member of the board of regents of the Smithsonian Institution and is now a member of the board of trustees of the Arkansas University. The history of the life of Mr. Dinsmore is the record of one whose intellectual merit and constantly developing powers have brought him to prominence, his worth and ability in his profession, in citizenship and in private life being attested by the consenus of public opinion.

BENJAMIN F. BROWN.

Benjamin F. Brown, an enterprising merchant of Bald Knob, is a representative of one of the pioneer families of Arkansas. His grandfather removed from Tennessee to this state at an early day, making an overland trip with ox team, settling in White county, where he entered land from the government. It was a wilderness tract upon which he settled and upon him devolved the task of clearing away the timber and breaking the sod. He farmed, hunted and trapped in the early days, for in that time game was plentiful. He killed deer, bears and other kinds of big game and continued a resident of White county to the time of his death, contributing to its early development and assisting in the task of laying broad and deep the foundation upon which has been built the later progress and prosperity of the county. Tennessee and thence removed to White county, Arkansas, accompanying his parents His son, Harrison Brown, was born in Alabama, afterward became a resident of here in 1836. He therefore became familiar with all of the hardships and experiences of frontier life. He attended the subscription schools and after acquiring his education bought land and carried on general farming and stock raising. In the early days he made staves out of the timber which he cut upon his place, loaded these on a barge and floated them down the river to New Orleans, where he sold both boat and staves. He did his trading at West Point, a landing on the river, and he continued to farm as the years passed by. His death occurred at West Point, when he had reached the age of fifty-five years. His wife died at the comparatively early age of thirty-five. They were parents of three children: Owen, Benjamin and Ophry. By a previous marriage to a Miss Arnold, a native of Arkansas, Mr. Brown had four children: Henry, Margaret, Emily and California. Having lost his second wife, he was married again to a Miss Goss and their children were: Helen, deceased; and Anna and Viola, who are living in New Mexico. The mother of Benjamin F. Brown was a daughter of Frank Goss, a native of Germany, who came to Arkansas about 1836 and took up land near Batesville in Independence county. He was a farmer, a hunter and also a shoemaker and miller. In fact, he was extremely handy in all kinds of work. He constructed a water mill on Reeds creek in Independence county and operated the mill for twenty-four hours in a day. He died in that county.

Benjamin F. Brown, the only surviving child of his father's second marriage, was born in White county, January 17, 1851, and was educated in White county, attending the subscription schools which were held in log schoolhouses, with split log benches and other primitive furnishings. He walked about three and a half miles to school and attended for only three months in the year. Following his mother's death he lived with a brother and sister until eighteen years of age and then began earning his living by working as a farm hand at fifty cents per day. He afterward purchased land near Bald Knob and engaged in general farming and stock raising, devoting fifteen years of his life to that occupation. In 1886 he became a clerk in a store at Bald Knob, Arkansas, and then established business on his own account in 1890. He has prospered as the years have gone by and his energy and determination have been strong and salient forces in his success. He also has farming interests, making a specialty of the raising of strawberries, cotton and potatoes.

Mr. Brown has been married twice. He first wedded Elizabeth Nicks, a native of Arkansas, and they became the parents of six children, five of whom are living: Margaret, Virta, Frank, Morris, Harrison and Wesley. For his second wife Mr. Brown chose Laura Marshall, a native of Arkansas and a daughter of William B. Stillwell, a native of Arkansas county, who was born near Arkansas Post, Arkansas, June 24, 1829. His grandfather, Harold Stillwell, with his father, Joseph Stillwell, came to Arkansas Post in 1798, being the first Stillwell to settle in Arkansas. The cypress log house is still standing and the well is still in use. Mr. Brown and all of his family, with the exception of two, are members of the Christian church.

During the Civil war the Brown family lost everything that they had except their home. One brother, Henry Harrison Brown, was a soldier of the Confederate army. He enlisted from White county and served throughout the period of the war, being on duty east of the Mississippi until discharged, due to the condition of his health. Later, however, he reenlisted and participated in the battle of Helena. He started with Price on the Missouri raid but contracted pneumonia, which was the cause of his death after his return home. B. F. Brown has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party but the honors and emoluments of office have no attraction for him. He has concentrated his efforts and attention upon his business affairs and in 1919 he remodeled his store in Bald Knob, where he now has a splendid mercantile establishment, featuring as one of the leading stores of the city.

It was in the year 1875 that Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Ward came to Arkansas, where the father engaged in business as a carpenter and contractor. He erected several houses in Yellville and at Eureka Springs and was regarded as a successful business man of his locality. In politics he was a democrat and served as justice of the peace for a number of years. Fraternally he was a Mason and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Stookey, a merchant of Flippin, Arkansas; Floyd E., a conductor on the Missouri Pacific Railroad, living at Crane, Missouri; Jessie, the wife of I. E.

C. Floyd of Yellville, Arkansas. He also did claim work in Little Rock for the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company for a period of three years and prior to that time he entered upon the active work of the profession. He afterward engaged in law practice at Cotter, Arkansas, where he took up his abode in 1906, remaining there until he became associated with the railroad company. In 1912 he removed to Russellville, where he began practice with Thomas D. Brooks and the association was maintained until the latter's death, after which Mr. Ward became the associate and law partner of Judge Martin, their connection continuing until the latter was elected to the circuit court bench. Mr. Ward then formed a partnership with A. S. Hays, in 1914, and the firm of Hays & Ward still exists, their practice being extensive and of a most important character. The two are also partners in the ownership of a large farm in Pope county, Arkansas.

In 1906 Mr. Ward was married to Miss Bertha Jones, who was born in Illinois and is a daughter of W. R. Jones, a very prominent banker and merchant at Yellville. Mr. and Mrs. Ward are parents of a daughter, Marydell, ten years of age, who is attending school. In his political views Mr. Ward is a democrat and has rendered capable service to the community as a member of the city council. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in which he is serving as exalted ruler and he is also identified with the Knights of Pythias and with the Masons. His religious faith is that of the Central Presbyterian church, to which his wife also belongs, and professionally he is connected with the State and American Bar Asociations, at all times keeping in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and practice.

He then spent two years at Conway and his first occupation upon putting his textbooks aside was in the mercantile business. The family resided for many years in Illinois, but eventually the parents removed to Walla Walla, Washington, where the father's death occurred July 15, 1912. The mother survives and yet makes her home in that city. Before proceeding to the coast they had lived for many years in Missouri. His brother, Dr. A. L. Carmichael died August 29, 1921, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

It was by reason of the various removals of the family that John H. Carmichael began his education in the public schools of Newton county, Missouri, where the family home was established in 1874 and continued his studies in the Fort Smith (Ark.) district high school, at Booneville, Arkansas, and in the Paris Academy at Paris, Arkansas, where he remained from 1887 until 1890. He is now senior partner in the law firm, Carmichael & Brooks. He was a candidate for the office of chief justice of the supreme court of Arkansas and he has served as special judge in both the supreme and circuit courts. He has been made a member of the board and secretary thereof to examine applicants for admission to practice in the supreme court, having served in that connection from 1908 until 1910. He was formerly a director and is still attorney for the Southern Trust Company. He compiled in connection with W. F. Coleman, the Supplemental Digest of City Ordinances of Little Rock in 1893. His comprehensive knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence and the ability which he has displayed in handling most intricate, important and involved interests rank him with the eminent representatives of the Arkansas bar and his high professional standing is furthermore indicated in the fact that he has been honored with the presidency of the Arkansas State Bar Association. He is also a member of the American Bar Association, and a member of the local council for Arkansas.

On the 10th of January, 1893, Mr. Carmichael was married to Miss Amelia Parker of Paris, Arkansas, a daughter of James W. and Adaline (DePriest) Parker. Her father was born in Mississippi, served as a soldier in the Confederate army during the Civil war and for many years lived in Paris, Arkansas, departing this life in January, 1917, when about eighty-five years of age. He had for a number of years survived his wife, who was born in Louisiana and whose death occurred in 1909. Their daughter, Mrs. Carmichael, was born in Jones county, Mississippi, November 18, 1869, and by her marriage has become the mother of four children: Lentes, the wife of Walter B. Moore; Camille, the wife of Frank W. Herndon; Celestes; and John Hugh, who was born June 8, 1904.

In his political views Mr. Carmichael has always been a democrat and is recognized as one of the active party workers. He is interested in all those forces which make for higher ideals, for loftier standards in citizenship and which constitute a more effective force in the Americanization of this land. Along the line of his selected life work he has made steady advancement, conforming at all times to the highest ethics of the profession and his record is one which reflects credit and honor upon the bar that has honored him.

LUTHER M. BURGE.

Luther M. Burge, filling the position of postmaster at Cabot, was born in Prentiss county, Mississippi, in 1869, his parents being W. D. and Henrietta (Burress) Burge. The father was born in Rutherford county, North Carolina, and was a son of Woody and Dulsena (McIntyre) Burge. The family is of English lineage and was founded in America by three brothers of the name who came from England in colonial times. One of these brothers settled in North Carolina and became the progenitor of the branch of the family to which Luther M. Burge belongs. W. D. Burge served as a soldier for four years in the Confederate army during the Civil war. He and his father removed to Prentiss county, Mississippi, and in young manhood he wedded Henrietta Burress, a daughter of Thomas and Sallie (Berry) Burress. Her father removed from South Carolina to northeastern Mississippi and her mother was also a native of South Carolina. The father of Thomas Burress was John Burress and the name was originally spelled Burroughs. To the marriage of W. He represented his county in the general assembly of Mississippi for two terms and afterward removed to western Texas, while later he came to Benton county, Arkansas, where he arrived in the year 1907. He had previously lived in this state in 1891 but had subsequently gone to Texas and later returned to Arkansas. During the first period of his residence here he engaged in merchandising at Clarendon. In 1909 he was appointed tax commissioner of the state by Governor Donaghey and occupied the position for three and a half years. Later he removed to a farm near Jacksonville, Arkansas, and gave his attention to general agricultural pursuits until 1917. In the meantime he was elected and served three years as state

REV. WILLIAM J. CARROLL.

Rev. William J. Carroll, pastor of St. Mary's and St. John's Catholic parish of Hot Springs and a tireless worker in behalf of the church, is a native of Ireland, his birth having occurred in County Kilkenny on the 9th of June, 1878. His parents, Patrick and Ann Carroll, were also natives of that country and the mother is still residing in the Emerald isle, but the father died in 1883.

Rev. Father Carroll acquired his classical and philosophical education in Mungret College at Limerick, Ireland, and his theological studies were pursued at Kenrick Seminary of St. Louis, Missouri, where he was ordained to the priesthood on the 14th of June, 1902, Archbishop Kane officiating. His first charges were at Van Buren and Fayetteville, Arkansas, and after presiding over those parishes for two years he was sent to Eureka Springs, Arkansas, where he was stationed for nine years. In 1913 he came to Hot Springs as pastor of St. Mary's church and is now in charge of St. John's parish as well, doing systematic and effective work in caring for the ecclesiastical interests under his control. He is constantly broadening the influence of the church and under his guidance its work has materially grown and developed. While at Eureka Springs he erected a new church, which was dedicated under Father Carroll's administration, as a memorial to the mother of Hon. R. C. Kerens, who served as ambassador to Austria under the administration of President Taft. Father Carroll has dedicated his life to the service of others and has not only gained the affection of his parishioners but also enjoys the respect and esteem of the people of other denominations. By example as well as precept he has pointed out to others the best way of life and his influence has been a beneficial factor for good.

WILLIAM K. WARD.

William K. Ward is actively identified with the business interests of Van Buren as manager of the Van Buren Ice & Cold Storage Company. He was born at Fort Smith, this state, in 1897, a son of J. N. and F. L. (Barnes) Ward. Mr. and Mrs. Ward were the parents of seven children, only two of whom are living.

Upon reaching school age William K. Ward entered the Fort Smith grade schools and after graduating from the high school there entered into the business world. For two years he was actively identified with the ice business but upon the entrance of the United States into the World war, he put all his personal interests aside to enlist in the service of his country. He enlisted in the latter part of 1917 and was sent to Staten Island, New York, for his training. Subsequently he was sent to France and for seven months served with the heavy artillery at Brest. In 1919, following the signing of the armistice, he received his discharge and a short time afterward returned to Van Buren. He was offered and accepted the position of manager of the Van Buren Ice & Cold Storage Company and he has been a dominant factor in promoting the interests of that concern. For about thirty years the company has been a representative business interest of Van Buren and some fifteen years ago the Ward interests took it over. The capacity of the plant allows for the making of sixty tons of ice per day and the storage capacity is twenty-five hundred tons. In order to conduct the business efficiently, thirty people are constantly employed, and patrons are assured of the best service possible. The company delivers ice within a radius of fifty miles. Further history of this business is incorporated in the sketches of Earl Ward, J. N., and Frank Ward, to be found elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Ward married Miss Rebecca Clarke, a daughter of Mrs. Walter Clarke of Fort Smith. Mrs. Ward is prominent in the club and social circles of Van Buren and is a woman of charming and magnetic personality. A democrat in politics, Mr. Ward takes an active interest in the election of competent men to office, but has never sought nor desired political preferment for himself. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and is an exemplary member of that order. During the five years he has been connected with the Van Buren Ice & Cold Storage Company as manager he has concentrated his entire time and energies upon his business affairs and the result is such as would be pleasing to any one. He seems to be accumulating force, his expanding powers finding expression in the constant growth of the business interests with which he is connected.

ERNEST LEE HOLLAWAY.

Ernest Lee Hollaway, a young man of high professional attainments now serving as superintendent of schools of Arkansas City, is alert, energetic and progressive and his personality is such that he has gained the respect and esteem of all with whom he has been associated. He is one of Arkansas' native sons, his birth having occurred in Portland, on the 25th of July, 1895, and his parents were W. L. and Eugenia (Machin) Hollaway. He is of Irish lineage, Robert Lee Hollaway, the American progenitor of the family, having left the Emerald isle in 1845. He first settled in Mississippi, where he continued to reside until 1850, when he came to Arkansas, locating at Portland and casting in his lot with the pioneers of Ashley county. His son, W. L. Hollaway, has devoted his life to the occupation of farming and still makes his home at Portland. Two of his brothers served as soldiers in the Confederate army during the Civil war and both met death in that conflict. The Machin family is also of Irish descent, and was established in America in 1845. Settlement was first made in Alabama, whence removal was made to Columbia county, Arkansas, in 1875, and in 1877 members of the family located in Ashley county, this state. Eugenia Machin was born at Lafayette, Oklahoma, and she was married near Hamburg, Arkansas, in 1883 to W. L. Hollaway, by whom she had six children, three sons and three daughters, but only three of the number, one son and two daughters, are living. Mrs. Hollaway died at Portland in 1904, at the age of forty-five years and her demise was deeply regretted by her family and a large circle of friends, for she was a devoted wife and mother and was the possessor of many fine qualities.

E. L. Hollaway, the fourth in order of birth, attended the grammar and high schools of Portland, Arkansas, and from 1913 until 1915 was a student at Hendrix College at Conway, this state, where he pursued a literary course in preparation for the B. A. degree. In 1915 and 1916 he was an instructor in history in the public schools of Russellville, Arkansas, and during the latter year attended Valparaiso University at Valparaiso, Indiana, through the spring and summer terms. In 1916 and 1917 he was head of the science department in the Russellville schools and then became superintendent of schools at Hermitage, Arkansas, filling that position until the 10th of September, 1918. He then enlisted for service in the World war, being sent to Camp Pike, Arkansas, where he became a private of Infantry Company No. 36 of the Ninth Receiving Battalion. He was discharged at Camp Pike on the 10th of December, 1918, and at once resumed his professional work, becoming superintendent of schools at Womble, Arkansas, on January 20, 1919, and there continuing until May 1 of the following year. He then entered Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, which conferred upon him the degree of Bachelor of Arts on the 1st of June, 1921, and he also received from that institution the LL. B. degree. On the 1st of April, 1917, he had been admitted to practice in the chancery and circuit courts and on the 3d of May, 1921, he was granted a license to practice before the supreme court of the state. He secured his education at the cost of self-denial and through hard work, obtaining the funds necessary by teaching and other employment and never faltering in his determination to reach the desired goal. In September, 1921, Mr. Hollaway came to Arkansas City as superintendent of schools and is now serving in that capacity. He is resourceful in meeting the various problems which arise in connection with the conduct of the schools and has succeeded in securing the hearty cooperation of the teachers under him in his efforts to maintain the highest possible standards, not only as to scholarship but also as to discipline in the training of students for good citizenship.

At Russellville, Arkansas, on the 30th of May, 1917, Mr. Hollaway was united in marriage to Miss Veva Inez Reynolds, a daughter of John W. Reynolds, a highly respected resident of that place, and they have become the parents of a son, Ernest Lee, Jr., now two years of age. They are members of the Methodist church at Arkansas

City, of which Mr. Hollaway is chairman of the board of stewards. Mr. Hollaway is also identified with the Masonic order, belonging to Black Springs Lodge, F. &. A. M., at Womble, Arkansas. He is a member of the executive council of the Arkansas Inter-School Contest, is vice president of the Desha County Literary & Athletic Association and is also connected with the Arkansas School Athletic Association and the Southeastern Arkansas Literary & Athletic Association. Studious by nature, he keeps in touch with the most modern ideas in relation to the education of children and is ever ready to transform his ideas into realities if convinced of their worth. He deserves much credit for the success which he has achieved, for it has been gained entirely through his own efforts, and in his present position he is doing effective and valuable service for the public good. He expects to enter into the active practice of law in 1923.

J. E. PATTY.

J. E. Patty, manager at Fort Smith for the Bell Telephone Company, was born in Van Buren, Arkansas, August 15, 1892, and is a son of J. J. Patty, who was a native of Tennessee, and Mary (Anderson) Patty, who was born in Kentucky. In the maternal line the ancestry can be traced back to the family of which George Washington was a member.

In the public schools of Van Buren, J. E. Patty obtained his early education and afterward became a student in the Fayetteville University. He likewise pursued a commercial course in Draughon's Business College and was thus well equipped for life's practical and responsible duties. He became connected with the Bell Telephone Company as assistant bookkeeper in August, 1912, and was soon promoted by reason of his ability and efficiency to head bookkeeper. Later he became cashier and was next made assistant manager, acting in that capacity until 1915, when he became manager. In this position he supervises one hundred and fifteen employes, who are located in Fort Smith and in Van Buren. He is doing excellent work for the company in this connection, maintaining a high standard of service and thus incidentally contributing to the continued growth of the business in the district over which he has jurisdiction.

Mr. Patty was united in marriage to Miss Florence Euper, a daughter of W. L. Euper of Fort Smith, representative of one of the old and highly respected families of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Patty now have a son, Robert, who is three years of age. Mr. Patty belongs to the Noon Civics Club, to the Business Men's Club, and to the Lions Club, of which he was formerly treasurer and at one time he was secretary and later vice president of the Ad Club. He is interested in all that pertains to business conditions and his progressiveness has been a potent influence in promoting commercial welfare in Fort Smith. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons, exemplifying in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft, and he also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He possesses marked executive ability, as shown in the conduct of his business affairs, and is a man of very pleasing personality, his social qualities making for popularity wherever he is known.

GEORGE A. GREER.

George A. Greer, occupying an enviable position in financial circles in Prairie county as president of the First National Bank of Des Arc, was born in Aldboro, Ontario, Canada, in 1871, and is descended from Irish and Scotch ancestry, his parents being J. H. and Maria Amelia (Grant) Greer, the former born in the north of Ireland, while the latter was a native of Aberdeen, Scotland. J. H. Greer spent the first eleven years of his life on the Emerald isle and then crossed the Atlantic to Canada with his parents. Following the attainment of his majority he became identified with the lumber trade and in the year 1890 he took up his abode in Searcy, Arkansas, where he remained for a time but later returned to Canada, where he continued to reside until his death. His wife also crossed the Atlantic to Canada on leaving her childhood home in the land of hills and heather. She, too, has departed this life. In the family of this worthy couple were eight children: Will, who has departed this life; James and Ben, who are residents of Vancouver, British Columbia; George, of this review; Abe, also living at Vancouver; M. H., who is located at Searcy, Arkansas; Maria, the wife of A. C. McCall of Grand Rapids, Michigan; and Jesse, deceased.

George A. Greer, spending his youthful days under the parental roof, pursued his education in the schools of London, Ontario, and starting out in the business world he learned telegraphy, becoming an operator on the Canadian Pacific Railroad. Thus he was employed until he left Canada and removed to White county, Arkansas, turning his attention to stock raising near Searcy, and also becoming identified with the lumber trade in that city. There he continued until 1905, when he removed to Des Arc and here began operating a sawmill, of which he continued proprietor until 1914, when he sold the mill. He had also engaged in steamboating during this period and he likewise owned a timber boat, which he operated for some time, but sold this vessel in 1917. He further extended the scope of his activities by entering the mercantile field at Des Arc as a stockholder in a store. In 1918 he organized the First National Bank, of which the present officers are: George A. Greer, president; Mr. Sparks, vice president; J. W. Watson, second vice president; W. M. McQueen, cashier; and C. C. Tunstall, assistant cashier. The bank is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars and has a surplus of seven thousand dollars. Success has attended the institution from the beginning. In all that he undertakes Mr. Greer displays sound judgment and keen sagacity. He readily discriminates between the essential and the non-essential and throughout his business life seems easily to merge unrelated elements and interests into a harmonious and unified whole.

Mr. Greer was united in marriage to Miss Mary Clay Neal, a native of Searcy. Their children are: James Grant and Neal DeWoody Greer. Fraternally Mr. Greer is a Mason and the beneficent spirit of the craft finds exemplification in his career. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal church and he is serving as vestryman and as senior warden. He takes a deep interest in all that pertains to the work of the church and to the moral progress of the community and his aid and influence are ever found on the side of right, progress, truth and reform. During the World war he was active in work for the government and sold about eighty per cent of the Liberty bonds which were disposed of in the northern part of Prairie county. He is at all times a public-spirited citizen and one whose labors have been an effective force for good in his community, contributing to the material, intellectual, social and moral welfare of Des Arc and of Prairie county.

THOMAS M. FLETCHER, M. D.

With a marked sense of conscientious obligation, Dr. Thomas M. Fletcher devotes his attention to medical and surgical practice at Mena and his ability has won for him a liberal patronage. A native son of Arkansas, he was born in Pulaski county, November 14, 1867, his parents being H. L. and Elizabeth (Smith) Fletcher. The family has long been represented in this state. The grandfather, Thomas Fletcher, was one of the early sheriffs of Pulaski county and served as United States marshal under President Cleveland for the east district of Arkansas. Prior to the Civil war he owned many slaves and a large amount of land. His death occurred in 1900, when he had reached the age of eighty-five years. The maternal grandfather of Dr. Fletcher was David M. Smith, who was born in Georgia and located in the southern part of Arkansas in pioneer times, there devoting his life to merchandising and to farming. H. L. Fletcher was born in Pulaski county, Arkansas, September 4, 1844, and his life record covers the intervening period to the 10th of January, 1912. He removed from the farm to Little Rock and devoted his attention to the operation of a cotton plantation on the Arkansas river. During the conflict between the north and the south he served in Woodruff's Battery, being on duty throughout the period of the Civil war. His political allegiance was always given to the democratic party. His wife, who was born in Georgia, January 31, 1848, died in 1896 in the faith of the Baptist church, of which she had long been a devoted member. They were parents of two children: Thomas M.; and Mrs. T. L. Daniels, whose husband is a farmer of Little Rock.

Dr. Fletcher pursued his early education in the public schools of Little Rock and afterward was graduated from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, with the class of 1890. This constituted, however, only an initial step to preparation for other professional labor and he was graduated from the medical department of the State University at Little Rock with the class of 1894. He has since taken postgraduate work in New Orleans, Chicago and Philadelphia and has at all times kept in touch with modern scientific research and investigation along the lines of medical and surgical practice. He entered upon the work of the profession at Paris, Arkansas, where he remained until 1913 and then removed to Mena. He had a very large practice at Paris but this necessitated much riding and in order to avoid this he took up his abode in Mena, where he has become established as a leading physician and surgeon, his practice being very extensive and of an important character.

In 1893 Dr. Fletcher was married to Miss Helen Wehr, a native of Little Rock and a daughter of George Wehr, who was one of the pioneer settlers of that city. He was born in Germany, came to America in early life and served in the Civil war. By trade he was a saddler. To Dr. and Mrs. Fletcher have been born four children: Albert L., who is now a priest in Little Rock; George S., who was studying for the priesthood in the North American College at Rome and died in that city January 3, 1922; Phillip, who was drowned August 8, 1918; and Marie, who is being educated in the St. Joseph Academy at Mena and is now at home.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Catholic church and Dr. Fletcher belongs to the Catholic Knights of America and also to the Royal Arcanum. In politics he is a democrat and has served as president of the board of health in Mena. He devotes his entire time to medical practice, however, and has received special training on diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, doing considerable work along the line of his specialty. He continues, however, in general practice and his professional activities make onerous and constant demands upon his time and energy. Through his ability and efforts he has worked his way steadily upward and is now one of the prosperous citizens of Polk county.

SAMUEL WESLEY FORDYCE.

That the sources of our power lie within ourselves is demonstrated in the career of Samuel Wesley Fordyce, the measure of whose greatness is seen in thousands of miles of railroad, in banks and business enterprises which he established, in public activities which he instituted and political policies which he formulated. His notably broad vision found expression in practical effort for the embodiment and adoption of high ideals in connection with the development and upbuilding of the country. His breadth of view not only saw possibilities for his own advancement but for the country's development as well, and his lofty patriotism prompted him to utilize the latter as quickly and as effectively as the former. Mastering the lessons of life day by day, his postgraduate work in the school of experience at length placed him with the men of eminent learning and ability and it was said that he was the counselor of every president from Lincoln down to the time of his death, which occurred on the 3rd of August, 1919, when he had reached the age of seventy-nine years. The great majority of men of his age and of his wealth would have retired from business long years before, but he remained an active factor in the world's work to the end, his counsel and advice being continuously sought in matters of far-reaching importance.

Samuel W. Fordyce was a native son of Ohio, his birth having occurred in Guernsey county on the 7th of February, 1840, his parents being John and Mary Ann (Houseman) Fordyce, both natives of Pennsylvania. He was descended from Scotch and Dutch ancestry, the Fordyce family being founded in America by his grandfather, Samuel Fordyce, who was born in Armoy, Antrim, Ulster, Ireland, in 1735 and, leaving the Emerald isle, established his home in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in 1775. There he died in 1824. The maternal grandfather, emigrating from Holland, took up his abode in the Keystone state only a little later.

Samuel W. Fordyce was one of a family of ten children. His early youth did not foreshadow his future greatness, for his boyhood was spent in the usual manner of the lads of the period, devoted to the acquirement of a common school education. He was, however, ambitious to advance his knowledge and eagerly embraced the opportunities offered in that direction. After leaving the public schools he attended Madison College at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and subsequently became a student in the North Illinois University at Henry, Illinois. He then returned home and when twenty years of age first became connected with railway interests, in which limitless field of labor he was destined to win distinction and greatness. His original position, however, was a humble one, being that of station agent on the Central Ohio Railroad, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio system. With the outbreak of the Civil war, all business and personal considerations were put aside and he joined the Union army as a member of the First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry. While he enlisted as a private, he was soon made second lieutenant and later was advanced to the rank of first lieutenant of Company B, First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry. His next promotion in 1863 placed him in command of Company H and a few months afterward he was made assistant inspector general of cavalry in the Army of the Cumberland and assigned to the Second Cavalry Division under the command of General George Crook. He participated in the battles of Murfreesboro and Chickamauga under General Rosecrans, and under General Buell took part in the battles of Shiloh and Perryville, Kentucky, together with other engagements of minor importance. His courage and valor were manifest in the fact that he was always in the thickest of the fight, being three times wounded and three times captured by the enemy, though he never served a day's imprisonment, having the good fortune to be recaptured twice, while once he succeeded in making his escape.

While a northern man, Mr. Fordyce, following the close of the war, sought the business opportunities of the south and was long a leading and influential factor in that section of the country. Such were his personal qualities and characteristics that he commanded the respect and confidence of all wherever he went and left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the history of the various communities in which he resided. He became one of the organizers of the banking house of Fordyce & Rison at Huntsville, Alabama, and while there residing played a most important part in the development and upbuilding of the northern section of that state. He was president of the First Agricultural Fair and Mechanical Association at Huntsville and he also assisted in financing the North & South Alabama Railway from Decatur to Montgomery, Alabama, now a part of the Louisville & Nashville system.

When Mr. Fordyce's health became impaired through close confinement he removed to Arkansas in January, 1876, establishing his home in the mountains near Hot Springs. He at once recognized the value of that locality as a health resort and that Hot Springs today is a health city of world-wide reputation is due perhaps more to the influence and efforts of Mr. Fordyce than any other individual. He was instrumental in securing the passage of a bill in the United States congress settling the matter of title to four sections of land which had been in dispute for sixty years. It was also through his influence that General John A. Logan, then United States senator, introduced the bill for the erection of the finely equipped Army and Navy Hospital on the government reservation at Hot Springs. His financial support was back of the building of the leading hotels and opera house of Hot Springs, of the establishment of the water, gas and electric light works, of the building of the street railway system and the promotion of other public enterprises. Both Dallas and Denison, Texas, too, benefited greatly by his efforts, for he financed and had constructed the first cotton compress in those two cities.

It would be impossible for a man of Mr. Fordyce's ability not to visualize the opportunities of the southwest. He felt that this great section of the country must eventually become a thickly settled district whose resources would be utilized by thousands and thousands, and he knew that the first step in this direction must be the building of railroads. The greater part of the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company was built under the management of Mr. Fordyce, and though discouraging circumstances were continuously to be met, he persevered for sixteen years in the construction and development of this road. He was also vice president and treasurer of the Texas & St. Louis Railway for three years ending in April, 1885, and he then served as receiver for the road until May, 1886. With the reorganization under the name of the St. Louis, Arkansas & Texas Railway, he served as president from 1886 until 1889. Again he acted as receiver of the road for a year, and with the reorganization under the name of the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company, he served as president from 1890 until 1898. In 1899 his superior ability in connection with railway management and control led to his appointment as receiver of the Kansas City, Pittsburgh & Gulf Railway and he became president of the road in 1900 under its reorganized title of the Kansas City Southern Railway. The years 1900 and 1901 were largely devoted by him to the construction of the Little Rock, Hot Springs & Western Railway and he subsequently aided in the building and financing of the St. Louis Valley line, now a part of the Missouri Pacific system. His other activities included cooperation in the building and financing of lines now operated by the St. Louis & San Francisco system, also the Missouri, Oklahoma & Gulf Railroad, the Illinois, Indiana & Minnesota Railroad, the Appalachicola & Northern Railroad in Florida, the St. Louis & El Reno Railroad in Oklahoma, the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico in Texas, besides being one of the underwriters of the Fort Worth & Denver, now a part of the Colorado Southern system. In all it is estimated that Mr. Fordyce built, financed or assisted in financing at least twenty-four thousand miles of railway. His ability as an executive was so generally recognized by his associates that while he was president of the St. Louis Southwestern, Mr. Fordyce was chosen by the unanimous vote of all the lines comprised in the Southwestern Traffic Association as chairman of its executive board. This association represented practically the entire movement of traffic from the Atlantic seaboard to all points west of the Mississippi, to California and old Mexico, and so wisely did Mr. Fordyce discharge the duties of the important office that on his retirement in 1898 he was presented with a set of resolutions, engrossed on parchment, approving the uniform fairness of his rulings. This confidence was not confined to his associates alone but was shared by his subordinates and employes, as is evidenced by the fact that, while strikes prevailed on nearly all other railroads, the men under Mr. Fordyce relied on him to protect their rights and never once found occasion for striking.

Extensive and important as were the interests of Mr. Fordyce in the matter of railroad building and management, he nevertheless found time for cooperation with many other business interests and in fact was the promoter of various projects which were of greatest benefit in the development and upbuilding of the Mississippi valley and the southwest. He was one of the organizers and directors of the St. Louis Union Trust Company and represented the directorate of the Laclede Light & Power Company of St. Louis and the Jefferson Hotel Company. He was vice president of the Arlington & New York Hotel Companies of Hot Springs, Arkansas, was president of the Hot Springs Water, Gas and Electric Light Companies and of the Hot Springs Electric Street Railway Company. He was a director of the Illinois, Indiana & Minnesota Railroad, of the Appalachicola & Northern, the Kansas City Southern, the Little Rock & Hot Springs Western and was chairman of the executive committee of the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico; a director of the American Rio Grande Land & Irrigation Company of Texas, operating the largest irrigation canal system in the United States; and president of the Houston Oil Company.

Mr. Fordyce was also a most potent factor in shaping political history. Although a soldier of the Union army in the Civil war, he was a democrat in his political views and took active part in reconstruction work in the south, following the close of hostilities between the two sections of the country. He was also a member of the state committee in 1874, when, for the first time after the war, the entire democratic ticket was elected in Alabama. His influence in politics in Arkansas was perhaps even greater. He acted as a delegate to the state convention of 1880, when a nominee for governor was chosen, and was a delegate to the state judicial convention of 1884. He was a member of the democratic national committee of Arkansas from 1884 unti 1888 and a delegate to the national democratic convention of 1884. He was made a member of the committee that notified Cleveland and Hendricks of their nomination for the offices of president and vice president of the United States and in 1892 was delegate at large to the democratic national convention, in which he was made chairman of the committee on permanent organization. He declined to act as a delegate to the democratic national convention of 1896 and called a meeting of the sound-money democrats at Little Rock and headed a delegation to the Indianapolis gold standard convention, where he acted as a member of the platform committee. He was often solicited to become a candidate for governor and to accept the nomination for United States senatorship, but he consistently declined, as it was no part of his program to fill political offices, feeling that he could do a greater service to his country in the development of its natural resources and the upbuilding of its industrial, commercial and financial greatness. He enjoyed the fullest confidence of political leaders of both parties and, by reason of his wide knowledge of conditions, President Hayes sought his advice concerning the nomination of a cabinet member who would be acceptable to the people of the south. Mr. Fordyce recommended John Hancock, then congressman from Texas, who, however, declined the honor, much to his subsequent regret. Later President Harrison sought his opinion concerning appointment of a member of his cabinet and Mr. Fordyce named General John W. Noble, who was afterward made secretary of the interior. Mr. Fordyce enjoyed the personal friendship and confidence of President McKinley who would have made him ambassador to Russia, but he declined the proffered honor. Mr. Fordyce and President McKinley had served in the army together. He was a warm friend of General Grant, in which connection it was told of him that at Pittsburg Landing, General Grant was seated on a horse which became unruly and threw him. Mr. Fordyce, then serving as lieutenant, recaptured the horse and assisted the commander to remount. Several years later, when in Washington, he met the then chief executive on the street and saluted him. President Grant returned the salute, saying: "I remember you well. You helped me manage my horse at Pittsburg Landing." Mr. Fordyce was equally widely known among the distinguished captains of industry, leaders of finance and others prominent in connection with the history of the country and he stood as a man among men, honored by all.

It was in Huntsville, Alabama, during his residence there immediately following the close of the Civil war, that Mr. Fordyce formed the acquaintance of Susan E. Chadick, a daughter of the Rev. William D. Chadick of that place, who entered the Confederate army as a chaplain and when discharged was colonel of his regiment. The marriage of Mr. Fordyce and Miss Chadick was celebrated on the 1st of May, 1866. They became the parents of two daughters and three sons, and four of the family are living. Jane is the wife of Colonel D. S. Stanley of the quartermaster general's department, U. S. A. John, a prominent engineer of Hot Springs, Arkansas, was superintendent and engineer of construction work at Camp Pike, Arkansas, in the World war, while later he was promoted to the rank of major and still later lieutenant colonel, U. S. A. He was sent to St. Louis as chief engineer to the railroad administration for special service in connection with the Mississippi River and Warrior River Railroad Transportation. William C. is a banker and financier, and S. W. Fordyce, Jr., is a member of the St. Louis bar.

Mr. Fordyce was at one time commander of the Missouri Commandery of the Loyal Legion of America and he was a member of the St. Louis, University, Bellerive and Noonday Clubs of St. Louis. Perhaps no better indication of his high standing and of the honor everywhere entertained for him can be given than in the statement that his honorary pallbearers embraced some of the most distinguished and prominent men of St. Louis and elsewhere, including: John J. O'Fallon, Wells H. Blodgett, William H. Lee, John F. Lee, B. F. Edwards, Frederick W. Lehmann, Captain W. R. Hodges, Lyman T. Hay, Festus J. Wade, Dr. D. S. H. Smith, N. A. McMillan, R. McKittrick Jones, Edwards Whitaker, Murray Carleton, Walker Hill, Sam Lazarus, B. F. Bush, J. M. Herbert, Jackson Johnson, Paul Brown, William McChesney, Clarence H. Howard, Rolla Wells, James E. Allison, Lawrence Pierce, Julius S. Walsh, Albert T. Perkins, Harry B. Hawes, Paul W. Brown, Frank Carter, John G. Lonsdale and Edward Pryor. One of the St. Louis papers said editorially of Mr. Fordyce: "But it was as an empire builder, a farsighted financier and an individual with infectious enthusiasm that he gained his greatest prominence. He was famous as a steadfast friend and he found friends in all classes of society and treated them in his own inimitable way, whether they happened to be presidents, cabinet officers, renowned bankers or some companion of his youth who had become entangled in the meshes of the law. Some of his reminiscences recently appearing in America at Work, a St. Louis periodical, are self-revelatory beyond the run of recollections. Franklin himself was never franker than Colonel Fordyce in relating personal experiences. He had such a zest in life and such a confidence in his own integrity as to make his autobiography real. Long ago he reached the age at which men of his manifold investments usually retire, but he kept in the harness because he enjoyed his work and because his associates were reluctant to lose his counsel and the benefit of his stimulating personality. Although he had done much and his possessions were vast, Colonel Fordyce was most appreciated for what he was, an unspoiled man among men." He was indeed one who never lost the human touch and to the end of his days he judged men not by wealth but by their worth. He placed no false values on life, his broad vision enabling him to put a correct estimate on all those things which go to make up life activities. He attempted important things and accomplished them, and the progress of the world was promoted thereby. Many decades will have passed ere the influence of Samuel W. Fordyce and his work will cease to be felt as a potent force for good in the world's work.

Upon the death of Colonel Fordyce the following resolutions were passed by the Kansas City Southern Railway Company:

WHEREAS, Colonel Samuel W. Fordyce has long been a member of the board of directors of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, at all times serving the interests committed to him with ability and foresight, prudence and fidelity, and

WHEREAS, affable in manner, equable in temper, effervescent in humor, gentle in sympathy, circumspect in judgment, and conciliatory in method, he won the regard of many, challenged the admiration of friends and forestalled the criticism of adversaries; and

WHEREAS, in time of national peril, he relinquished civil pursuits, became a soldier, and acquitted himself with honor; and

WHEREAS, clear in his vision, he penetrated the future; tireless in his energy, he attempted much; indomitable in his courage, he surmounted obstacles; by constructive genius and administrative skill, he achieved material prosperity and contributed in a conspicuous degree to the wellbeing of a wide area; and

WHEREAS, he departed life at Atlantic City, New Jersey, on the afternoon of August third, nineteen hundred and nineteen, in the eightieth year of his age;

RESOLVED, that the members of this board, in sorrow for the death of Samuel W. Fordyce, and moved by sympathy towards the bereaved, record the high esteem in which he was held, and pay tribute of respect to his memory; and

RESOLVED, that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the board, and that a copy thereof be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

When he died one of the local papers said of him: "Colonel Fordyce was a democrat and although he never sought public office, he was one of the most considerable figures in the politics of the day. Living in the south in the reconstruction days, a former soldier of the north affiliated with the south through ties of marriage, business residence and actively engaged in the upbuilding of the south, he was a valuable factor in the adjustment. Notwithstanding his politics, both Presidents Hayes and Harrison consulted him on the personnel of their cabinets and both accepted his suggestions. He was a boyhood friend of President McKinley, who frequently called on him for advice. Colonel Fordyce probably had a greater fund of interesting and unwritten history of the United States, especially the political history, than any other resident of the state. His home in Hot Springs was headquarters for many prominent Federal officials who came to the springs from all over the United States. Senator Vest of Missouri, one of the most picturesque characters of the upper house of congress, was one of his most intimate friends. Almost to the day of his death he kept up his interest in state and national affairs and his keen insight into political affairs never failed him. A man of broad culture, Colonel Fordyce was also a lover of the outdoors, a keen sportsman. His declining years were spent at his home in the suburbs of Hot Springs, 'The Cabin,' situated in a broad tract of virgin forest land carefully landscaped with the view of preserving the natural beauty of the grounds. The Cabin, a luxurious lodge of logs and stone, fitting harmoniously into the scene, bore on its walls many trophies of the chase and an interesting collection of weapons and equipment for the hunt."

The Gazette said editorially: "The whole state will be deeply sensible of the loss it has sustained in the death of Samuel Wesley Fordyce. Here was one of the empire builders, one of the men whose vision, energy and ability have made America. Arkansas was fortunate to be the field of some of his most useful labors. Here he left enduring monuments in railroads and other enterprises. And Arkansas was fortunate to be his home. He aided with generous hand all movements for the good of the state. Colonel Fordyce was an officer in the Union army, but after the Civil war he made his home in the south and powerfully contributed to the upbuilding of the country below the Mason and Dixon line. The interests of the people among whom he had come to live he made his own and when there were problems to be dealt with his advice was sought as one who was wise in counsel and sincere in his convictions. Not only was Colonel Fordyce a captain of industry, but as a man he was one of the rarest souls that ever lived. In his long span of years he had seen unfold the national drama that opened with the scenes which ushered in the great war between the north and the south. He had heard Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas debate the great issues of their day. He had known Ulysses S. Grant and other military leaders. William McKinley had been a friend of his young manhood and army companion. He had been personally acquainted with many of the nation's other famous men. With the aid of a marvelous memory Colonel Fordyce made national history a thing of absorbing interest. He illuminated its pages with pictures. The characters of the past, who to most people are merely great names, he touched with life so that they seemed to move before his hearers' eyes and speak into their ears. To hear him tell of other days was to get a new and more intimate acquaintance with some of the famous Americans of the last half century. For the services that he rendered in times that demanded the utmost in patriotism, and for the works that were reared by his hands, his country is in the debt of Samuel Wesley Fordyce. And humanity is his debtor for the charity, the hearty kindliness and genuine sympathy that marked his relations with his fellowman."

J. L. GOODBAR.

J. L. Goodbar, filling the position of postmaster at Charleston, where he is also engaged in the real estate and insurance business, was born in Tennessee in August, 1862, and is a son of Jesse F. and Alice C. (Gardenhire) Goodbar, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. They removed to Lonoke, Arkansas, in 1874 and the family has since been represented in this state. The grandfather in the paternal line was Joseph Goodbar, a native of Virginia, who removed to Tennessee at an early period in the settlement of that section of the country and was there engaged in business as a planter. The maternal grandfather, E. L. Gardenhire, was one of the supreme court judges of Tennessee at the time of his death. Following his removal to Lonoke, Arkansas, Jesse F. Goodbar devoted his attention to merchandising for a number of years and there died. His widow survives and now makes her home with her son, J. L. Both were members of the Christian church and Mr. Goodbar gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. Fraternally he was connected with the Knights of Pythias. He served as a major in the Confederate army during the four years' period of the war and he was at all times loyal to his honest convictions. To him and his wife were born five children: J. L.; F. M., a contractor, living at Lonoke; E. L., who is proprietor of a garage in Louisiana; LaFayette, who is engaged in merchandising in San Francisco, California; and Alice, the wife of Dr. R. M. Southard, a retired physician of Fort Smith.

J. L. Goodbar obtained his education in the schools of Tennessee and of Lonoke, Arkansas, and started out in the business world as a traveling salesman. He remained upon the road for twenty-seven years and was a most popular "knight of the grip." His genial manner, social disposition and business capability won him friends wherever he went and he built up a large trade for the houses which he represented. Since retiring from the road he has engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Charleston, where he opened an office in 1908. Through the intervening period he has gained a large clientage and has negotiated many important realty transfers, also annually writing a large amount of insurance.

In 1883 Mr. Goodbar was united in marriage to Miss Katie DePass, a native of Tennessee, and they became the parents of four children: Joe, who is a merchant of Boston, Massachusetts; Jessie, who is teaching school at Heavener, Oklahoma; Leota, who is with her brother in Boston; and Katie, also a teacher in Heavener. The wife and mother was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and died in that faith in 1910. In 1913 Mr. Goodbar was again married, his second union being with Clara Cole, a native of Canada. They are consistent members of the Baptist church and enjoy the high respect of all who know them. Mr. Goodbar belongs to the Knights of Pythias and is a past chancellor commander in the order and has been honored with the office of grand chancellor commander of the state. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and he has long been an active worker in its ranks. He served for two terms as mayor of Charleston, giving to the city a businesslike and progressive administration and he is now filling the office of postmaster for the second term, dividing his time between the duties of this position and his real estate and insurance business. He owns the nice brick building in which the post office is now located, while the other store building is occupied as a theatre. He is a man of enterprise and energy, who carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes and his determination and force of character have made for him the success which is now his.

ROBERT PARKER.

An alert and enterprising business man of Plumerville is Robert Parker, manager of the Farmers Union Warehouse and Gin and of the Rose City Cotton Oil Milling Company. He was born in Bainbridge, Decatur county, Georgia, on the 12th of May, 1869, a son of Robert and Mary (Blanchet) Parker, both natives of that state. Little is known of his paternal grandparents, for his father was reared by an uncle and remained with him until reaching the age of twelve years. At an early age he became efficient in the use of the bow and arrow and he took an active part in driving the Indians out of Florida and Georgia and into Oklahoma. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army as private and served for the most of the time under General Lee in Georgia, Florida and South Carolina. He was in many of the most important battles of that war, including Chattanooga and Shiloh. At the close of the war he returned to Georgia and resumed his farming. He owned some twenty-four hundred acres and won substantial success as a general farmer and stock raiser. He died in 1894, at the age of seventy-six years and his wife died in 1914, when eighty-four years of age. Sixteen children were born to their union, nine of whom are living. A brother, Riley, is engaged in farming near Plumerville. The family was reared in the faith of the Primitive Baptist church and Mr. Parker always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party.

In the acquirement of an education Robert Parker attended school in the old log schoolhouses of Georgia, walking a distance of from three to five miles. He remained on the home farm until he became of age, when he came to Arkansas and, locating in Plumerville in 1889, obtained a position in his brother's store. For three years he was active in that connection and then, deciding to enter into business on his own account, he bought the Racket Store, which he conducted successfully for some time. In 1898 he sold out his interests in the mercantile business and clerked in the store of A. D. Malone until 1904. In that year he started farming in Conway county and he still maintains his agricultural interests, although in 1909 he became manager of the Farmers Union Warehouse and Gin and in 1915 accepted a similar position with the Rose City Cotton Oil Milling Company. Mr. Parker's life has been one of continuous activity and he is now tireless in his devotion to his duties as manager of two of the representative business enterprises of Plumerville and to the cultivation of his ninety acres of land in Conway county.

Mr. Parker was united in marriage to Miss Ida Dacus, a native of Johnson county, and to their union ten children were born, nine of whom are living: The eldest son, Robert E., now farming in Miller county, enlisted from Conway county for service in the World war and after receiving his training at Camp Beauregard he was sent to France, where he was in active service until the signing of the armistice ended hostilities; Eugene Parker, likewise a veteran of the World war, enlisted from Missouri in the Aviation Corps and was sent to the Great Lakes for his training. While there he was taken ill and was confined to the hospital. He is now living in Plumerville and is a machinist with a road construction company; at the age of seventeen years James G. joined the regular army and was stationed in the Philippine islands for four years. In 1918 he went to France, where he was gassed, but served until the close of the war. He is a mechanic and has a patent on an automobile tire; the fourth member of the Parker family, Mary H., is the wife of C. C. Fleming, an oil man of Texas; Thelma B. is the wife of Aubrey Wilder of Conway, where he is assistant engineer of road construction; Mae married Orville Ford, assistant postmaster of Konawa, Oklahoma; and Alden Brooks, Helen Ruth and Dacus are attending the schools of Plumerville. Raymond died in infancy. In 1911, at the age of forty-one years, Mrs. Parker's demise occurred and her death came as a severe shock to her many friends. She was an active member of the Missionary Baptist church and prominent in the club and social circles of the city. Some time afterward Mr. Parker was again wedded, taking Miss Lena Bell Garrett for his wife. She is a native of Arkansas. To the second union six children have been born, all residing at home: Paul, Emma Lee, Elizabeth, Woodrow, Bobie Fay and Martha Voncile. Mrs. Parker is a woman of charming personality and is considered by her many friends a model mother and housewife.

The family is affiliated with the Missionary Baptist church and since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Parker has given his stanch support to the democratic party. Fraternally he is a Mason, having membership in Lodge No. 153, and by way of the Scottish Rite he has become a member of the Albert Pike Consistory. He is likewise a Knight of Pythias and a Woodman of the World, serving in the latter organization as council commander for ten years. Mr. Parker has won an enviable position among the business men of the community, not only by reason of the success he has attained but also owing to the straightforward and reliable methods he has ever followed in promoting his business interests.

HON. JOHN H. HAMITER.

That mind is indeed dull that does not respond to John H. Hamiter in the clearness of his reasoning, the play of his fancy, the logic of his deduction as he stands before judge or jury presenting with marked ability the salient features of the case before the court. He has been a representative of the bar at Little Rock for twenty-eight years and at various periods during this time has also filled public office, to which he has been called by his fellow townsmen, who have thus manifested their recognition of his ability and his fidelity to the public welfare.

Arkansas numbers Mr. Hamiter among her native sons. He was born at Walnut Hills in 1865, his father being Colonel J. H. Hamiter, who served during the Civil war and who has departed this life.

The youthful days of John H. Hamiter passed without particular incidents. His time was largely given to the acquirement of a public school education and in 1898 he began preparation for the bar as a student in the law office of Colonel James M. Montgomery and Henry Moore of Texarkana. He applied himself with diligence to the task assigned him and made steady progress toward the desired goal, being admitted to the bar at Washington, Hempstead county, Arkansas, in 1890. The same year he opened a law office at New Lewisville, where he remained in practice for about a year and during that period, in 1891, was elected mayor of the town, this being the first political office to which he was called.

Little Rock has claimed Mr. Hamiter as a citizen since 1892 when he began practice in the courts of this district. Along with those qualities indispensable to the lawyer—a keen, rapid, logical mind, plus the business sense and the ready capacity for hard work—he brought to the starting point of his legal career in the capital city certain rare gifts, eloquence of language and a strong personality. He has won many a legal battle before the courts in the intervening years and at all times has invariably sought to present his arguments in the strong clear light of common reason and sound logical principle. The recognition of his ability on the part of his fellow townsmen led to his election to the office of prosecuting attorney of the sixth judicial district, comprising Pulaski and Perry counties, in 1900, and so excellent a record did he make in office that he was reelected in 1902. Further political honors awaited him, for in 1906 he was chosen to represent the sixth district in the state senate and served four years as a member of the state senate, giving the most thoughtful and earnest consideration to the many vital problems which came up for settlement during his connection with the general assembly. In many ways he left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the laws enacted while in the senate. He has ever been a stanch advocate of democratic principles and it was on the ticket of that party that he was called to the public positions which he has filled.

On the 22d of June, 1892, Mr. Hamiter was married to Miss May Little, daughter of Colonel R. A. Little, now deceased, who was president of the German National Bank of Little Rock and also was an extensive planter and cotton factor of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Hamiter have become the parents of one child, Robertelle.

Mr. Hamiter is a member of the State Bar and American Bar Associations, and in 1919 he became vice president of the Peoples Savings Bank of Little Rock, and is also a stockholder in the Union & Mercantile Trust Company. He is a member of the Little Rock Board of Commerce, and also a member of the Little Rock Cotton Exchange. Since the death of R. A. Little, Mr. Hamiter is serving as a trustee of the estate left by his father-in-law. Fraternally he is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and he and his wife are consistent followers of Methodist teachings, loyally supporting the church in which they hold membership and doing everything in their power to extend its influence, he having been a steward of the church for many years.

When Mr. Hamiter retired from the office of prosecuting attorney one of the local papers said of him: "Hon. J. H. Hamiter, late prosecuting attorney for this district, has resumed the practice of law in Little Rock. That while in office he did his duty fearlessly is shown by the fact that during his incumbency in office—four years—ninety per cent of the cases indicted resulted in convictions. As a citizen Mr. Hamiter is one of the most approachable men. As an official he added that dignity and honor to the office that will long be remembered over our entire state. He is an Arkansas born, reared and educated man. From the time he entered the public schools until he left the University of Arkansas, it was apparent to those who came into contact with him that there was a future before him fraught with the greatest possibilities. Entering politics soon after being admitted to the bar, he has waged a ceaseless war against his political adversaries, his convincing arguments and oratorical abilities readily swaying the people and bringing consternation and dismay to his republican opponents. His fairness in debate, the elimination of everything of a personal character from his arguments, his geniality and honesty, have won him the friendship and esteem of his bitterest foes and he had the happy consciousness of realizing at the end of a political contest that he had far more friends than when that contest began, and that those friends were numbered among both political parties. In 1894 Mr. Hamiter published a book entitled, The Criminal Laws of Arkansas. It has become the leading textbook on this subject in our state, is consulted daily, and a law library that does not possess one is the exception and not the rule. In closing, the Times is aware of the fact that there is scarcely a man in the state who has not come into personal contact with John H. Hamiter. Everybody knows him. Nearly everybody likes him. He has a strong personality that attracts and holds. His hand is always outstretched to grasp that of a friend; his purse always open to the needy. The future of John Hamiter is yet to be written." In the years which have intervened since the above was written, Mr. Hamiter has made steady progress in his chosen calling. He is yet a man in the prime of life, strong in his ability to plan and perform, strong in his honor and his good name. His course has at all times justified the faith and confidence reposed in him by those who have known him and the circle of his friendship has constantly extended as the circle of his acquaintanceship has broadened.

His labors have at all times been very resultant and in the conduct of his business affairs he has never failed to reach his objective. Williams. At length the subject of this review withdrew from the firm and engaged in business for himself, as did his brother Leon, each developing a business of extensive proportions. John B. Williams has a mammoth barn and the opportunities there offered for the purchase of horses and mules attract buyers from all over this section of the country. A unique and interesting feature of the barn is the mottoes and quaint sayings which are painted all over the walls on the interior, meeting the eyes everywhere, and they contain many practical truths, a great number of these being original with the owner. They give the keynote to the owner's philosophy of life, which is teeming with optimism and good cheer. In fact, it has been said that Mr. Williams fairly radiates happiness and cheer and is a most likable man, highly esteemed throughout the community. He handles about thirty-five hundred head of horses and mules each year, the business having grown to very gratifying proportions. He also organized the Fort Smith Sprinkling Company fourteen years ago and has the contract for sprinkling the streets of the city. This business adds materially to his income.

EARL C. BLANSETT.

Earl C. Blansett, a native son of Benton county and a member of an honored pioneer family of Arkansas, is numbered among the younger representatives of the Rogers bar and is steadily forging to the front in his profession, having already built up a good clientele. He was born in Garfield, Arkansas, June 25, 1885, a son of John Hardin and Margaret A. (Jackson) Blansett, also natives of Benton county, the father's birth having occurred in Garfield. They were married in this county and for a number of years the father engaged in farming and general merchandising at Garfield, but the parents are now residing on a farm situated a mile north of Rogers. The maternal grandfather, Dawson Jackson, was a native of Kentucky and likewise became a pioneer of Benton county, Arkansas, his demise occurring at Garfield. He also served in the Civil war and was a relative of "Stonewall" Jackson, the noted Confederate general. To John H. and Margaret A. (Jackson) Blansett were born three children, namely: Archibald Luther, who resides on a farm near Garfield, Arkansas; Earl C., of this review; and Beulah Belle, who married Bryce Woods. Hs is a son of J. Newton Woods and is also a member of a pioneer family of this state, operating a farm in Benton county which was entered by his great-grandfather.

In the acquirement of an education Earl C. Blansett attended the grammar and high schools of Garfield, Arkansas, after which he entered a law school at St. Louis, Missouri, from which he was graduated in 1908. Coming to Rogers, he here opened an office and has already firmly established himself in public regard as an able lawyer. He is attorney for the American National Bank and his clientele is steadily growing, for he is well versed in the principles of jurisprudence, prepares his cases with great thoroughness and care and the ability with which he presents his cause has won for him many favorable verdicts. He is the owner of a valuable and productive farm in Benton county and also has other interests, but his time and attention are concentrated upon his law business.

Mr. Blansett gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and he has been called to public office, serving for four years as deputy prosecuting attorney. His fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is an earnest and discriminating student of his profession, in which he is making continuous advancement, and his ability, energy and industry are carrying him steadily forward toward the goal of success.

CHARLES N. RIX.

Honored and respected by all, no man occupies a more enviable position in the business and financial circles of Hot Springs than does Charles N. Rix, the president of the Arkansas National Bank. His standing is not due alone to the success he has achieved but also to the straightforward business methods which he has ever followed, and his course constitutes an example that is well worthy of emulation. Mr. Rix is now in the seventy-ninth year of his age yet remains an active factor in the world's work.

He was born in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, May 28, 1843, and was reared on a farm in that state with the usual experiences of the farm bred boy of that early pioneer period. He pursued his preliminary education in a little log schoolhouse, to which he walked a mile, and the school was conducted on the subscription plan. He afterward attended a select boarding school in Kalamazoo, Michigan, and at length he was graduated from the high school at Dowagiac, Michigan. His father was sheriff of Kalamazoo county for two terms. The son was quite interested in mechanics and when the father had a new house built upon the farm Charles N. Rix assisted in the work, rendering considerable aid in the construction of the building and thus gained valuable knowledge concerning carpentry. Subsequent to this time his father met with financial reverses and Charles N. Rix, being thrown upon his own resources, began working at the carpenter's trade, which he followed through the summer months, while in the winter season he attended the Dowagiac high school. He was still following the carpenter's trade in 1862 when one day the notion struck him that he would enlist for service in the then Civil war. His father had in the meantime removed to Kansas. Through the influence of his father and a friend of the latter, Charles N. Rix obtained a position as regimental quartermaster sergeant. He enlisted on the 21st of September, 1862, in the first Indian Regiment of Mounted Infantry, recruited and organized at Fort Scott, Kansas, and was on duty at various points in the Indian Territory, Texas, Missouri and southern Kansas, having won the rank of captain ere receiving his final discharge in July, 1865.

When his military duties were over Mr. Rix became paymaster's clerk in the United States government service, with which he continued for two years. During this period he saved his wages and with this money, added to his savings in the army, determined to venture out in business on his own account. Believing in the future of Kansas City, Missouri, he made his way there and purchased a fourth interest in the wholesale grocery and commission business of the former sutlers of his regiment. They supplied the freighters who were traveling westward with ox, mule and horse teams. This venture, however, proved a failure. The store was destroyed by fire and fire insurance policies having been violated by his partners, he lost the money which he had invested. In the meantime the paymaster under whom he had formerly worked in the government service had established a national bank at Topeka, Kansas, and there Mr. Rix joined him, becoming bookkeeper in the bank. Soon afterward he was made assistant cashier of the institution, later was promoted to the cashiership and was occupying the position of vice president at the time he severed his connection with the bank in 1879. He had previously visited Hot Springs for the benefit of his health and believed that there were great opportunities for the development of the city. Accordingly removing to Hot Springs in 1879, he became the organizer of the Hot Springs Bank & Safe Deposit Company, of which he became the directing head, serving as cashier and manager for some time, while since 1896 he has been the president. The business has been carried on uninterruptedly through all the intervening years, although the Hot Springs Bank & Safe Deposit Company was converted into the Arkansas National Bank in 1882, and it is under this name that Mr. Rix is now guiding and directing important banking interests in his official position. He has made this one of the strongest and most reliable moneyed concerns of the state, following always a safe, conservative policy that has carefully guarded the interests of depositors and stockholders. In addition to his banking affairs Mr. Rix is identified with the City Ice Company and is also the builder and owner of the new, magnificent Imperial Bath House and also of the Hot Springs Observatory Tower, which is a steel structure with elevator service that gives one a splendid view of the entire city and surrounding country for one hundred miles. It is visited by hundreds of those who annually come to Hot Springs for the benefit of their health and by other tourists as well.

In 1870 Mr. Rix was united in marriage to Miss Lucy E. Thomas of Topeka, Kansas, and they have become parents of two children: Fred Northrup, who was cashier of the Arkansas National Bank and died at the age of thirty-four years; and Lila Thankful, at home.

Mr. Rix is not a politician in the usually accepted sense of the term, declining many offers of positions of public service, but has wielded a wide influence in political matters throughout the state in the interests of the candidates who have received his support. He has served three times as chairman of the republican state convention, has been four times a delegate at large from the state to the national republican convention and has taken a deep interest in the vital questions and issues of the day.

In February, 1866, Mr. Rix was made a Mason and has ever been a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. In fact he is very prominent in Masonic circles and on the 13th of May, 1897, the honorary thirty-third degree was conferred upon him at Little Rock by special work. He has been the head of all the different Masonic grand bodies of the state with the exception of the Grand Lodge, F. & A. M., being past most illustrious grand master of the grand council of Royal and Select Masters; past grand high priest of the grand chapter of Royal Arch Masons and past grand commander of the grand commandery of Knights Templar. He is at present deputy general grand high priest of the general grand chapter, Royal Arch Masons of the United States of America. He is likewise connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His Masonic associations have brought him a very wide acquaintance throughout the country, while his activity in business has made him one of the most prominent representatives of financial and commercial interests in Hot Springs and the state of Arkansas. He accomplishes what he undertakes. His plans are always well formulated and promptly executed and he displays a ready discrimination between the essential and the non-essential in all business affairs. Moreover, his activities have been of a character which have contributed to public progress and prosperity as well as to individual success.

A. L. KINNEY.

A. L. Kinney, an attorney of Carroll county, practicing in Green Forest and recognized as one of the leaders among the republican forces of Arkansas, was born in Camden, New York, June 6, 1865, and belongs to one of the old and well known families of the Empire state. His grandfather, Nathan Kinney, was also a native of New York and was a pioneer in the western section of the state, where he assisted in raising the first frame house in Syracuse. He was at one time offered forty acres of land there in exchange for a cow but refused the offer. His son, Harvey Kinney, father of A. L. Kinney, was also born in the Empire state and having arrived at years of maturity there wedded Charlotte A. Lambie, a daughter of James Lambie, who was born in Scotland but in early boyhood became a resident of New York, where he followed the occupation of farming, making his home at Camden, New York, until called to his final rest. His daughter, Charlotte, was born in that state and following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kinney remained in New York until 1877, when they removed westward to Michigan, where they remained for a decade. In 1887 they came to Arkansas and Mr. Kinney was for many years a respected resident of Green Forest, where he departed this life in 1913. His widow survives and still makes her home in that city. He was a cooper in early life and afterward took up the occupation of farming, which he followed throughout the remainder of his active business career. When the country needed his aid he put aside all personal and business considerations and served as a member of Company H, One Hundred and Forty-Ninth New York Infantry during the Civil war, being at the front for three years. He was captured at the battle of Chancellorsville and was incarcerated in Libby prison for fourteen days. To him and his wife were born seven children, five of whom are living: Mrs. Sarah Hamilton, a resident of Coldwater, Michigan; A. L. of this review; Mrs. Edith Wolcott, also living at Coldwater, Michigan; Wilbur J., a farmer, residing at Green Forest, Arkansas; and Mrs. Belvia Jones, of Green Forest. Both parents were consistent members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Kinney gave his political allegiance to the democratic party.

A. L. Kinney largely acquired his education in the northern Indiana University at Valparaiso, Indiana, and later engaged in teaching school for four years in Michigan. He then took up the study of law in an attorney's office in Michigan and following his preparation for the bar he practiced in Reading, Michigan, for a period of twenty-two years. Removing to the southwest in 1910 he opened a law office in Green Forest, where he has remained and through the intervening period has made steady progress in his profession. He has ever been most thorough and painstaking in the preparation of his cases and his ability as a lawyer before the courts and as a wise counselor is widely recognized.

In 1892 Mr. Kinney was united in marriage to Miss Clara B. Wolcott, who was born in Jackson county, Michigan. Mrs. Kinney is a member of the Christian Science Society. Mr. Kinney is a republican in politics and has long been an active worker in party ranks. He served as mayor of Green Forest for a period of four years and cleaned up the city while acting as its chief executive. He would give the "drunks" the privilege of attending church while working on the stone pile and each time the culprit attended church the sum of two dollars and a half was taken off his fine. Several men were converted in that way and most of them became church goers. This most efficacious punishment was mentioned in the press throughout the country at the time. In 1914 Mr. Kinney was the republican candidate for governor but could not overcome the strong democratic majority of Arkansas. His campaign addresses showed his thorough familiarity with the vital problems and issues before the country today. He is a deep thinker, a logical reasoner and a forceful speaker and he ever presents his cause with a clearness that leaves no doubt as to his personal convictions in the matter. No one ever questions the integrity of his position and men of all political parties esteem and honor him as a man and citizen.

J. O. LIVESAY.

J. O. Livesay, attorney at law, now engaged in practice in Foreman, is a native of the neighboring state of Missouri, his birth having occurred in Sligo, Dent county, September 23, 1871. He was reared at West Plains, acquiring a public school education and then taking up the study of law, for he had determined upon the practice of the profession as a life work. Admitted to the bar in 1894, he located for practice at West Plains, Missouri, and while there residing was elected to the office of prosecuting attorney in 1898. He continued to practice in West Plains until 1904, when he became identified with the law department of the Frisco Railroad and was stationed at Cape Girardeau, Missouri, there remaining until 1905. He was next transferred to Paris, Texas, by the railroad company, with which he continued until December, 1906, when he resigned his position and in 1907 removed to Foreman, Arkansas. Here he has engaged in the general practice of law through the intervening years and also acts as local attorney for the Frisco Railroad. He has given proof of his ability to find ready solution for intricate and involved legal problems and has been connected with much important litigation tried in the courts of the district. He handles his cases with precision and care, masters the evidence with thoroughness and is strong and logical in his reasoning.

It is a recognized fact that lawyers, more than any other class of men, have been most prominent in political connections and the reason for this is not hard to seek, as the qualities that prepare one for the successful practice of law enable the individual also to carefully analyze the various situations which may come up in connection with public office and to relate cause and effect in all matters of public concern. Mr. Livesay, whose fellow townsmen have recognized his fitness for positions of public honor and trust, has three times served as mayor of Foreman, giving to the city a businesslike and progressive administration. In 1912 he was a delegate to the republican national convention from the fourth congressional district and in the same year was a candidate for congress. In 1920 he was a delegate to the national convention of his party held in Chicago and was a candidate for justice of the supreme court on the republican ticket. He is unfaltering in his allegiance to the party because of his firm belief in its principles and it is characteristic of Mr. Livesay that he is most loyal to any cause which he espouses. The Masonic fraternity finds in him an exemplary representative of the high purposes upon which that order is based. He has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and is also a Noble of the Mystic Shrine.

G. DE MATT HENDERSON

Few lawyers have made a more lasting impression upon the bar of Arkansas, both for legal ability of a high order and for the individuality of a personal character which impresses itself upon a community, than has G. De Matt Henderson of Little Rock. The zeal with which he has devoted his energies to his profession, the careful regard evinced for the interests of his clients and an assiduous and unrelaxing attention to all the details of his cases have brought him a large business and made him very successful in its conduct.

Mr. Henderson comes to Little Rock from the neighboring state of Missouri, his birth having occurred upon a farm in Clay county, July 7, 1881, his parents being George Samuel and Nannie B. (Leach) Henderson. The father was born on a farm in Mason county, Kentucky, in 1847, and just prior to the Civil war removed to Clay county, Missouri, where he engaged in farming and in the lumber business. At the time of the Civil war he joined the Confederate army, enlisting in the Third Missouri Volunteers as a private and was in the army from the beginning until the close of hostilities. His political support was always given to the democratic party. He married Nannie B. Leach, who was born in Platte county, Missouri, in 1856, and who still survives her husband, Mr. Henderson having died on the 22d of July, 1893. They were the parents of two sons, the elder, Daniel H., who was born in 1878, dying on the 1st of February, 1921.

The younger son, G. De Matt Henderson, was six years old when his parents removed from Missouri to Little Rock and here he pursued his education in the graded and high schools, completing his course in 1898. His more advanced educational training was received in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1901 with the Bachelor of Arts degree, and then in preparation for his professional career he continued as a law student in the State University and won the LL. B. degree as a member of the class of 1903. He has since engaged in law practice in Little Rock and has made steady progress until his position is an enviable one. From the beginning his arguments have elicited warm commendation not only from his associates at the bar but also from the bench. He is a very able writer; his briefs always show wide research, careful thought and the best and strongest reasons which can be urged for his contention, presented in cogent and logical form and illustrated by a style unusually lucid and clear. For eighteen years he was associated with General E. B. Kinsworthy and until May, 1921, was a member of the law firm of Kinsworthy, Henderson & Kinsworthy, one of the most prominent firms in Little Rock. Aside from his professional connections Mr. Henderson is well known in business circles, for he is a director of the W. B. Worthen Company, one of the oldest banks in Little Rock, is also a director or the Ladies Building & Savings Association of this city, is one of the directors of the Terminal Warehouse Company and a director of the Monarch Mill & Lumber Company of Little Rock. The major part of his attention, however, has been given to his professional duties and kindred interests and for two years he was lecturer on medical jurisprudence at the medical department of the University of Arkansas and is also a member of the central examining board of the Arkansas supreme court.

On the 12th of October, 1904, in Little Rock, Mr. Henderson was married to Miss Vera Thomas, who was born in this city on October 7, 1881, a daughter of Benjamin and Laura (Reeve) Thomas, the former a native of Wales and the latter of Illinois. They lived for some time at Little Rock but both are now deceased. The father was a chaplain in the Union army during the Civil war. Mrs. Henderson was educated in the public schools of this city, where she has spent her entire life and where she has long occupied a prominent social position. By her marriage she has become the mother of two children, Betsy Glenn and Edgar De Matt.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Henderson are members of the First Christian church, in the work of which they take active and helpful interest. Mr. Henderson is serving as general superintendent of the Sunday school, is first vice president of the Arkansas Sunday School Association and is greatly interested in all branches of church work. In fact no good work done in the name of charity or religion seeks his aid in vain. He is a member of the board of directors of the City Hospital of Little Rock and also a director of the Young Men's Christian Association, having served as its president from October, 1918, until October, 1920. Mr. Henderson is now president of the Little Rock school board, having been a member of the board since his election in 1918. He likewise is the member of the board of trustees of the Carnegie library of Little Rock, is a member of the Kappa Alpha (Southern) fraternity and is a Mason of high standing. He is now a past eminent commander of Hugh De Payens Commandery, No. 1, K. T., is a captain of the guard in Al-Amin Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Little Rock and is one of the five men composing the board of finance of the Masonic grand lodge of Arkansas. He is a member of Albert Pike Consistory. Politically Mr. Henderson is a democrat, taking an active interest in politics, and at one time was a member of the Pulaski county central committee. Along strictly social lines he is connected with the Country Club and the Lakeside Club and he is likewise a member of the Little Rock Science Club. All this indicates the nature and breadth of his interests. He keeps abreast with the best thinking men of the age concerning the great political, sociological and economic questions before the country today and he holds to high standards in all that has to do with the uplift of the individual and the betterment of the community at large, while in professional circles the name of G. De Matt Henderson is an honored one by reason of what he has accomplished and his fidelity to the advanced ethics of his chosen calling.

JEFFERSON DAVIS SANDERSON.

Jefferson Davis Sanderson, president of the J. D. Sanderson Abstract Company, has been a resident of Texarkana since 1886, arriving here when a young man. He was born in Louisiana, February 11, 1861, and was a lad of but nine years when in 1870 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Miller county, where he was reared upon the home farm, his youthful experiences being those of the farm bred boy who divides his time between the duties of the schoolroom, the pleasures of the playground and the work of the fields. He acquired a common school education and in young manhood took up his abode in Texarkana, where he engaged in bookkeeping from 1886 until 1894. He was afterward with Chatfield & Buhrman until September, 1896, when he was elected to public office, since which time he has served almost continuously in positions of public honor and trust. In that year he was elected clerk of the circuit court and occupied the position continuously until 1910, or for a period of seven terms. No higher testimonial of efficient and faithful service could be given than the fact that he was so long retained in the office. Abraham Lincoln said: "You can fool all of the people some of the time and some of the people all of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time." And when a man is continuously reelected to office it is evident that his fellow townsmen entertain implicit trust in him and that he proves himself worthy of the high opinion. Mr. Sanderson retired from office as he had entered it—with the confidence and goodwill of all.

He then organized the J. D. Sanderson Abstract Company, of which he has since been the president. In 1896 he established a set of abstract books and has through all the intervening years engaged in the abstract business. He was again called to public office, however, in April, 1915, when elected mayor of Texarkana, remaining the chief executive of the city for two years. He became a member of the school board in 1916 and served for several years, the cause of education finding in him a stalwart champion and one whose labors were effective forces in promoting the interests of the public schools.

Mr. Sanderson is well known through Masonic connections. He has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and is also a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He has ever been loyal to the teachings and high purposes of the craft and in his life exemplifies the basic principle of the order—the brotherhood of man. Almost his entire life has been passed in Miller county. More than a half century has come and gone since the family home was here established and Mr. Sanderson has ever been an interested and loyal supporter of all those projects which have looked to the benefit and upbuilding of this section of the state.

JOSEPH FRIEND, M. D.

Dr. Joseph Friend, a druggist and physician, who is now proprietor of the West End Drug store of Fort Smith, was born in Chicago, Illinois, in 1865, and is a son Bernard and Minnie Friend, natives of Mississippi. He knows the drug business thoroughly for he began assisting his grandfather in the conduct of a drug store when but eleven years of age and there is no phase of the business which is not understood by him. In the acquirement of his education he was actuated by a laudable ambition that prompted him to make excellent use of his time and opportunity. He was educated in the University of Mississippi and in the University of New York and received his medical degree in New York City. He there began practice, remaining in the eastern metropolis for several years, but eventually had to give up the practice entirely because the generosity of his nature compelled him on numerous occasions financially to help the families to which he ministered in his professional capacity rather than to look for payment for service rendered. At length he came to Fort Smith and here established a drug store. He has remained at the same location for twenty years and there are many former residents of Fort Smith who write to him for drugs and for advice concerning the use of remedies. Since locating in Fort Smith he has made various experiments and studied broadly and has learned how to handle catarrh of the stomach, producing a remedy which has effected wonderful cures in this connection. His drug store is attractive in the large line of goods handled and in the character of the service rendered the public. He maintains the highest standards in his commercial transactions and by reason of this and the integrity of his methods he has been accorded a very liberal patronage.

Dr. Friend was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Lillian Dooley, a daughter of James Dooley of Oxford, Mississippi, who served as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war and is living, at the ripe old age of eighty years. To Dr. and Mrs. Friend have been born three children: Max William, Oscar Jerome and Alice Virginia. During the World war the elder son was on board the Tuscania when it was sunk by a German submarine and was picked up by an English convoy. He was in the service for two years with the Twentieth Forestry Engineers and is now located at Weed, California, where he is in the employ of the Weed Lumber Company. The other son, Oscar Jerome, is identified with his father in the conduct of the drug business. The family is well known in Fort Smith, where they have many friends and as a business man the doctor occupies a very enviable position. The story of his life is the story of honest industry and thrift and should serve as a source of encouragement and inspiration to others, showing what could be accomplished through individual efforts.

JOSEPH T. DEHMER.

Joseph T. Dehmer, proprietor and owner of the Camden Boiler & We'ding Iron Works, at Camden, Arkansas, was born in Little Rock, May 4, 1888. His father, Theodore Dehmer, who is now living in Little Rock at the age of fifty-nine years, is a boiler maker, filling the position of foreman of the Iron Mountain Railroad shops. He was born in Germany and came to America in 1876, making his way direct to Little Rock. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Annie Grummer, is now forty-six years of age. She, too, was born in Germany and came to the United States as a little girl with her parents, in 1880, the family home being established in Arkansas' capital. They were married in Little Rock in 1886 and became the parents of a family of ten children, of whom three sons and six daughters are living.

Joseph T. Dehmer, who was the second in order of birth in the family, was educated in the parochial schools and in St. Edward's Catholic Academy at Little Rock, his training being equivalent to that of a grammar school education. When a lad of fourteen years he started out in the business world, securing employment in the printing establishment of George Doerner in Little Rock, there learning the printer's trade during a period of four years. At the age of eighteen he entered the employ of the Iron Mountain Railway Company at the shops in Little Rock and served an apprenticeship to the blacksmith's trade. There he continued until 1908, when he went to Houston, Texas, and was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as a blacksmith and welder, serving in that position for fourteen months. Later he returned to Little Rock and worked for Thomas Fordyce, there remaining for three months. He next went to Pine Bluff with the Cotton Belt shops and after two years he removed to Gurdon, Arkansas, where he worked in the Iron Mountain shops. In May, 1921, he came to Camden, where he established business on his own account, opening a boiler making and welding shop under the name of the Camden Boiler & Welding Works. He had acquired the capital necessary to engage in business on his own account through his savings and the profits which he had made while engaged in the automobile business in Gurdon, previous to his removal to Camden. The business has steadily progressed under his direction and he is now meeting with substantial success. He has the only welding and boiler shop in Camden and he does work for many of the big mills in the surrounding country, also for the Stout Lumber Company, the Thornton Eagle Lumber Company, the Eagle Mills, the Fordyce Lumber Company of Fordyce, Arkansas, and other concerns of similar nature. He likewise does repair work on locomotives and the excellent quality of his work is bringing to him a liberal and well deserved patronage.

On the 19th of December, 1910, Mr. Dehmer was married in Pine Bluff to Miss Hazel Roberts, a daughter of J. W. Roberts of that place. Mr. Dehmer is a member of the Catholic church at Camden and concentrates the major part of his time and attention upon his business affairs and the thoroughness with which he does his work and the reliability which he has manifested at all times, have constituted the foundation upon which he has built the superstructure of his prosperity.

BEN. E. CHANEY.

Ben. E. Chaney of Stuttgart is prominently associated with one of the important business interests of this state. He is a planter, largely devoting his attention to rice culture, and his leadership in this field of labor is indicated in the fact that he is now president of the Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Association. Mr. Chaney comes to the southwest from the state of Ohio, his birth having occurred near Georgetown, in Brown county, Ohio, in 1880, his parents being John and Frances (Cochran) Chaney. The father's birth occurred in Highland county, Ohio, as did that of the grandfather, Amos Chaney. The mother was a daughter of Jacob Cochran, a well known and prominent citizen of Highland county. Mr. and Mrs. John Chaney resided throughout their lifetimes in Brown and Clinton counties of Ohio. The father still makes his home at Blanchester, that state, but the mother has passed away. In their family were five children: Elizabeth, who is now a teacher in Stuttgart, is a graduate of the Ohio Northern University at Ada, Ohio, and also of the University of Washington and she is now occupying the position of principal of the school in this city. Another daughter, Mrs. Elbert J. Kirk, is living in Wilmington, Ohio.

Ben. E. Chaney, whose name introduces this review, was accorded liberal educational opportunities in his youth, supplementing his early public school training by study in the Ohio State University at Columbus. He, too, turned to the profession of teaching, which he followed for a time in connection with the schools of Blanchester, Ohio. Later he became manager of the business of Dewey Brothers at that place, but in 1910 sought the opportunities of the great and growing west, making his way to Ouray county, Colorado, where in the midst of that most beautiful and picturesque mountain region he engaged in raising cattle. In 1916 he came to Jefferson county, Arkansas, where he has since engaged in cotton growing and is now the owner of twenty-four hundred and forty-eight acres of cotton land. He took up his abode in Stuttgart in 1919 and, while residing in this city, directs the further development and cultivation of his cotton fields. He also acquired six hundred acres of rice land and to this he has added until he has now developed and owns two thousand acres of rice land, his labors being an element in demonstrating to the world the possibilities for rice production in this part of Arkansas. He was the prime mover and perhaps the strongest factor in the organization of the Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Association, which was formed on the 26th of June, 1920, for the purpose of marketing Arkansas rice to the best advantage. He was elected the first president of the organization, which now has a membership of eight hundred, representing eighty per cent of the rice acreage of the state. The members entrust the marketing of all rice to the association and in all respects the product is under the entire control of the association and is marketed at the discretion of its officials, who have made a most close and thorough study of market conditions and all of the problems of sale and shipment. The association is now leasing rice mills, controlling one at De Witt and another at Stuttgart, while still others will be acquired later on, so that the company will mill all rice grown by its members. While a northern man, Mr. Chaney has thoroughly informed himself concerning business conditions in the south and particularly in the matter of raising cotton and rice, crops unknown to the north. His enterprise and ability have carried him steadily forward in this connection and he is today a prominent factor in the development of crops of this character in the state.

In 1907 Mr. Chaney was united in marriage to Miss Mary Haines of Clinton county, Ohio, a daughter of Zimari and Emma (Dudley) Haines. They have become parents of one child, Maurine. Fraternally Mr. Chaney is a Mason, having attained the Knights Templar degree in the commandery and also the thirty-second degree in the consistory, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. While loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft, the major part of his time and attention has been concentrated upon his business affairs and in all that he has undertaken he has displayed sound judgment, keen discrimination, unfaltering sagacity and unabating energy. These qualities have constituted the force whereby he has been enabled to throw open the portals of success and gain the measure of prosperity which today crowns his labors.

DAVID ALLEN GATES.

David Allen Gates, filling the office of state inheritance tax attorney for Arkansas with office in Little Rock, was born in Alto, Texas, February 2, 1861, a son of David Allen and Sarah (Howell) Gates, both of whom were natives of North Carolina, the former born in 1830 and the latter in 1832. They were married in Hardeman county, Tennessee, in 1850, and resided for a considerable period in Alto, Texas, where the father engaged in merchandising. In 1861 he responded to the call of the Confederacy, becoming a first lieutenant and brigade quartermaster and was on active duty to the time of his death, being killed on the battlefield of Mansfield, Louisiana, April 8, 1864, thus giving his life for the cause in which he believed. He was a democrat in his political views. His wife's death occurred in Texas, in September, 1861. They were the parents of three sons and three daughters, of whom two sons and two daughters reached adult age. David Allen and his sister, Mrs. Annie E. Stanley, a widow, are the only ones now living.

David A. Gates was but three years of age at the time of his father's death and when a lad of but seven years he was brought to Drew county, Arkansas, where he attended the country schools. He afterward became a student in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1884, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Determining upon the practice of law as a life work, he afterward studied in Monticello, Arkansas, and was admitted to practice at the bar of this state in 1885. He then located in Arkansas City, where he opened an office and continued in practice for eight years. He was also owner and editor of the Arkansas City Journal and on leaving Arkansas City in July, 1893, he entered the employ of the United States government as revenue inspector. In 1895 he became agent in charge, being at New Orleans, Louisiana, at Louisville, Kentucky, at St. Louis, Missouri, at Chicago, Illinois, and afterward again at Louisville. Subsequently his duties called him to Atlanta, Georgia. In 1906 he was made chief of revenue agents with office and headquarters in Washington, D. C., where he remained for two years. In 1908 he came to Little Rock as agent in charge and in 1909 was appointed a member of the tax commission by Gov. George W. Donaghey. Thus he served until November, 1914, and during the last two years of that period acted as chairman of the commission. On the 7th of November of that year he was reappointed internal revenue agent and on the 14th of December, 1914, he was appointed first deputy commissioner of internal revenue, with office in Washington, D. C. There he served until May 15, 1918, and from that date until the 1st of November, 1919, was supervisor of internal revenue in charge of the territory west of the Mississippi river, with headquarters in Little Rock. On the 1st of November, 1919, he was appointed supervising federal prohibition agent in charge of the southwestern department, embracing Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas and New Mexico and at the same time was made federal prohibition director for Arkansas. On the 23d of April, 1921, he was appointed inheritance tax attorney for Arkansas and retired from the other positions which he had filled in order to give his entire attention to the work of his present office. He has devoted much of his life to public service and has ever been most faithful to the duties and trust reposed in him, his efficient work receiving the strong endorsement of all his superiors. Mr. Gates also has important business interests. He is officially and financially identified with some of the leading corporations of the state and of the southwest, being now president of the Southern Telephone Company of Louisiana, president of the South Arkansas Telephone Company, a director of the Desha Bank & Trust Company of Arkansas City, a director of the Desha County Bank at Watson, Arkansas, a director of the Home Life & Accident Insurance Company of Fordyce, Arkansas, and a member of the life insurance company, operating under the name of Gates & Franklin, at Dermott, Arkansas. He is also interested in the R. W. G. Stock Farm at McGehee, Arkansas. His business connections are thus broad and varied, and capably controlled they have placed him among the men of affluence in the state.

On the 21st of June, 1888, in Monticello, Arkansas, Mr. Gates was united in marriage to Miss Kate Matthews, who was born in Monticello, November 13, 1867, a daughter of the Hon. Samuel J. and Anna (Wilson) Matthews. Her father died in December, 1903, while her mother's death occurred in 1918. Mrs. Gates was educated in the graded schools of her native city. By her marriage she has become the mother of four children: Stanley M., born January 31, 1890; David Allen, Jr., born June 22, 1892; Dorothy, now the wife of Park A. Gallaher; and Paul Wilson, who was born May 20, 1909.

Mr. Gates gives his political endorsement to the democratic party, which he has supported since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He is a Royal Arch Mason and in religious faith, a Presbyterian, serving as an elder in his church. These associations indicate the nature of his interests and the rules which govern his conduct in all the relations of life. He has ever stood for those forces and projects which make for the uplift of the individual and the betterment of the community at large. He is a stanch advocate of the cause of temperance, a believer in law and order at all times and is one who never deviates from a principle which he believes to be right nor from a course which his judgment dictates as one that is fair and impartial between himself and his fellowmen.

CLARENCE ALBERT ROTH.

Clarence Albert Roth, partner in the firm of Healey & Roth, funeral directors of Little Rock, is a native son of Iowa, his birth having occurred in the city of Burlington, on the 10th of January, 1882. His parents are John William and Anna Augusta (Bokenkamp) Roth. The father was born in Burlington, Iowa, and the mother in Morning Sun, that state. They were married in Burlington, where they still reside. To him and his wife were born two sons: Clarence A. and Lyman Henry, the latter born June 26, 1884, and now a resident of Burlington, Iowa.

In the schools of his native city Clarence A. Roth pursued his education until graduated from the high school with the class of 1896. He afterward attended Elliott's Business College of Burlington and completed his course in that institution with the class of 1899, thus becoming well qualified by thorough commercial training for life's practical and responsible duties. He dates his residence in Little Rock from 1901 and in 1905 he became a partner in the firm of Healey & Roth, the senior member thereof being president of the Arkansas State Funeral Directors' Association. They conduct a splendid undertaking establishment, fully equipped, and are accorded a liberal patronage. Mr. Roth is a director of the Young Men's Building & Loan Association, which is also one of the profitable business enterprises of the city.

On the 6th of November, 1914, Mr. Roth was married to Miss Rosemunde Josephine Schmidt, who was born at Coal Hill, Arkansas, May 21, 1893, and is a graduate nurse. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Roth: Clarence A., whose birth occurred November 1, 1916; and Jane Annis, born November 7, 1919. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party. Fraternally he is connected with Little Rock Lodge, No. 29, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and is a past exalted ruler of that lodge. In fact, he has filled all of the positions in the local organization and he belongs also to the Knights of Pythias and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a man of capability in his profession and has won substantial success through carefully managed business interests.

ED BAREFIELD.

Ed Barefield, one of the wide-awake and energetic merchants of Pine Bluff, is engaged in the jewelry trade, being now proprietor of a store that has been in continuous existence here since 1902. Mr. Barefield is a native of St. Louis, Missouri, born in 1872, his parents being Elias and Mary (White) Barefield. The father removed from North Carolina to St. Louis and the mother was also a representative of one of the old southern families, her birth having occurred in Atlanta, Georgia. Elias Barefield was a soldier of the Mexican war, serving with the rank of first lieutenant, and he also joined the northern army when the Civil war was inaugurated.

Ed Barefield spent his youthful days in St. Louis, where he pursued his education in the public schools and afterward learned the watchmaker's trade, at which he worked for a time in Virginia. He then returned to St. Louis, where he conducted a store, and later he became associated with the wholesale jewelry business in that city. On leaving St. Louis, he came to Pine Bluff in 1909 and here succeeded to the ownership of the store which he is now conducting. This store was established by a Mr. Bernath about 1902 and later was purchased by George B. Moore, who in turn sold it to Mr. Barefield. He has a large and well selected line of jewelry and has built up a liberal patronage, his business growing year by year, owing to his straightforward dealing and progressive methods. He has made for himself a creditable position in the commercial circles of the city and his course is characterized by a steady progress.

FRANK PACE.

In a calling where advancement depends entirely upon individual merit and ability and in which wealth and influence avail little or naught in the attainment of success, Frank Pace has made a creditable name and place, having since 1907 practiced continuously at the bar of Little Rock. Arkansas is proud to number him among her native sons. He was born in Harrison, Boone county, July 25, 1874, his parents being William Fletcher and Sarah J. (Howell) Pace. The father was born July 1, 1840, about six miles south of Temple, Texas, and was a son of William Pace, who was born in Albemarle county, Virginia, in 1793. Removing westward he became a resident of Callaway county, Missouri, and from that state went to Texas. He devoted his life to stock raising and died in early manhood, departing this life when his son William Fletcher was an infant. The ancestral line, however, can be traced still farther back to William Pace, the great-grandfather of Frank Pace, who was the founder of the family in America and who aided the cause of independence in the Revolutionary war.

Left without a father's care, guidance and protection in his early boyhood, William Fletcher Pace had comparatively little opportunity to secure an education, but made the most of his advantages in that direction. Moreover, he always possessed a studious nature and a most retentive memory and thus his knowledge was constantly broadened by the experiences of life. He attained his majority about the time the Civil war broke out and joined the Confederate army as a member of the Missouri State Guard. With his regiment he participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Arkansas, and of Wilson's Creek and in the former engagement was wounded. When he was mustered out of the Confederate service he was in General Frost's brigade under the immediate command of Colonel Mitchell. Not long afterward Mr. Pace became a resident of Woodruff county, Arkansas, and there in 1868 he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah J. Howell. With ox-team and wagon he and his bride traveled to Boone county, Arkansas, where they took up their abode in a one-room log cabin. Prompted by a laudable ambition, Mr. Pace used his opportunities to the best possible advantage. While teaching school for a time he devoted his leisure hours to the study of law and in 1871 was admitted to the bar before Judge Fitzpatrick, well known for his connection with the reconstruction period. According to the itinerant custom of the times Mr. Pace traveled with the judge from county to county, holding court, and his ability brought him to a point of prominence as a representative of the bar of this state. In fact, he won wide distinction as a lawyer and jurist, making his home for many years at Harrison, where he successfully practiced law and where he did not a little to guide the destinies of the state along the lines of progress and improvement. To Mr. and Mrs. William Fletcher Pace were born the following named: Ida, the widow of former Professor Homer A. Purdue, who occupied the chair of geology in the University of Arkansas, and later was the state geologist of the state of Tennessee. He died while the incumbent of that position, in 1917; Frank, whose name introduces this review; Henry, a physician of Eureka Springs; Ada, living in Fort Worth, Texas; Kate, the wife of H. E. Cantrell of El Paso, Texas; and Troy, a member of the firm of James, Pace & Smith, lawyers of Los Angeles, California.

Spending his youthful days in Harrison, Frank Pace there attended the public schools until he had mastered the branches of learning therein taught and later he matriculated in the State University at Fayetteville. A review of the broad field of business with its commercial, agricultural, industrial and professional opportunities led him to the determination to engage in law practice as a life work. Moreover, he was stimulated by the splendid example of his father and after thorough preliminary reading he was admitted to the bar at Harrison in 1894 and for several years engaged in law practice there with his father and brother. He likewise held the office of prosecuting attorney of the fourteenth judicial circuit. Seeking a still broader field of labor offered in the larger city he came to Little Rock in November, 1907, and here opened an office. Almost immediately he won recognition as an able member of the bar in northwestern Arkansas and has continuously maintained his place in the front rank among the representatives of the legal profession in this city. He became a partner of United States Senator Jefferson Davis, under the firm style of Davis & Pace and their practice became extensive and important. Senator Davis died in 1907, and his son, Wallace, became a member of the firm, the style now being Pace, Campbell & Davis. Mr. Pace has all of the qualities of the able lawyer, an analytical mind, strong powers of reasoning and the industry which enables him thoroughly to prepare his cases and present them with clearness and force.

On the 10th of June, 1908, Mr. Pace was united in marriage to Miss Flora Layton of Yellville, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of a son, Frank, Jr., who was born July 5, 1912. He has ever been keenly interested in questions of vital concern to the city and commonwealth and has done much important public service. He is now a member of the board of trustees of the University of Arkansas and from the beginning he served as a member of the State Council of Defense during the World war period and also did active work in connection with the war camp community service. His religious faith is manifest in his membership in the Second Presbyterian church, of which he is serving as an elder. His life, indeed, has been an active and useful one, constituting a valuable contribution to the world's work in the city and state in which he makes his home.

W. M. SIMPSON.

W. M. Simpson, conducting an extensive and profitable produce business in Fayetteville, was born in Greeneville, Tennessee, in 1859, and is a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Harmon) Simpson, who were likewise natives of Tennessee. The grandfather in the paternal line was Henry Simpson, a native of Kentucky, who died in Tennessee at the advanced age of eighty-six years. The grandfather in the maternal line was Peter Harmon, a native of Tennessee. The marriage of Peter Simpson and Elizabeth Harmon was celebrated in Tennessee, where they spent their lives, the father there following the occupation of farming in support of his family, which numbered nine children, three of whom are living, the eldest being W. M., of this review. The others are: Dr. H. A. Simpson, a practicing physician of Afton, Tennessee; and Mrs. Bettie E. Carter, a widow, living at Enid, Oklahoma. The parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Simpson gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. During the Civil war he was a Union man. In his business he prospered and his farming interests enabled him to provide a comfortable living for the members of his household.

W. M. Simpson obtained his education in Tusculum College of Tennessee and he started out in the business world in connection with the occupation of farming, to which he had been reared. He was afterward employed in a store and subsequently traveled for a grocery house of Knoxville, Tennessee, remaining on the road for a year. He then turned his attention to merchandising on his own account at Savoy, Arkansas, in 1886, and for five years was connected with the commercial interests of that country store. On the expiration of that period he came to Fayetteville and later went to Durham. He was the first agent on the St. Paul branch of the railroad, continuing in the position for a year and a half at that place, after which he returned to Fayetteville and engaged in the grain trade, operating an elevator and buying and selling wheat. Eventually he disposed of his business along that line and concentrated his attention upon buying and selling apples and afterward added feed and flour. He now handles feed and dried apples and has built up a business of large and gratifying proportions.

On the 13th of October, 1886, Mr. Simpson was married to Miss Hattie E. Ladd, who was born in Fayetteville, a daughter of W. H. Ladd, one of the pioneer settlers of Washington county, Arkansas, where for many years he followed farming. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have become parents to three daughters: Stella Elizabeth, the wife of A. R. Mintun, who is in partnership with her father; Julia A., the wife of Harry M. Ewalt, who is traveling for the firm of Simpson-Mintun Company and Gladys R., the wife of J. J. Jefferson, living at Winston-Salem, North Carolina, where he is well known as an extensive tobacco dealer.

Mr. Simpson and his wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal church and politically he gives his support to the democratic party. He has never sought nor desired office, however, preferring to devote his entire time and attention to his business affairs, in which he has greatly prospered since coming to this state. When he arrived in Arkansas his cash capital consisted of but eighty dollars. Upon that slight foundation he has built his success, for his capital was supplemented by untiring industry and perseverance. Gradually he has worked his way upward and is now at the head of one of the important commercial interests of his adopted city.

FREDERICK LINDSEY DUCKWORTH, M. D.

Among the leading physicians and surgeons of southeastern Arkansas is numbered Dr. Frederick Lindsey Duckworth, who for the past twelve years has successfully followed his profession in Monticello, his pronounced ability winning for him a large practice. A native of Ashley county, Arkansas, he was born September 12, 1882, his parents being Robert W. and Mary E. (McGuire) Duckworth, both of whom are residents of Memphis, Tennessee. Following his graduation from the high school at Hamburg, Arkansas, Dr. Duckworth attended James' Institute and in 1900 he entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, where he pursued his studies for three years, completing his professional training at Grant University of Chattanooga, Tennessee, which in 1905 conferred upon him the M. D. degree. In 1901 he began practice in Desha county, Arkansas, being located at Walnut Lake for two years, while for eight years he maintained an office in Dumas. In September, 1910, he came to Monticello, where he has since resided, and with the passing years his practice has steadily grown until it has reached large proportions. Since 1910 he has been the official physician at the State Agricultural School at Monticello and his professional labors have been attended with a gratifying measure of success. He is thoroughly familiar with the scientific basis upon which his work rests and is correct in the application of his knowledge to the needs of his patients. He utilizes every possible opportunity to promote his knowledge and increase his efficiency and in the field of professional service he has made continuous progress.

On New Year's eve, 1906, Dr. Duckworth was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Wright of Wilmar, Drew county, Arkansas, and they became the parents of three children, two of whom survive, Margaret Louise and Frederick L., Jr. Dr. and Mrs. Duckworth are members of the Presbyterian church and he figures conspicuously in professional circles of the state, being a member of the Desha County Medical Society, of which he served as secretary during 1905 and 1906, while during 1907 and 1908 he was its president. He is now the secretary of the Drew County Medical Society and is also a member of the Arkansas State Medical Society. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Omega Lodge, No. 547, F. & A. M., of Dumas, and he is likewise connected with the Order of the Eastern Star. His innate talent and acquired ability have brought him to a position of distinction in the ranks of his profession, while his ambition keeps him abreast with the trend of the times in the field of modern medical and surgical practice.

C. D. CONREY.

C. D. Conrey, distributor for the Ford cars at Stuttgart, conducting business as president of the C. D. Conrey Company, was born in Urbana, Ohio, a son of Charles and Katherine (Stanbery) Conrey. The mother was a great-granddaughter of the distinguished George Elliott, who was a missionary to the Miami Indians of western Ohio at a very early day in the colonization of the new world. The Stanberys were from Baltimore and the family was early established in Ohio, where representatives of the name won distinction as statesmen and as soldiers, one of the generals of the Civil war from Ohio being Brigadier General Stanbery of Cincinnati. Charles Conrey, the father of C. D. Conrey, was for many years engaged in the conduct of a store at Urbana, Ohio, and was highly esteemed there as a representative man and citizen.

C. D. Conrey attended school in his native city, where he remained until 1900 and then sought the business opportunities of the southwest, making his way to Stuttgart, where he first engaged in the confectionery business. In 1914, however, he took over the distribution of the Ford motor cars and in 1920 incorporated the business under the name of the C. D. Conrey Company, of which he is the president, with Alice Conrey as vice president and A. E. Moran as secretary. The business has steadily grown and developed and the territory covered by the firm is one-half of Arkansas county, also the south half of Prairie county. Their sales amount to about two hundred and fifty cars annually. In addition they sell many Ford tractors, the demands for their Fords being due to the heavy production of rice in this section of the country, which requires tractors of a dependable type. There are more tractors sold through this agency than through any other in Arkansas and the Conrey company is also one of the largest retail distributors of tractors in the United States. Mr. Conrey has studied every phase of the business, knows the needs and demands of the country in which he operates and has built up an enterprise of very substantial proportions, which brings to him a gratifying measure of success.

In 1898 Mr. Conrey was united in marriage to Miss Alice Dupree of New York, a daughter of Thomas Dupree, and they have become parents of two children, Howard and Helen. Mr. and Mrs. Conrey have won many friends during the period of their residence in Stuttgart and they occupy an enviable position in the social circles here. Mr. Conrey is an alert, energetic business man, wide-awake and enterprising and he never stops short of the successful accomplishment of his purpose, for he recognizes the fact that when one avenue of opportunity seems closed he can carve out other paths whereby to reach the desired goal.

COLONEL ENOCH HOUSTON VANCE.

Inseparably interwoven with the history of Malvern and the state, is the record of Colonel Enoch Houston Vance. Lawyer and banker, he was most closely associated with the welfare and progress of city and county and on many occasions was called to public office by his fellow townsmen, who recognized his worth, ability and public spirit. He was born in Mississippi, February 27, 1848, a son of Enoch H. and Lucinda (Massey) Vance. The father was a lawyer, an editor and a physician. He published the True Democrat at Pine Bluff before the war, having first come to Arkansas in 1856, at which time he located near Sheridan, then a part of Saline county. There he settled on a farm, owning considerable land which he developed and brought under a high state of cultivation. He was opposed to the institution of slavery and when the Civil war broke out he joined the Eighth Missouri Cavalry of the Federal army. While engaged in scouting service to determine the strength and whereabouts of Price's army he was taken prisoner and brought to Little Rock, where he was placed in the same cell as Elisha Baxter, being held on a charge of treason to the Confederacy. His wife, however, stole the keys from the jailer and liberated both her husband and Mr. Baxter. After Little Rock was captured by the Federal forces he joined his regiment in that city and afterward assisted in raising the Third Arkansas Regiment for the defense of the Union, becoming captain of his company. Following the close of the Civil war he returned to his farm in the vicinity of Sheridan and not only was closely associated with the material development of the community but took a most active and prominent part in public affairs. He was serving as senator of his district at the time that Grant county was established and he became the first assessor of the newly created county. He died in Perry county, Arkansas, at the age of sixty-eight years. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist church. They had a family of five children: Elizabeth D., the wife of Dr. W. M. Allison; Enoch H.; James A., an attorney at law practicing in Bigelow, Arkansas; Samuel H., a farmer living at Perryville, this state; and Robert C.

Colonel Vance was reared on the old home farm in the vicinity of Sheridan and supplemented his public school training by study in Abingdon College at Abingdon, Illinois, where he remained for two years. He filled the office of assessor of Saline county following his return home and he also occupied the position of county clerk of Grant county for a period of four years. Devoting his leisure time to the study of law, he was admitted to the bar in 1873 and on the 14th of February, 1877, he came to Malvern, where he practiced to the time of his death. He gained a most creditable position at the bar, prepared his cases with great precision and care, presented his cause with earnestness and force, and his deductions were at all times logical and his reasoning clear and cogent. During the period of his residence in Malvern he also figured prominently in connection with public affairs, serving as postmaster of the city for a period of seventeen years and as a member of the city council for many years. In the latter connection he exercised his official prerogatives in support of many progressive public measures and aided largely in bringing about reform and improvement in civic affairs. He was twice nominated by the republican party for attorney general of Arkansas and was also nominated for congress in the sixth district of the state. On this occasion he and his opponent, the democratic nominee, traveled together, making the same towns and addressing the people upon the political questions of the hour, and Colonel Vance said this was the pleasantest campaign of his life. He always avoided personal antagonism and never was of that class of narrow-minded people who regard a difference in opinion not as a matter of intellect but as a personal affront. He won his title by serving as colonel of the Grant county militia in the Brooks-Baxter war. In addition to his professional interests and his public duties Colonel Vance was identified with the business development of Malvern through his connection with the First National Bank, of which he was one of the organizers and of which he was the president for many years. He did much to shape the policy of the institution and promote its progress and the success of the bank is attributable in no small measure to his efforts.

Colonel Vance was united in marriage on the 22d of June, 1871, in Macomb, Illinois, to Miss Eva Thompson, and they had one child, who died in infancy. For his second wife Colonel Vance chose Sara McKee, a native of Galesburg, Illinois, the marriage being celebrated on the 22d of June, 1876. Two children were born of this union, McKee and Eva, the latter the wife of Abbott W. Jernigan, an attorney at law of Malvern. Mr. and Mrs. Jernigan have two children, Vance and Alberta.

Colonel Vance held membership in the Methodist church, in which he served as a trustee and steward. His wife is also a member of this church. Fraternally Colonel Vance was connected with the Masons and had taken the Scottish Rite degrees, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he had crossed the sands of the desert. He was long an active factor in the public life of Malvern and the state and his course was ever characterized by the utmost devotion to duty. Neither fear nor favor swerved him from the path in which he had elected to tread because of his belief that it leads to justice, progress and the right. Colonel Vance died on October 8, 1921, deeply mourned by his family and a host of friends.

THOMAS L. GRAHAM.

Thomas L. Graham, filling the office of circuit clerk at Clarendon, was born at Blackton, Arkansas, in 1876, and is a representative of one of the old pioneer families of that section of the state. His grandfather was William Riley Graham, who came to Arkansas in 1859, settling near Blackton. He was a native of Scotland. He devoted much of his life to teaching and was a man of liberal education for that day. He was the father of James H. Graham, who was born near where Birmingham, Alabama, now stands, and who, after arriving at years of maturity, married Alice Turentine, a native of Arkansas. They became the parents of three sons: Wallace L., Thomas L. and Hague, but the last named is deceased.

Spending his youthful days under the parental roof, Thomas L. Graham pursued a common school education and early became familiar with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. When his school days were over he took up farming on his own account and gave his attention to agricultural pursuits until elected to office. He still has extensive landed possessions and from his farm property derives a substantial annual income. His careful supervision of his lands and their cultivation manifests a most progressive spirit in conducting his business interests of that character.

Mr. Graham has always been interested in the general welfare and in questions of public importance and in January, 1919, he assumed the duties of circuit clerk, to which office he had been called at the previous election. Endorsement of his capable, prompt and efficient service came to him in reelection in 1921, so that he is now serving for the second term. Fraternally he is a Mason and also a member of the Knights of Pythias, while his religious faith is that of the Baptist church. High principles have actuated him in all the relations of life and he is one of the respected citizens of Monroe county, enjoying the confidence and goodwill of all who know him.

VIRGIL P. WILSON.

Virgil P. Wilson, manager of the Chamber of Commerce at El Dorado, is performing an effective service in this connection in advancing those activities which have to do with the extension of trade relations and the upbuilding of civic interests. Mr. Wilson comes to Arkansas from the state of Kansas, his birth having occurred in Sumner county, March 4, 1892. He is a son of Hubert B. and Etta (Burtram) Wilson, who were natives of Missouri and came of Virginian ancestry. They were married in Missouri and removed to Kansas immediately afterward, taking up their abode in Argonia, Sumner county, where Mr. Wilson engaged in the feed and coal business. He was one of the men who made the run when the Cherokee strip was thrown open for settlement and staked out a claim three miles east of the town of Cherokee, which became the county seat of Alfalfa county. He removed his family to the new home, there building the first frame house on the strip, other settlers having built log and sod houses. Mr. Wilson continued to cultivate and develop his place until 1920, when he retired from active business and removed to Siloam Springs, Arkansas, where he now resides.

Virgil P. Wilson was educated in the public schools of Cherokee and was graduated from high school with the class of 1912. He afterward attended the Northwestern Normal School at Alva and obtained a state life certificate as a teacher in 1914. For three years thereafter he devoted his attention to the profession of teaching, spending one year at Driftwood, Oklahoma, and two years as principal of the Madill high school at Madill, Oklahoma. While thus teaching he attended the summer school at the Oklahoma University and likewise took some correspondence work. In August, 1917, he entered the Officers' Training School at Camp Stanley, near Leon Springs, Texas, and on the 27th of November was commissioned a first lieutenant. He was then sent to the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Depot Brigade at Camp Travis, where he was placed in command of a company, which he commanded until the following June. Later he served for two terms as judge advocate of a special court-martial court known as the Six Sixty court. He then received his promotion on the 24th of September, 1918, to a captaincy of infantry and was transferred to Camp McArthur at Waco, Texas, where he was in command of a company of two hundred and fifty men and six officers until discharged on the 14th of December, 1918, after the signing of the armistice.

Captain Wilson returned at once to the Oklahoma University to complete his education and received his Bachelor of Arts degree in the spring of 1919. He was admitted to practice at the Oklahoma state bar in June of the same year, and continued to devote his attention to law practice in Okmulgee, Oklahoma, until October, 1920, when he was selected as manager of the civic department of the Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma City. In March, 1921, J. H. Kirkpatrick, then secretary of the El Dorado Chamber of Commerce, was taken ill and Captain Wilson was asked to succeed him in that position. On the 15th of March he assumed the duties of the office and as a result of his thorough educational training he had soon mastered the work of the position and has made the influence of the organization greatly felt in the unprecedented development of the little city of El Dorado. His plans are practical, well formulated and far-reaching and the results achieved have been of a most splendid character.

On the 26th of June, 1921, Captain Wilson was married to Miss Bessie Welch of Okmulgee, Oklahoma. He is a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon, a Greek letter fraternity, and of the Phi Delta Phi, a law fraternity of extremely high requirements. He belongs to the Presbyterian church and the most advanced standards guide him in every relation of life. He is keenly interested in advancing the material, intellectual and social welfare of the community and in upholding the legal and moral status and he fights for the right with the same spirit that caused him to enter the army during the World war, nor does he ever stop until he reaches his objective.

JOHN H. NANCE.

One of Crittenden county's most substantial citizens is John H. Nance, county and probate clerk with residence in Marion. He is a native son of this state, his birth having occurred at Newell, Phillips county, on the 29th of November, 1877, a son of William Harvey and Mary (Compton) Nance. The father was born and reared in Alabama, to which state his ancestors removed from Georgia at an early day. He was engaged in railroading and farming for the greater part of his life. At Huntsville, Alabama, occurred the marriage of Mr. Nance to Miss Mary Compton. She was of Welsh extraction, her ancestors having come to this country at an early day. She was born and reared in South Carolina. William Harvey Nance died at Town Creek, Alabama, in 1891, at the age of fifty-five years. His wife's death occurred at Tuscumbia, Alabama, in 1901, in her sixty-second year. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Nance eleven children were born, six boys and five girls. Two boys and two girls are living. John H. Nance, whose name initiates this review, was the eighth in order of birth.

John H. Nance was educated in the common schools of Phillips county, receiving the equivalent of a high school education. After putting his textbooks aside he secured a position as clerk in a store at Poplar Grove and was active in that connection for three years, or until he reached the age of twenty-one. He then engaged in the general mercantile business on his own account in Poplar Grove, the capital for this enterprise being taken from his savings. For three years he was active in the conduct of that store, achieving substantial success, but at the termination of that time he disposed of his interest and went to Earle, where he clerked for the next five years. On the 20th of May, 1914, he was appointed postmaster of Earle and was active in that office until 1919. In that year he tendered his resignation and took over the duties of county clerk, with headquarters at Marion. On the 10th of August, 1921, he was reelected to this office, in which he is now serving to the best of his ability. He believes that every public office is a public trust and he has won the confidence and trust of his fellow citizens.

On the 9th day of November, 1899, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Nance to Miss Ella Boone, a daughter of J. T. Boone, a prominent resident of Poplar Grove. To their union five children have been born: Anna Catherine, who died in infancy; John H., Jr., eleven years of age; Pauline and Gladys, twins, fourteen years of age; and Cecil B., twenty-one years of age. He is a veteran of the World war, having served with the Medical Corps. He was stationed at Camp Hospital, No. 4, Paris district. He was in service two years and during that time worked his way up to the rank of sergeant. He received his honorable discharge on the 2nd of July, 1919, and is now in the insurance business at Earle, Arkansas.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and they are generous contributors to its support. Since attaining his majority Mr. Nance has given his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. As a public-spirited citizen with the welfare of the community ever at heart, he holds membership in every organization that has for its purpose public development and improvement. Mr. Nance is a man of pleasing and genial personality and has many friends in this community. Marion is indeed fortunate in having him for a citizen and Arkansas is proud to number him among her native sons.

C. J. BRESLIN.

The name of C. J. Breslin figures prominently in connection with the business development of Fort Smith. For thirty-five years he has been identified with its industrial interests, having been the founder and promoter of the Breslin Boiler & Iron Works of Fort Smith, in which he is still financially and somewhat actively interested, although in a considerable measure he has retired from business. Mr. Breslin is a native of New Orleans, La., his birth having occurred in 1857. He left New Orleans in 1866 with his father, going to St. Louis, Missouri,, and at the age of thirteen he went to work. In 1877, at the age of twenty years, he went to work at the boiler and sheet-iron business which vocation he has followed since. He came to Ft. Smith in 1884 from Springfield, Missouri, being employed there by the Perkins Water Works Manufacturing Company now known as the United Iron Works Company.

Thirty-eight years ago Mr. Breslin came to Fort Smith and as a result of his previous training and experience he became the superintendent of the boiler department of the Ketcham Iron Works. He thoroughly understood every branch and phase of the business for he had served his apprenticeship in one of the largest boiler shops in this country and worked in several railroad shops. After serving with the Ketcham Iron Works for some time he established the present business, which he began on a small scale, occupying a little building which was demolished in the cyclone of 1898. The business gradually expanded and developed under his careful management as a result of his capability, and today the company does work througout the southwest. The Breslin Boiler & Iron Works occupies the block from 601 to 623 South Tenth street, having here a modern spacious brick building, dedicated to the manufacture and repair of boilers and sheet-iron work. This is one of the most complete private shops of its kind in this section of the country. The building was erected after the most approved designs in factory construction, is splendidly lighted, is equipped with traveling cranes, pneumatic tools and air compressor and other modern devices for the successful conduct of the business. Steadily the firm's volume of trade has increased and among the recent contracts which the firm has executed is the boiler equipment of the Joie Theatre, the Glicks Laundry and the Shipley Bakery. As a departure from their regular line this concern made the handsome ornamental iron gates for the Catholic cemetery, the shop being equipped to execute work of this character.

As the years have passed C. J. Breslin has studied every phase of the business most carefully and has so directed the operations of the plant that splendid results have accrued and he has long occupied a foremost position in the ranks of those who represent the industrial activity of Fort Smith.

In 1878 Mr. Breslin was united in marriage to Miss Rose Dinnen and they have become parents of five daughters and three sons. A son, Robert Breslin, died in 1898, at the age of seven years. Charles E., is now the general manager of the Breslin Boiler & Iron Works, and Will, is superintendent and has the management of the manufacturing end of the business. As the two sons have grown in years and experience Mr. Breslin has shifted the responsibilities more and more to their shoulders and is now largely living retired, enjoying the rest which he has truly earned and richly merits.

W. T. WOOTTON, M. D.

Dr. W. T. Wootton, a leading physician of Hot Springs, is a representative of an old and prominent southern family whose members have been prominently identified with the medical fraternity since colonial days, and his high scientific attainments make him a worthy exponent of a name that has long been an honored one in the profession. The ancestral record is traced back to Dr. William T. Wootton, the founder of Jamestown, Virginia, who is said to have been the first physician in colonial times, and each generation since has produced one or more physicians who have distinguished themselves in some branch of the profession.

Dr. Wootton of this review was born in Poolesville, Maryland, April 12, 1878, a son of Dr. Edward and Bettie (O'Rear) Wootton. The father was regimental surgeon in Colonel E. V. White's regiment in the Civil war and after receiving his discharge from the service he followed his profession at Poolesville, Maryland, for about fifty years, building up a large practice and winning recognition as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of the state. He also took an active part in public affairs, representing his district in the Maryland state legislature, and fraternally he was identified with the Masons.

In the acquirement of an education Dr. W. T. Wootton attended the public schools of Poolesville, Maryland, after which he became a student at the State College, while subsequently he entered the University of Maryland, from which he was graduated with the M. D. degree in 1899. He then spent a year in the Maryland State Hospital as house physician and in 1900, after passing the required examination, became a member of the United States volunteer army. He was sent to the Philippines, where he served for two and a half years as captain and assistant surgeon, thus gaining valuable experience along professional lines. Upon again taking up the duties of a civilian he came to Arkansas, opening an office in Hot Springs, where he has since resided, and during the intervening period of eighteen years he has built up an extensive and lucrative practice. He has never lost the attitude of a student toward his profession and through constant reading and careful study of the cases that come under his care he is continually broadening his knowledge and ability.

In 1904 Dr. Wootton was united in marriage to Miss Emma Whittington, a daughter of Colonel Alfred Whittington, now deceased, who was one of the pioneer settlers of Arkansas. Two daughters have been born of this union, Martha W. and Margaret E. In his political views the Doctor is a democrat and in religious faith he is a Presbyterian. He is actively and helpfully interested in the work of the church and is now serving as one of its deacons. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, having membership with Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, A. F. & A. M., and he is also affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, belonging to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 380. His professional connections are with the Hot Springs Garland County Medical Society, of which he is an ex-president. He is also a member of the Arkansas State Medical Society and one of its councillors; the Southwestern Medical Association, of which he is an ex-president; and he is likewise connected with the Tri-State Medical Society, the Mississippi Valley Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. His natural talent and acquired ability have won for him high standing in his profession and he ranks with the foremost physicians in the state.

G. L. MAPLES.

G. L. Maples, the popular and efficient sheriff of Benton county and a member of one of the well known pioneer families of the state, was born in Bentonville, Arkansas, in 1881, a son of Daniel and Malissa (Campbell) Maples, both of whom were natives of Carroll county, Arkansas, where their marriage occurred. Shortly after the close of the Civil war they came to Benton county, where for a number of years the father followed the occupation of farming. He became one of the prominent men of his community and was called to public office, serving as deputy sheriff of Benton county for more than four years. He was later appointed deputy United States marshal and went to Oklahoma in search of horse thieves. While crossing a log over a stream near Tahlequah, Oklahoma, he was shot and killed from ambush by Ned Christy, the noted outlaw, his death occurring on the 5th of May, 1887. He was a member of the Baptist church and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party, while fraternally he was identified with the Masons. Mr. and Mrs. Maples became the parents of six children, four of whom survive; Archibald, who resides in the state of Washington, where he follows the occupation of farming; Leona, who married Dick Scott, a salesman residing in Colorado; Pearl, who married Edgar Smith, a resident of Oregon and a carpenter by trade; and G. L., of this review.

The educational opportunities of G. L. Maples were limited, as it was necessary for him to aid in supporting his mother after his father's demise. He found employment at farm labor, later renting land for a number of years and subsequently purchasing a small farm. While engaged in cultivating his farm he spent about six months each year on the road as a fruit salesman and during that period also acted as deputy sheriff. On the 20th of November, 1916, he took up his residence in Bentonville, and on the 1st of August, 1920, was elected sheriff of Benton county, receiving more votes than the independent and republican candidates combined, while at the primaries he received more than twice the number of votes cast in favor of his opponent, thus indicating his popularity in the district. He is said to be one of the best sheriffs the county has ever had. The thoroughness with which he performs the tasks that devolve upon him has made his name a menace to evildoers, while it carries with it a sense of security to all law-abiding citizens.

In March, 1898, Mr. Maples was united in marriage to Miss Emma Browning, who was born in southwestern Missouri, a daughter of Thomas Browning, now residing on a farm in Benton county. To this union three children have been born: Lillie, who married Jack Henderson, employed as head mechanic in a Ford garage at Rogers, Arkansas; Beatrice, at home; and Bryan, who is attending school.

Mr. Maples is a stanch democrat in his political views and his fraternal connections are with the Masons and the Modern Woodmen of America. Earnest, self-denying labor was his lot in early manhood, but with ambition and the ability to work his way upward he has steadily progressed along lines of general usefulness as well as individual success. He is fearless, prompt and efficient in the discharge of his official duties and in the county where his life has been spent he enjoys the warm regard, esteem and goodwill of an extensive circle of friends.

JOSEPH F. JOHN, M. D.

A well known physician and surgeon of Eureka Springs is Dr. Joseph F. John, who was born in Cleveland county, Arkansas, on the 10th of April, 1875, a son of William Frank and Mary Jane (Chambers) John, both natives of Georgia. The paternal grandfather, William John, was born in Georgia and came to Cleveland county, this state, in 1855, buying land there, whereon he resided the balance of his life. The maternal grandfather, James Chambers, was likewise a native of Georgia, who came to Arkansas at an early day. He located in Lincoln county and became a successful planter. A son owns and resides on the place at the present time. Mr. and Mrs. John were married in Arkansas, the father having come here in 1855 with his parents, locating with them in Cleveland county, and they resided on a farm in that county until death. To their union six children were born, five of whom are living: James W., a physician and surgeon at Pine Bluff; R. Edgar, now engaged in rice planting at Stuttgart, who was for some time engaged in the practice of dentistry; Dr. J. F., whose name initiates this review; M. Carr, a physician and surgeon at Stuttgart; and Myrtle, who is the wife of Frank Myers, a successful merchant at Stuttgart. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally Mr. John was identified with the Masons and the Woodmen. He was very decided on his views of democracy and he was throughout his life an active worker in the interests of the democratic party.

After his preliminary education, Joseph F. John entered the Clary Training School at Fordyce, this state, and he was graduated from that institution in 1899. The following year he enrolled in the University of Arkansas but in 1901 withdrew from that institution and enrolled in the medical department of the University of Nashville. He received his M. D. degree in 1905 and immediately located in Grady, Arkansas, where he practiced for five years. In 1909 he came to Eureka Springs and has since practiced here, winning for himself a place among the most capable and successful physicians and surgeons of the county. Since graduation Dr. John has taken post graduate work in New York and at the Tulane Hospital in New Orleans and he keeps in constant touch with the progressive work that is being done by the most eminent members of the profession, through membership in the State and County Medical Societies.

In 1907 occurred the marriage of Dr. John to Miss Lillian Ada Leonard of Petersburg, Tennessee. She received her education in Peabody College at Nashville and at the time of her marriage to Dr. John was engaged in teaching in the schools of Alabama. She is still active in educational work and is now an instructor in the public schools of Eureka Springs. To the union of Dr. and Mrs. John two children have been born: Joada, eight years of age; and Clary, five years of age. Mrs. John is a consistent member of the Christian church, while her husband is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Fraternally Dr. John is identified with the Masons, Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen, and Knights and Ladies of Security. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he is a firm believer in the principles of that party as factors in good government. While heavy demands have been made upon his time and attention in the practice of medicine and surgery, Dr. John has yet found opportunity for cooperation in many public movements whereby the welfare and upbuilding of the city have been promoted.

HON. WILLIAM E. ATKINSON.

Judge William E. Atkinson comes of sturdy southern Anglo-Saxon stock. His grandfather, Robert A., was a native of Georgia, moved to Arkansas and settled in Columbia county and followed agricultural pursuits. W. W. Atkinson, father of William E., was born in Georgia, but early in life moved to Alabama, where he married Miss Barbara Wilder, a native of that state. From this union was born in Alabama, William E., on July 24, 1852. W. W. Atkinson moved to Arkansas with his family in 1857, making their home in Columbia county, where he engaged in agriculture until 1865, after which he moved to Falcon, Arkansas, and became a merchant and manager of a plantation. During the Civil war W. W. Atkinson served in the Quartermaster department of the Confederate army. He was successful as a business man and his superior judgment and character made him a leader among his fellows. In political allegiance he was a democrat and in religious affiliation he and his family were Baptists, exemplary, active and influential in Christian service. They were the parents of five children, four of whom are living: Mrs. Martha Strange, widow, of Stamps, Arkansas; Mary, the wife of J. D. Pelt, of Falcon, Arkansas; John R., of Hope, Arkansas; and Wm. E., the subject of this sketch.

Judge Atkinson obtained his early education in the country schools of Nevada county, and afterwards became a student in Washington and Lee University of Virginia, from which he graduated on the completion of a law course, with the class of 1872, finishing his studies in that institution before he was twenty years of age. He was admitted to the bar in 1874 and began practice at Rosston, Arkansas, following his profession continuously and successfully in Prescott, Nevada county, until he was elected attorney general of the state in 1888, carrying every county in the state, except two, with unprecedented majorities. He served for two terms and made a most creditable record, his course giving general satisfaction to his constituents. With his retirement from office he entered upon the practice of law in Little Rock, where he was first associated with John C. England and afterwards with G. O. Patterson. He had been a partner of Hon. W. V. Tompkins at Prescott, prior to his election to the position as attorney general. He continued in active practice at Little Rock until 1911, when he removed to Clarksville, where he has since made his home. He was an active practitioner in the courts of the state until appointed inheritance tax attorney in 1921, but soon thereafter was appointed chancellor of the ninth chancery circuit, which position he now honors.

In 1874 Judge Atkinson was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Williams of Ouachita county, Arkansas, and they became the parents of four children, one of whom survives: Sherman, who is now court reporter at Little Rock. The wife and mother died in 1884 and in 1885 Judge Atkinson was married to Miss Lillian Williams, sister of his first wife. To them was born a son, W. W. Atkinson, now of Colorado Springs, Colorado, filling the position of internal revenue agent. Mrs. Lillian Atkinson was called to her final rest in 1889 and in 1891 Judge Atkinson married Miss Lidie Powers, a native of Augusta, Kentucky. They have three children: Mrs. Margaret Barnett, wife of J. R. Barnett of Gideon, Missouri; Louise, at home; and Paul at Little Rock.

W. E. Atkinson

Since age conferred upon Judge Atkinson the right of franchise he has given stalwart allegiance to the democratic party and has been an active worker in its ranks but now concentrates most of his attention upon his official duties. He has six counties in his district and is making a most creditable record as chancellor. He is a member of the State Bar Association and enjoys the unqualified confidence and cordial esteem of his professional colleagues and contemporaries.

One of the outstanding characteristics of Judge Atkinson is his public spirit and devotion to duty. It is a well known fact that in the early days when he lived in Little Rock he and a few others made the first move toward breaking up the lawless gambling gang that infested the capital, and burned their paraphernalia on the public square at a time when to do so was considered dangerous. They also made the first move toward promoting the cause of temperance and throughout Judge Atkinson's life he has sacrificed his financial profession and personal ambitions for the betterment of his state.

Judge Atkinson has always been deeply interested in the moral and intellectual welfare of the country. He has made a critical study of the history of the nation and especially the literature of the south, which he loves with an intense passion. He has collected a great library of southern literature. He was a great student of the old outstanding politicians of the South, like Calhoun, Yancey, Lamar and Jefferson Davis. There is absolutely none of the demagogue in him. This was demonstrated by his stand on the silver question in 1896, when this part of the country went wild on sixteen to one. He was never a time server. He followed a principle, although the effect of it might be to lead him where he was out of sympathy with his surroundings and as is usual in such cases, time would demonstrate that he was right. He was an intense democrat but did not follow blindly the party of that name. In the language of one of his colleagues: "When forty years of age he had the reputation of being the most forceful political debater in the state. He has never sought to make money and has never hesitated to sacrifice his own interest for the interest of his church, community and country. I have never been associated with his equal in the trial of cases before a jury; he is, really, one of the greatest lawyers in the state, but he has, at least twice in his history, given up the best kind of a lawyer practice in order to serve his church for nothing." In 1896 when the democratic party supported free silver he discontinued his political work but became again active in democratic circles when Governor McRae, his boyhood friend, was a candidate for chief executive of the state in 1920.

Judge Atkinson and his wife are members of the Baptist church, in which they take an active interest. For forty years he has served on the Baptist state boards. He assisted in locating and building Ouachita College, of which he has been a trustee from the beginning, while for ten or fifteen years he served as president of the board of trustees. He was honored by the state Baptist convention in serving as president for three terms, beginning in 1907. He has also served on important committees of the Southern Baptist convention, and has been a wise counselor in the general affairs of the denomination in the south.

Judge Atkinson is physically strong, well proportioned and of manly bearing; always commanding respect and winning recognition, yet modest and not self-assertive. He is a fine product of the old south, courteous, cultured, versatile, strong in conviction and in true friendship, clean in morals, devout in religion and tenacious in purpose. His home is one of charming environment, brilliant conversations and true refinement. His strong and intense character, his clear perception, vigorous thinking, power of statement, clear logic and vivid imagination, his superior sentiments and penetrating and sympathetic voice, reinforced by good personal address, make him a peer of the orators of his day. Others might seek to build material structures but his ambition has been to build sturdy and strong moral and spiritual citizenry and this accounts for his devotion to church, schools and homes as the foundation stones of our civilization. No important call in the name of charity or religion or education has sought his aid in vain, and his untiring labors for the upbuilding of the moral forces of community and commonwealth have been of far-reaching effect.

JOHN W. MELTON, M. D.

Dr. John W. Melton, who is engaged in medical and surgical practice in Benton, where he is also serving as city and county health officer, was born in Slocomb, Arkansas, February 16, 1875. There he was reared upon the home farm of his father and the district schools afforded him his early educational privileges, while later he attended the public schools of Benton. When a youth of nineteen years he began teaching school and while thus engaged he employed the time which is usually termed leisure to the study of medicine. He continued his reading with good effect and entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1904. He had begun practice in his vacation periods and following his graduation he located at Alum post office, where he remained until 1914. He then removed to Slocomb, where he practiced successfully for four years or until the 8th of December, 1918, when he came to Benton, where he has since maintained his office. He found a broader field of labor here and has been very successful in ministering to the needs of suffering humanity. He is careful in the diagnosis of his cases and his broad and comprehensive understanding of the principles of medical and surgical science has enabled him to do splendid work for his patients.

On the 11th of October, 1896, Dr. Melton was united in marriage to Miss Sallie James and to them were born five children: Evan, Clara, Roy, Earl and Irene. The wife and mother died on the 15th of June, 1915. On the 24th of January, 1916, Dr. Melton wedded Miss Susan Rinehart and they have two children, John E. and Madge.

The religious faith of the parents is that of the First Baptist church and fraternally Dr. Melton is connected with the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America. Along strictly professional lines he is connected with the Saline County Medical Society and the Arkansas State Medical Society and he is now serving as city and county health officer. He has never lightly regarded the duties and obligations of his profesion but on the other hand has performed his work in a most capable and thorough manner, accomplishing splendid results, so that his fellow members of the profession speak of him in terms of high regard, while the public has come to recognize and acknowledge his ability.

DUKE FREDERICK.

Duke Frederick, attorney at law, practicing at Mena, and a veteran of the World war, was born in Hot Spring county, Arkansas, September 24, 1887. He represents an old southern family, his grandfather being Joshua G. Frederick, who was born in South Carolina and in an early day removed to Mississippi, his death there occurring during the period of the Civil war. His son, W. C. Frederick, father of Duke Frederick, was born in Mississippi in 1851 and pursued his education in that state and his medical course in Louisville, Kentucky, and at St. Louis, Missouri, for he devoted his life to the practice of medicine. For a considerable period he practiced at Lono, Hot Spring county, Arkansas, also in Mississippi, in Texas and in the Indian Territory, being engaged in professional work in Spiro at the time of his death, which occurred in 1903. Mr. Frederick's grandmother was Nancy Burleson and his great-great-grandfather, David Burleson, fought in the Revolutionary war. In early manhood he had wedded Frances V. Thompson, who was born in Tennessee in 1854. Her father was a native of that state and removed to Texas. He served with the Confederate forces in the Civil war. Mrs. Frederick survives her husband and is now living with her son, Duke, in Mena. She is a member of the Christadelphian church, while Mr. Frederick belonged to the Christian church. He was also a Mason, and an Odd Fellow, a Knight of Pythias and one of the Woodmen of the World, while his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. To him and his wife were born five children, four of whom are living: May, who became the wife of J. H. Hardin and died in Texas; Howard M., who is with the Cox Investment Company and secretary of the Polk County Investment Company at Mena; Pearl, the wife of W. C. Pritchett, a car inspector at the Kansas City shops, making his home at De Queen, Arkansas; Zillah, the wife of Jack Crews, a lumber inspector for a St. Louis lumber concern located at Horatio, Arkansas; and Duke of this review.

The last named pursued a public school education in Texas and the Indian Territory and also studied for two terms from 1907 until 1909 in the University of Arkansas. When his school days were over he entered the law office of his uncle at Stigler, Oklahoma, in 1910 and pursued his reading under the direction of J. W. Frederick, a well known member of the bar of that state. He was admitted to practice in 1912 and entered upon the active work of the profession in Stigler, where he remained as an attorney until 1916. In that year he was elected county judge and served upon the bench for a year, after which he resigned and enlisted in the regular army. He went to Camp Greene, North Carolina, where he was assigned to the Fifty-ninth Infantry of the Fourth Division and with his command went overseas, sailing on the 5th day of May, 1918. He remained on the western front for eighteen months and embarked on the return voyage in June, 1919. He was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant in April of that year. He had attended training school in France and he returned home with the Eighty-first Division. While overseas he participated in some of the hardest fighting on the western front, including the battle of Chateau Thierry, where the American forces were thrown into the gap in the front lines and turned the tide of war, putting the Germans on a retreat that never stopped until they had been forced to cross the Rhine. He was also on the St. Mihiel sector and in the Meuse-Argonne drive and although in the thickest of the fight he escaped without injury, receiving his discharge in July, 1919.

Lieutenant Frederick at once returned to Oklahoma and was appointed county attorney of Haskell county in that year. He served until January 1, 1921, and after practicing law in Stigler for one year he came to Mena, where he is now engaged in general practice, forming a partnership here with Mr. Van Hoy.

On the 30th of June, 1915, Mr. Frederick was married to Miss Rebecca B. Crittenden, who was born in Virginia and is a daughter of Henry A. Crittenden, manager of the Fish Oil Company at Sabine, Texas. They have become parents of one son, Duke, Jr., who is in his second year. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick are members of the Missionary Baptist church and he belongs also to the Woodmen of the World. In politics he has always been a democrat and has filled a number of offices, serving as justice of the peace, as county atorney and as county judge of Haskell county, Oklahoma, also as city attorney of Stigler, Oklahoma. He holds to the highest ethics and standards of the profession and in office he has always been most loyal and efficient, discharging his duties to the best of his abolity—and the public recognizes that that ability is of high order.

DR. WALTER R. CUNNINGHAM.

Dr. Walter R. Cunningham, optometrist, who has been conducting a successful business in Pine Bluff since 1911, was born in New Palestine, Indiana, September 6, 1887, and is a son of James E. and Ura (Martin) Cunningham. The father, also a native of Indiana, was a son of James Cunningham, who was born in Scotland and on crossing the Atlantic settled at New Palestine. The mother was likewise a native of the Hoosier state, while her parents were from Ireland, so that the mingled strains of Scotch and Irish blood flow in the veins of Walter R. Cunningham, who in his youthful days was a pupil in the public schools of New Palestine and of Converse, Indiana. He afterward attended the Northern Illinois College of Optometry in Chicago and was graduated therefrom with the class of 1909. After practicing his profession in the north for about two years he came to Pine Bluff in 1911 and has since been engaged in the optical business in this city. He has developed expert ability in every phase of optometry and violet ray therapy, including the grinding and shaping of lenses, and has gained a splendid patronage as the years have passed by, his business being now one of very substantial and gratifying proportions. Dr. Cunningham was appointed by Governor Charles H. Brough as one of the state optometry examiners on the State Board of Optometry, in 1919, for one term.

Dr. Cunningham was married to Miss Leicester O'Connell, a daughter of John and Emma (Montague) O'Connell. They have become parents of two children, James and John. Fraternally Dr. Cunningham is connected with the Knights of Pythias, being a past chancellor twice, and with the Woodmen of the World. He has gained many warm friends during the period of his residence in Pine Bluff and he and his family occupy an enviable social position here. In business he has steadily developed that efficiency which makes for success and in the field of optometry he has reached a point of expert skill.

DAVID C. LOVE.

David C. Love, a retired farmer residing in Dardanelle, where he now devotes considerable time to making loans, has throughout his business career displayed sound judgment and indefatigable energy and his success is the direct and merited outcome of his own labors. He was born in Desha county, Arkansas, December 2, 1845, his parents being Isaac and Elizabeth (Ferrell) Love, who were natives of North Carolina and of Arkansas, respectively. The latter was a daughter of David C. Ferrell, one of the pioneer settlers of this state. The father is mentioned more at length in connection with the sketch of Louis E. Love on another page of this work.

In the common schools David C. Love acquired his education and when but seventeen years of age entered the army for service in the Civil war. He was engaged in military duty for two years and was badly wounded in Missouri, his injuries preventing further service with the army. He was a member of Captain Reed's company, which was attached to the regiment under Colonel Wright. After the war Mr. Love returned to Desha county and secured a clerkship in a store, while later he engaged in farming for a year in that county, raising a good crop on which he realized a substantial profit. He then joined his father in Yell county and worked on the home farm there for a year or two. On the expiration of that period he purchased land in Yell county and from time to time bought and sold farms, each business transaction yielding him a good return on his investment. He is today the owner of about six hundred and fifty acres of valuable land and has disposed of some of his property. In business affairs his judgment is sound and his enterprise unfaltering and he ever displays marked capability in the cultivation and development of his fields.

In 1872 Mr. Love was married to Miss Annie E. Keaton, who was born in Virginia, a daughter of William Keaton, who was killed while serving in the Confederate army during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Love became parents of ten children, six of whom are living: Virginia, the wife of William Howell, a painter of Dardanelle; Myrtle, who is the wife of Tom Cotton, superintendent of waterworks at Dardanelle; D. A., who cultivates his father's farm; Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Evans, an express agent of Hope, Arkansas; Violet, the wife of R. W. Sibley, secretary of the Agricultural School at Magnolia, Arkansas; and Katheryn, the wife of Haynes A. Harmon, who works in a store in Dardanelle. The wife and mother died in 1918, her death being deeply regretted by many friends as well as by her immediate family. She was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Love has always voted with the democratic party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and has held different township offices, discharging the duties that devolved upon him in this connection with promptness and efficiency. In 1882 he removed to Dardanelle and for a few years supervised his agricultural interests from this point, after which he rented his farms out. He then began loaning money and he has prospered in this undertaking as he did while promoting his farming interests. In 1915 he built a nice modern residence in the city and is now largely living a retired life. He is practically a self-made man. He received limited financial assistance and by reason of his diligence, perseverance and sound judgment in business transactions has reached the plane of affluence. He is today regarded as one of the wealthiest men of Yell county and none covet him his success, owing to the fact that it has been most honorably gained and most worthily used.

THOMAS L. BOND.

Thomas L. Bond of Little Rock, who has devoted the greater part of his life to the banking business and is now secretary and trust officer of the Bankers Trust Company, was born November 2, 1874, in Haynesville, Claiborne county, Louisiana. He is a son of James J. and Mary C. Bond, the former born in Haynesville, June 14, 1870, and the latter in 1854. They were married in Louisiana in 1874, and the father devoted his life to the active work of the Methodist ministry. He was a preacher of that church for thirty years and filled various pulpits throughout Arkansas and Louisiana. His political support was given to the democratic party. He died in April, 1905, and is still survived by his wife. Their family numbered three sons and a daughter; Robert F., Thomas L., James L. and Lucy V.

Thomas L. Bond pursued his early education in the public schools of Haynesville, Louisiana, and continued his studies at Rector, Arkansas, until he had completed a high school course. He next became a student in Peabody College at Nashville, Tennessee, this being a school for teachers and he likewise studied in the Universtiy of Nashville. Taking up the profession of teaching, he was identified with the public schools of Arkansas for several years, having been superintendent of schools at Gurdon, Stevens and Yellville. He became identified with the banking business at Yellville and was formerly the cashier of the Citizens Bank of Yellville for a period of seven or eight years and is still its vice president. Following his removal to Little Rock he has been for the past ten years connected with the banking interests of this city. He was with the Bankers Trust Company at the opening of the bank on the 3rd of August, 1914, in the position of assistant treasurer and since then has been promoted from time to time until he now occupies the position of secretary and trust officer. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with every phase of the banking business and has been active in the further development and successful progress of the institution with which he is now identified.

In March, 1901, Mr. Bond was united in marriage to Miss Birdie Fisher, who was born in Pocahontas, Randolph county, Arkansas, October 29, 1874, a daughter of Mrs. Josephine Fisher, still living in Pocahontas. Mrs. Bond pursued her education in the public and high schools of Searcy, Arkansas.

Mr. Bond's military experience came to him as a first lieutenant in the State National Guard with Company E, of the second Arkansas Regiment, from 1900 until 1910. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he has served on both the county and state central committees. He filled the office of mayor while residing at Yellville and was also county treasurer of Marion county for two terms. Fraternally he is well known. He has membership with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of Honor, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Columbia Woodmen and the Ancient Order of United Workmen and in all these organizations he has filled various positions both local and state. His religious faith is that of the Methodist church and he has served as church steward, trustee, treasurer and superintendent of the Sunday school. At the present time he is the treasurer of the Winfield Methodist church of Little Rock, also treasurer of the Centenary fund of the Little Rock conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is a trustee from Arkansas for the George Peabody College of Nashville, Tennessee. During the recent war he was active in all public matters and especially helpful in the sale and handling of Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps.

EUGENE H. WINKLER, M. D.

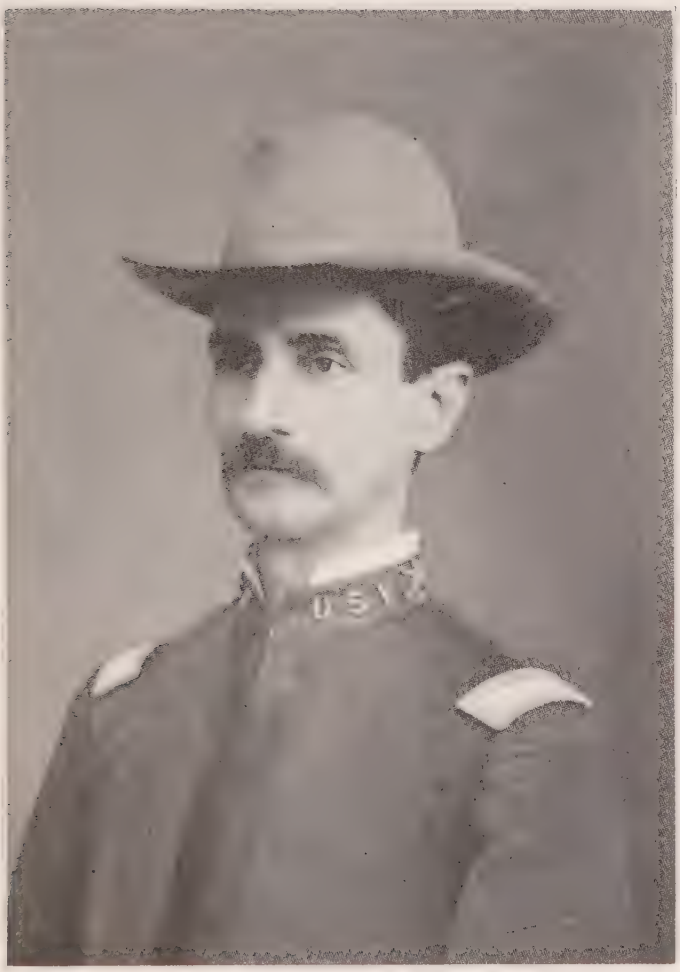
Dr. Eugene H. Winkler, a physician and surgeon, successfully practicing in De Witt, was born in Memphis, Tennessee, in 1867, his parents being Christopher and S. M. (Bond) Winkler. The father was a music professor of Nuremberg, Germany, who was educated in Munich and on leaving his native land crossed the Atlantic to the United States. He settled first in Philadelphia and later removed to West Virginia, while subsequently he became a resident of North Carolina and at length took up his abode in Jackson, Tennessee, teaching music in one of the colleges of the latter place. He afterward removed to Memphis and finally became a resident of Florida, where his last days were passed. His brother, John Winkler, was a well known music teacher in Charleston, West Virginia. The mother of Dr. Winkler was born in Memphis, Tennessee, and was a daughter of John B. Bond, one of the early settlers of the western part of that state. He was born in Virginia and lived for a time in Alabama, after which he went to Tennessee. He conducted a hotel and also acted as postmaster at a small place on the road leading to Jackson, Tennessee. To Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Winkler were born six children: William B., who is a physician; P. M., who devotes his life to farming; M. P., who is also practicing medicine; Eugene H., of this review; J. W., now deceased, and J. C. L.

Dr. Eugene H. Winkler pursued his professional course of study in the University of Tennessee, which conferred upon him the M. D. degree. He then located for the practice of medicine at Crockett's Bluff, Arkansas, after which he removed to Saint Charles, Arkansas. He spent two years as surgeon in the Marine Hosiptal at Memphis but during the greater part of his professional career has devoted his attention to private practice and has made steady progress in his chosen calling. He took up his abode and opened an office in De Witt in 1900 and through the intervening period has practiced here with good success, his professional labors being attended with splendid results, for he is most careful and thorough in the diagnosis of his cases and seldom, if ever, at fault in determining the outcome of disease.

Dr. Winkler was united in marriage to Miss Martha McKenzie of Washington, Hempstead county, Arkansas, a daughter of M. L. and E. T. (Jameson) McKenzie. Her father was a physician and a veteran of the Confederate army. To Dr. and Mrs. Winkler has been born four children: Margaret E., William L., Eugene D. and Jessie Sue. The son, William L., married Willine Johnson and resides in De Witt. He saw service overseas in the World war as a member of Company A of the One Hundred and Twelfth Field Battalion. Margaret E. is the wife of F. W. Ventress of Chicago. Dr. Winkler and his family belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, in which he is serving as a steward and fraternally he is connected with the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Tribe of Ben Hur. He has in his possession a constitution of Masonry, printed in 1723 in London, England, and is justly proud of this little volume.

CAPTAIN PERCY W. MOSS.

America has so recently passed through the great World struggle that the interested attention of the people turned also to the records of those who have served in other wars in this country. Among the number was Captain Percy W. Moss, who won his title by active military duty in the Civil war. He was born in Tennessee, September 12, 1847, and was therefore but fifteen years of age when in 1862 he enlisted in the Twentieth Tennessee Regiment. Later he was transferred to Company B of the First Kentucky Cavalry and served for two years with the army. He sustained two wounds and for several weeks he was held a prisoner. When the war was over



CAPTAIN PERCY W. MOSS

Captain Moss returned to Nashville, Tennessee, where he continued to live for several years and then came to Arkansas about 1876. Locating in Forest City he conducted a newspaper there for a brief period and then removed to Harrisburg, where he was editor of the Arkansas Tribune for a number of years. He also conducted a newspaper, The Press, at Paragould. Following this he established the Thayer Tribune, at Thayer, Missouri. He never ceased to feel an interest in military affairs and in 1898 he was serving as a captain in the state militia. It was in that year that the Spanish-American war broke out and he was captain of Company D of the Second Arkansas Infantry, in the struggle which ensued, but he did not get to go to Cuba. When the war was over he continued in newspaper work and was identified with the publication of papers for thirty-five years. His connection with the journalistic interests of the state brought him a wide acquaintance and all who knew him entertained for him warm regard. He was ever a faithful follower of Masonic teachings and equally loyal in his connection with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Captain Moss was the father of four sons who served in the World war. One of these, Opie Moss, was band master on the Battleship South Dakota. A second son, Shelton H. Moss, was electrician on the Cleveland. A third son, Morris H. Moss, became a bugler of Company C, with an ammunition train of the Eighth Division, and John Moss was in the depot brigade at Camp Funston, Kansas.

It was in 1876 that Captain Moss was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Sloan, a daughter of Judge G. W. Sloan, and they became the parents of the following named: Opie, who was previously mentioned; Edna M., who is the widow of George W. Walbert, who was born in Pennsylvania and was reared in Indiana, becoming the president of the Mount Olive Stave Company of Batesville, Arkansas, and also president of the Sales Service Commission Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. He died in that city April 17, 1917, having lived there for several years prior to his demise. Joseph W., the third of the family, is located at Earl, Arkansas; Maggie died at the age of three years. For his second wife Captain Moss chose Nannie Davis and there were six children of the second marriage: Aurie, who is living in Jonesboro, Arkansas, and is the wife of Robert R. Langley; John D., a resident of San Diego, California; Morris, who is in San Francisco; Shelton, who was a first-class electrician on the Albany and was stationed in Siberia; and Derosey C., who is living in Jonesboro, Arkansas; and Virgil, living in Hot Springs. The record of the sons was certainly a credit to the family name. They followed in the footsteps of their father in an expression of bravery and were equally loyal to the cause which they espoused. Captain Moss was widely and favorably known in this state, possessing many sterling traits of character which established him high in the regard of all with whom he was brought into contact.

THEODORE F. JONES.

Theodore F. Jones, who for almost four decades has made his home in Fayetteville and was long prominently known by reason of his activity in the real estate, loan and abstract business, is now practically living retired, enjoying in well earned rest the fruits of his former toil. He was born in Breckinridge county, Kentucky, May 30, 1844, and is a son of William B. and Mary (Stith) Jones, both of whom were natives of Virginia, the mother having been born in Bedford county, that state. They were married in Kentucky, having become residents of Elizabethtown at a very early day. The father followed the occupation of farming in Kentucky until 1865, when he removed to Missouri and purchased a tract of land in Nodaway county. He remained upon that farm for a number of years and then rented his land, removing to Maryville, where his remaining days were passed, his death occurring in 1880. His widow survived for a few years and died at the home of her son, Theodore F., in Fayetteville, December 11, 1884. They were the parents of twelve children, but only Theodore F. is now living. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church and in politics he was originally an old-line whig, while later he gave his support to the democratic party. He was well known as a capable business man and was quite successful in the supervision of his business affairs. He represented one of the old families of Virginia, being a son of James Jones, who was a native of that state, where he spent his entire life as a planter and slave owner. His son, William B. Jones, was a soldier of the War of 1812, having been born October 30, 1795, so that he was a youth of seventeen when he joined the army. The grandfather of Theodore F. Jones in the maternal line was Benjamin Stith, who was born in Bedford county, Virginia, and went to Kentucky at a very early period in the development of that state. He became a prominent lawyer and well-to-do planter.

Theodore F. Jones acquired his education in the public schools of Kentucky and started out in life by peddling fruit on the street. He afterward went to Maryville, Missouri, in 1865 and there he engaged in general merchandising. He was also employed in the office of the county clerk for a period of five years and later he took up the occupation of farming and stock raising, winning a substantial measure of success when thus identified with agricultural interests.

It was in September, 1883, that Mr. Jones came to Fayetteville and here he established a real estate, abstract and loan business, with which he has since been connected. He purchased a half block of ground on West Center street and removed into a large brick home, which was built in 1858 and which he still occupies. About 1904 he largely put aside the active cares and duties of business life and has since lived practically retired, enjoying in well earned rest the competence which his labors had previously brought to him.

On the 17th of June, 1869, Mr. Jones was united in marriage to Miss Emma J. Alexander, who was born in Nodaway county, Missouri, a daughter of Joseph E. Alexander, who was a prominent and influential citizen of that state. He there served as sheriff and also as county judge and he was extensively engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Jones became the parents of seven children, of whom four are yet living: Mrs. Bertie J. Duncan, residing on a farm in Washington county; Doswell, who is efficiency engineer with Peet Brothers of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Effie J. Bickel, whose husband is a civil and construction engineer of Kansas City; and Ralph R., an electrician of Fayetteville.

Mr. Jones is well known in Masonic circles. He has taken the degrees of lodge and chapter and is a past master of the former. His political views are in accord with the teachings of the democratic party and he has served as school director and as a member of the town council. While he has retired from activity in the real estate and loan field, he is interested in the Northwest Arkansas Lumber Company and is the owner of valuable bank stock. He started out in life empty-handed and in fact it was necessary for him early to incur an indebtedness, but dependent upon his own resources, he has steadily worked his way upward and is most highly respected by reason of what he has accomplished and owing to the straightforward and progressive business methods that he has ever followed. Those who know him—and he has a very wide acquaintance—esteem him most highly and he is today one of the honored as well as one of the venerable citizens of Fayetteville.

CHARLES A. FIGLEY.

Strong purpose and unfaltering enterprise are factors in the success of Charles A. Figley and his labors have ever been of a character that has contributed to public progress and prosperity as well as to individual advancement. He is today classed with the substantial representatives of industrial activity in Judsonia, being the secretary and treasurer of the Enterprise Box Company. The story of his life is the story of steady progression and his course has at all times been a commendable one, well worthy of emulation. Mr. Figley was born in Ohio, August 21, 1872, and is a son of David and Rosana (Weaver) Figley, both of whom were natives of the Buckeye state, where the father followed the occupation of farming, owning land in Columbiana county. In addition to tilling the soil he engaged in stock raising. Both he and his wife are now deceased. Mr. Figley gave his political endorsement to the republican party and always kept well informed on the questions and issues of the day. His wife was a member of the Baptist church. Their family numbered four children: Viola, the wife of Frank Smith of Iowa; J. A., living in Wichita, Kansas; Alice, the wife of J. F. Smith, who is process man for a packing company of Kansas City, Missouri; and Charles A.

The last named pursued his education in the high school at Wichita, Kansas, and in the Southwestern Business College of that city, there pursuing a commercial course which well qualified him for life's practical and responsible duties. He started out in the business world as an employe in a lumber office in El Dorado, Arkansas, occupying the position of bookkeeper and stenographer with the Daniel Ramsey Lumber Company. He afterward removed to St. Louis, Missouri, where for five years he was employed in a mill office and for six years remained in the St. Louis office of the same company, which had its mill at Perla, Arkansas. On the expiration of that period he came to Judsonia and acquired an interest in the Enterprise Box Company in 1910. This was at the time a small factory, but with the passing years he has greatly developed the business and has remodeled the factory, installing modern machinery and securing the latest equipment. The business today employs an average of seventy-five men throughout the year, and Mr. Figley is contributing in marked measure to the success of the undertaking as secretary and treasurer of the firm. He now devotes his entire time to the box factory, which finds a market for its product throughout the state. The company owns its timber land and Mr. Figley is familiar with every phase of the business from the time when the standing timber is secured until the finished product is placed upon the market. The company was incorporated in 1910 with a capital of six thousand dollars and today has a surplus of twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. Figley was united in marriage to Miss Maude Wilson, a native of Arkansas, and they now have two children, Charles A. and Dorothy, both at home. Mr. Figley has always voted with the republican party since reaching adult age and is a loyal champion of its principles. His religious belief is that of the Baptist church. He has many admirable traits of character, displaying marked reliability and energy in business, loyalty and progressiveness in citizenship and fidelity and trustworthiness in every relation of life. Thus it is that his friends can be numbered by the score, while public opinion at all times accords him a place of prominence as a citizen of White county.

JOHN JOSEPH HEALEY.

John Joseph Healey, president of the State Funeral Directors' Association and conducting an extensive undertaking business in Little Rock, as senior partner in the firm of Healey & Roth, is a native of the city in which he makes his home, his birth having occurred on the 7th of November, 1878, his parents being Patrick J. and Marie (Dineen) Healey, both of whom were natives of Cork, Ireland, the former born in 1839, and the latter in 1858. The father came to the United States in 1857 and took up his abode in Little Rock in 1869. Here he remained for many years and throughout the period of his residence here gave stalwart political allegiance to the democratic party. He was married in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1876, to Marie Dineen and they became the parents of two sons and four daughters, all of whom are living. The death of Patrick J. Healey occurred in Little Rock in 1898 and his widow died in the capital city in 1904, having survived her husband for six years.

John Joseph Healey obtained his education in the public and parochial schools of Little Rock and early in life turned his attention to the undertaking business, for which he thoroughly qualified through broad experience and study. In 1904 he formed his present partnership with Mr. Roth and the firm is accorded a liberal patronage. Mr. Healey stands for all that is advanced and progressive in the line of his chosen vocation and his high position is indicated in the fact that he has been elected to the presidency of the State Funeral Directors' Association.

On the 3d of July, 1907, Mr. Healey was married to Miss Stella Coots, who was born in Little Rock, November 9, 1885, and attended the public schools of this city. They have three children: John Albert, born in 1910; Mary Ellen, born in 1914; and Maurine, born in 1919. Mr. Healey is a Catholic in religious faith and he belongs to the Knights of Columbus, of which organization he has served as grand knight. He also has membership with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, has been vice president of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and is a most loyal supporter of any cause which he espouses. His faithfulness to duty whether of a public or private nature is one of his marked characteristics and this has constituted a strong element in the growth of his business and the attainment of his success as the years have gone by.

JOSEPH KIRBY MAHONY.

The attractiveness of El Dorado as a place of residence and the value of her business and professional opportunities are indicated in the fact that many of her native sons have here remained after reaching adult age, feeling that substantial success can be obtained here as readily as in other sections of the country. One of the native born residents of El Dorado is Joseph Kirby Mahony, who first opened his eyes to the light of day on the 5th of October, 1884, his parents being Edmond and Mary R. (Klopher) Mahony, of whom mention is made on another page of this work, in connection with the sketch of Joseph K. Mahony's brother, Dr. Mahony. In the acquirement of his education Joseph K. Mahony attended Cleary's Training School at Fordyce, Arkansas, and afterward became a student in Webb Brothers Training School at Bellbuckle, Tennessee. He next entered the University of Arkansas, which conferred upon him the Bachelor of Arts degree at his graduation with the class of 1907. He then pursued a short law course in the University of Chicago during the summer of 1911. This was after he had begun the practice of law, while previously he had largely mastered the principles of jurisprudence as a student under the preceptorship of his brother, Judge Emon O. Mahony, and had been admitted to the Arkansas state bar in February, 1908. He then entered into partnership with his brother, Judge Mahony, and practiced under the firm name of Mahony & Mahony until the death of the judge on the 28th of August, 1920. In November following, Joseph K. Mahony formed a partnership with Judge H. S. Yocum, under the firm style of Mahony & Yocum, and this connection has since been maintained. His law practice has ever been extensive and of an important character. He prepares his cases with great thoroughness and care, is clear in his reasoning and logical in his deductions. He fights his forensic foe in the open and wins his victory through a clear presentation of the facts and the law applicable thereto. In 1916 he became prosecuting attorney of the thirteenth judicial circuit of Arkansas and filled that position for four years.

On the 27th of November, 1912, Mr. Mahony was married to Miss Roberta Armstrong, a daughter of David E. Armstrong, one of the old pioneer settlers and retired business men of El Dorado. Mr. and Mrs. Mahony have two children: Emon Armstrong and Pattie Sneed. The parents are members of the Presbyterian church and take a helpful interest in advancing the work of the church and promoting the moral development of the community at large. With many public interests Mr. Mahony has been closely, actively and helpfully associated. He is now serving as a member of the board of trustees of the University of Arkansas, having acted in this important position for a period of eight years. The cause of education has ever found in him a stalwart champion and his labors have been an effective force in promoting the welfare of the schools. He served as chairman of the Union county chapter of the Red Cross when it was first organized and was chairman of the defense committee of his county and special agent for the exemption board. He took a most active and helpful part in all war work and in days of peace he is equally loyal to the best interests of community, commonwealth and country. He belongs to the Sigma Nu, a Greek letter fraternity, and he is a member of El Dorado Lodge, No. 1129, B. P. O. E. That his has been a well-spent life is indicated in the fact that many of his stanchest friends are those who have known him from his boyhood to the present, and that he is one of the foremost attorneys of southwestern Arkansas is indicated in the extensive clientele accorded him.

ADELBERT STEELE HAYS.

Adelbert Steele Hays, member of the Russellville bar, was born in Titusville, Pennsylvania, February 25, 1872, and is a representative of one of the old families of the Keystone state. His grandfather was William Hays of Venango county, Pennsylvania, where he followed farming throughout his life. His son, David Hays, was also a native of the Keystone state and there remained until after his marriage to Miss Ella Dale, who was born in Pennsylvania and was a daughter of John A. Dale, who was also a native of that state and served as the first sheriff of Forest county, Pennsylvania. He likewise filled the position of judge of the court of common pleas. He was prominent as a railroad builder and as a banker and in many ways aided in advancing the welfare and progress of the state. Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. David Hays remained in Pennsylvania for a number of years. They removed to Logan county in 1879, and for a period of eight years Mr. Hays engaged in teaching school in Ellsworth. He departed this life in Plumerville, Conway county, Arkansas, in 1890, after which his widow came to Russellville and is now living with her son. Mr. Hays gave his life to the educational profession, and was educated at Allegheny College in Meadville, Pennsylvania, and Bloomington (Illinois) Normal College. He was a prohibitionist in his political faith and fraternally was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while in religious belief he was a Methodist, his wife belonging to the same church. They had a family of six children, four of whom are living: A. S., of this review; Dr. J. F. Hays, a practicing physician of Russellville; Mrs. May Neal, a widow, living at Dover, Arkansas; and Mrs. D. A. Gibson of Russellville, whose husband is sheriff of Pope county.

A. S. Hays was educated in the schools of Logan county, attending the Ellsworth high school, which his father had established. He afterward pursued a law course at the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, in 1901-2. He had been admitted to the bar, however, in 1896 and in the legal, as well as in the pedagogic, profession he soon made for himself a creditable name and place. As a teacher he had won an enviable position, acting as principal of the high school at Dover for five years, at Atkins for two years and at Russellville for one year. It was while engaged in teaching that he entered upon the study of law and qualified for practice in the courts. He now devotes his entire time to his law practice, which is extensive and of an important character. He is truly a self-made man. His father died, leaving him in limited financial circumstances and he largely reared the family, keeping them together. He is now attorney for the People's Exchange Bank and for the Southern Anthracite Coal Company, the D. & R. Railway Company, the Bridge & Turnpike Company, the Arkansas Light & Power Company and the Russellville Telephone Company. He largely specializes in corporation law and his knowledge of that branch of jurisprudence is comprehensive and exact. He practiced as a partner in the firm of Brooks, Hays & Martin, one of the most prominent law firms in the state, up to the time of his election to the office of prosecuting attorney of the fifth judicial district of Arkansas, in 1912. Both of his partners are deceased. In 1914 he formed a partnership with J. B. Ward, under the firm name of Hays & Ward, and they now have a very extensive practice, being considered two of the most capable and prominent attorneys in northern Arkansas.

On the 10th of October, 1897, Mr. Hays was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Butler, who was born in Logan county, Arkansas, a daughter of Dr. W. H. Butler, who practiced medicine in that county for a period of forty years. He was a native of Tennessee and was graduated from Vanderbilt University. Mrs. Hays was educated in Ouachita College and in the University of Nashville and prior to her marriage engaged in teaching school. She has become the mother of one son, Brooks Hays, who is a senior in the George Washington University Law School and is president of the law class. He is a graduate of the State University of Arkansas and twice represented that institution in intercollegiate debate. He trained at Fort Sheridan and at Camp Pike for service in the World war, and is a very promising young man.

Mr. and Mrs. Hays are members of the Missionary Baptist church, with which he has been identified for the past thirty years and for fifteen years he has served as clerk and treasurer of the Church Association, while for four years he was moderator. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason and he is also connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen and has served as worshipful master of the Masonic lodge. He has also attended several sessions of the Grand Lodge and is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a democrat and from 1901 until 1903 he served as chief clerk of the Arkansas house of representatives. He has been a member of the State Board of Charities, and was county examiner of schools of Pope county from 1906 until 1912. He acted as prosecuting attorney of the fifth judicial district from 1912 until 1916 and was a delegate to the national democratic convention in the latter year and to the constitutional convention in 1917-1918. He devotes his entire time to law practice at the present writing and while he is undoubtedly not without that laudable ambition which is so great an incentive for capable service on the part of the individual, he nevertheless considers the pursuits of private life as in themselves abundantly worthy of his best efforts and is shaping his course to that end. He is a member of the State Bar Association and also owns considerable real estate and farm lands.

REV. BASIL EGLOFF, O. S. B.

Rev. Basil Egloff, O. S. B., pastor of St. Boniface Catholic church of Fort Smith, was born in Wettingen, Switzerland, in 1865, and is a son of Alois Egloff. He early determined to enter the priesthood and pursued his education in Einsiedeln Seminary, in Switzerland, after which he came to the United States in 1887 and entered the monastery at Subiaco, Arkansas, which is a branch of the parent house of the Swiss-American Congregations, O. S. B. He continued his studies at Subiaco until ordained to the priesthood in 1890. His first pastorate was at Nevada, Missouri, where he was assigned to St. Mary's church. In 1911 he was transferred to Fort Smith as pastor of St. Boniface church and through the succeeding decade has here remained, laboring earnestly, zealously and with excellent results for the upbuilding of the church. This congregation was organized in 1886. The first pastor was the Rev. Pius Boehm, now located in North Dakota. He was succeeded by the Rev. Placidus Zahn, who died at St. Meinrad, Indiana. The third priest of the church was the Rev. Bonaventure Binzegger, who is deceased, and he was followed by the Rev. G. Ulrich, who is also dead. Then came the Rev. Pius Zwyssig, now of Switzerland, and in succession came the Rev. Thomas Keller, who died in Germany, the Rev. Boniface Spanke and the Rev. Basil Egloff. For a decade the latter has ministered to the spiritual needs of his parishioners. There are now seven hundred and forty members of the church and an excellent parochial school housed in a two-story brick building, which was begun in 1911 and was erected at a cost of fifteen thousand dollars, instruction being given in the usual common branches of learning by the Benedictine Sisters. There is also a musical conservatory conducted in connection therewith, in which lessons are given in piano and violin.

JAMES T. HICKS.

The demise of James T. Hicks occurred on the 27th day of January, 1909. He had passed the fifty-first milestone on life's journey and was well known throughout the southwest, his business activities bringing him in connection with many. He was born in Magnolia, Arkansas, July 11, 1857, and spent the period of his boyhood and youth at that place, acquiring his education in the public schools. He started out in the business world at a comparatively early age, serving as a clerk in a store. He afterward came to Hope, where he engaged in general merchandising on his own account and thus became an important factor in the commercial development of the city. Later he was a stockholder of the Texas Produce Company of Texarkana and went upon the road for that corporation as a traveling salesman. He thus represented the business for many years and was so engaged at the time of his death. He was a man of genial nature, of social disposition, kindly, generous and just, and his sterling qualities won him warm friendships wherever he went.

On the 2d of March, 1886, Mr. Hicks was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Boyett, a native of Alabama, who came to Arkansas in young womanhood. Mr. Hicks belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and also to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and he enjoyed the highest regard of his brethren of these fraternities. There were no startling phases or spectacular episodes in his life, but his genuine worth of character, his business ability and his loyalty in public affairs made him a citizen highly esteemed by all who knew him.

WILLIAM THOMAS CAMPBELL.

According to its own standards every life attains a measure of success. Time, place and circumstances largely determine the goal to which the average life aspires. When William Thomas Campbell stood beside his widowed mother and watched marauding soldiers burn their home and most of their earthly possessions, in the valley of Bryants Fork, Douglas county, Missouri, in 1863, the chasm between playful childhood and years of responsibility was bridged in an hour. The sight of her white face, quivering with the terror of loss and helpless despair for her little ones, the cries of his two baby sisters as they hung to her, set fire to those qualities of heroism which ever after marked him as the uncompromising champion of orphans, the widowed and the unfortunate.

"Tom" Campbell, as he was affectionately known all over Sharp county and surrounding territory, was born in Perry county, Tennessee, January 25, 1853, to William Simeon and Mary Susan (Stewart) Campbell. All family records were burned in the fire mentioned above. But on the father's side tradition has it that the lineage went back to the redoubtable William Campbell who turned the tide of the Revolution at King's Mountain. His mother came from the Stewarts of Kentucky.

Soon afterward this Campbell family emigrated to Douglas county, Missouri, and located near Bakers Mill, on Bryant Fork. There they were hewing a home out of the wilderness when sudden death came to William Simeon Campbell as a result of becoming overheated while chasing stock from his fields of corn in August. This occurred when Thomas was seven years old. Being strong and sturdy, he made a hand in the crop the next year and never missed making a crop for fifty-three successive years. After the home was burned they loaded their possessions into a two-wheeled ox cart and trekked through the "Irish Wilderness" into Arkansas, landing at the home of the Jacksons at old Flat Rock Church, where Cave City now stands, in Sharp county.

Not having the means with which to farm alone, Thomas was hired out to well-to-do farmers east of Flat Rock. Prominent among those for whom he worked were George McLaine, Tom Stewart, Ral Dawson, Giles Baker, James Wasson and Joshua Wann, down the historic valley of Reeds Creek. No man in Sharp county ever befriended Tom Campbell so far and continuous as Josh Wann. Tom's life was one of grilling toil; but he finally got a chance to attend subscription school and learned so rapidly that Mr. Wann gave him special opportunity to go to school. He loved to read so well, and had such a passion for it, that he subscribed for the Missouri Republican, now the St. Louis Republic, and was the first person to receive a newspaper regularly from the Reeds Creek post office, at that time the only post office in the southern part of Sharp. So assiduous a reader and student did he become that at the age of twenty he supplied for teachers, when they chanced to become ill, in several schools. At his death he was on the pension list of the St. Louis Republic subscription list because of having been a continuous subscriber for thirty-five years. So interested was he in the outside world through newspapers, periodicals and books that he was the cause of two prominent post offices in Sharp county being established. He circulated the petitions, carried on all the correspondence and secured the location of both Poughkeepsie and Bengay.

At the age of twenty-one he was elected constable of Washington township in Sharp, serving two terms. He had many experiences with an element that had long defied the laws, which required coolness and courage. He was then elected justice of the peace for that township, serving eight years continuously. He afterward served as justice four years in Strawberry township and later four years in Big Rock. He was frequently urged to become a candidate for county judge but as often declined, giving as a reason that he preferred to serve his immediate neighbors and remain with his family. In public life he was regarded as a leader who could never be bribed, cajoled or coerced into anything that was not open and aboveboard. He was frequently foreman of grand juries, chairman of public gatherings over the county, and chairman or secretary of several county political conventions. His rulings were seldom challenged. A lifelong democrat, he followed with keen relish the careers of public men in both state and national affairs and was regarded by his friends as the best informed man in his section of the county. .

Although not affiliated with any church, his sympathy and belief were with the Baptists. He was a devoted student of the Bible and believed fully in its inspiration, in the sovereignty of God and the divinity of Christ.

At the age of twenty Thomas Campbell was married to Eliza Clementine Tompkins, near what is known as the Big Rock, in Big Rock township, Sharp county. To this union fourteen children were born. Eight of these reached maturity: William Simeon of Fayetteville, Arkansas; Mrs. Lula Ethelda Smith of Evening Shade, Arkansas; Mrs. Mary Susan Watkins of Jonesboro, Arkansas; Lee of Poughkeepsie, Arkansas; Mrs. Lottie Abee of Holdenville, Oklahoma; Mrs. Nona Brandon of Fort Smith, Arkansas; Miss Bertha, with the American Embassy in Berlin, Germany; and Stanley, at present on the road, without definite address.

In July, 1914, Mr. Campbell died from a sudden illness caused primarily by sunstroke, on his farm near Poughkeepsie. He was ill only three weeks—just three weeks from plowing in his crop, so active was his life. He and his good wife sleep in quiet, secluded Spotts cemetery near Poughkeepsie, but a few miles from the scene of all his manhood's home activities. The impress of their lives will long be felt. "Tom" Campbell was the very embodiment of intelligent energy, high purposes and unquestioned integrity and the soul of humor and honor. He delighted in the company and fellowship of friends. Mrs. Campbell was godmother to the whole countryside and her death in 1907 was mourned far and wide. Neither of them ever turned deaf ears to the needy or the cry of distress.

WILLIAM SIMEON CAMPBELL.

The worth of a life is best measured by the quality of its impress upon the heart life of a community and by the things to which it stands uncompromisingly committed. Judged in this way, William Simeon Campbell of Fayetteville well deserves to rank with the most prominent and representative residents of his part of the state because he has made valuable contribution to the progress and upbuilding of the community along many commendable lines. He is today one of the prominent business men of Fayetteville. Captains of industry become such only after they perfect an organization the rank and file of which is safe and dependable. The great drama of life would often become a sorry spectacle were it not for those who shift the scenery, give the cues, see to every detail so very vital to success. In short, there must be somebody who sticks to the job, stays on while the restless tides ebb and flow, and makes home a reality. This classifies William Simeon Campbell. He is the eldest of fourteen children born to the late William Thomas and Clementine Campbell. His birth occurred November 9, 1873, near Poughkeepsie, Sharp county, Arkansas. On his father's side he traces his lineage back to that sandy-haired demon of a fighter who helped turn the tide of the Revolution at King's Mountain—William Campbell. As a Tompkins, his mother's blood carries him back into old England. But lineage went for little in the hard, lean years of his youth in which he struggled with poverty and primitive environment. His boyhood knew the torture of daily toil and the joy of field, and unquestioned freedom.

Until eighteen years of age Mr. Campbell attended school only about two months in the year, and that in the hot summer period between crop making and harvest time. The little temple of learning in which he pursued his studies was a log schoolhouse with no equipment and but a meager supply of books. At eighteen years of age he had his first lessons in grammar. In that year he was permitted to attend school at Evening Shade for four months and in the following summer he taught his home district school. The following winter he attended school at Cave City for six months and then secured a first-grade license to teach, but after teaching one more school he became a clerk in the store of John M. Smith at Imboden, Arkansas, this marking the first step in his business career. A part of two years was spent there as bookkeeper and salesman. He then continued his education as a student in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville, spending the years 1896-97 and 1897-98 there. As a university student he made excellent grades in most of his work and while there was a member of the Garland Literary Society, which elected him its treasurer and afterward secretary. He was a member of the Glee Club, an officer in the Cadet Battalion, was president of the student Y. M. C. A. and prominent in all literary and religious activities of student life. Financial conditions made it necessary for him to leave school and he resumed teaching, which he followed for five years in Sharp, Lawrence and Jackson counties.

On the 17th of March, 1900, Mr. Campbell was married to Miss Blanche Dora Graham at Tuckerman, Arkansas. To this union were born two children, William Errington and Blanche Maude. After a year spent in Center, Sharp county, where he taught school and also built a large home for one of the extensive landowners of that place, Mr. Campbell determined to make Fayetteville, Arkansas, his home. He removed there with his wife and six-weeks-old son, taking with him a few scanty pieces of furniture and five dollars, arriving on the 20th of March, 1901. Space will not permit a recital of how he and his brave, faithful wife overcame obstacles, such as sickness, meager pay for services and the difficulties of securing a position in an old town. After working for several months at odd jobs about University farm he secured a place with A. C. Hamilton & Company, large apple shippers, for whom he began work as box-maker. However, his employers recognized his worth and capability and he was soon taken into the office as assistant to the bookkeeper. His advancement from that time was steady. He became successively bookkeeper, cashier and assistant manager, and when Mr. Hamilton took trips abroad he was left in entire charge of the business for several months at a time. For eleven years he was more closely associated with Andrew Claude Hamilton—that prince among business men of Arkansas—than any other man. At different periods he was placed in entire charge of branches of the business at Rogers, Arkansas, and Galveston, Texas. He also made extensive trips to big jobbing centers in the south in the interest of A. C. Hamilton & Co. At this writing, in the winter of 1921-22, he has been with the firm for eighteen years and never had a written contract. He is one of the most widely known buyers in the apple markets of the Ozark region. So closely did he keep in touch with conditions surrounding the business of his section that when the railroads sought to raise rates on apple products going out of Arkansas, the packers in assembly chose him to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission as their spokesman in behalf of the industry.

When the World war involved this country, Mr. Campbell was made food administrator for the city of Fayetteville and surrounding towns. He was chosen chairman of the second Red Cross drive and as such secured three times the amount of money asked for. He was also chairman of the only Salvation Army drive made during the war period. Throughout all the Red Cross, bond, and stamp drives he was in constant demand as an inspirational speaker over the county and was one of the Four-Minute speakers on public occasions in Fayetteville. When it became necessary to make a second drive on the War Stamps quota in Arkansas, Mr. Campbell was chosen field man for the second congressional district and toured the counties arousing the people with his stirring addresses, and effectively aiding in existing organization. His activity in this work won him the sobriquet of "War Stamps" Campbell. He is now president of the Chamber of Commerce of Fayetteville.

In boyhood days Mr. Campbell witnessed many stirring scenes and events in political life, when such men as William M. Fishback, Simon P. Hughes, James K. Jones, James H. Berry, and their political opponents set forth state and national issues at country crossroads. These things and wide reading afterward, created in him an abiding interest in affairs of state. He has always voted with the democrats, believing the tenets of that party embody the best interests of the masses, and never misses an opportunity to exercise his right to vote. Before leaving Sharp county he refused to enter politics for preferment to office, though strongly urged to do so.

Early in life Mr. Campbell united with the Baptist church and has always made his religious duties first in his life. For a number of years he has been a deacon in the First Baptist church at Fayetteville and is secretary of the board of deacons. He is also superintendent of the Sunday school of this church and his wife is superintendent of the primary department. He has likewise served as educational secretary of the Washington County Sunday School Association.

Believing that home ownership is a primal requisite to loyal citizenship, the Campbells own and joyfully maintain a comfortable home in the "Athens of Arkansas." Out from this home William Errington, after his school life in ward and high school and a technical course at the State University, has already gone forth to measure his mettle in the business world and is at present located at Forth Smith. Blanche is ardently doing her best in high school.

Such in brief is the life history of William Simeon Campbell. Those who read between the lines will understand the struggle he has made—the victories he has won. He has left his impress upon the business development and enterprise of his adopted city and even more has he left it upon the life of the community through his influence in behalf of intellectual, social and moral progress, holding at all times to the highest standards and ideals of this kind.

CHARLES T. DRENNEN, M. D.

One of the most distinguished representatives of the medical profession in Arkansas is Dr. Charles T. Drennen, who for twenty-seven years has been engaged in practice in Hot Springs. His labors have been attended with a gratifying measure of success and with the passing years his practice has steadily grown in volume and importance as he has demonstrated his ability to cope with disease. He was born in Blount county, Alabama, July 2, 1864, a son of Dr. Charles and Elizabeth M. (Wilson) Drennen, who were also natives of that state. The father was for many years a prominent physician and surgeon of Birmingham, Alabama, but retired from the profession about 1903 and went to Orlando, Florida, where he became the owner of a valuable orange grove, upon which he continued to reside until his demise, which occurred in 1914. The mother, however, is still making her home there, having reached the age of eighty years.

After completing his public school course in Birmingham, Alabama, Charles T. Drennen began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of his father, afterward attending the old Louisville (Ky.) Medical College for a year and the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati, now the University of Ohio, for a similar period. He then entered the Rush Medical College of Chicago, Illinois, and was graduated from that institution in 1885, five months prior to his twenty-first birthday. Returning to his native state, he located at Birmingham, where he became associated in practice with his father—a relationship that was maintained for nine years. In September, 1894, Dr. Drennen of this review came to Arkansas, establishing an office at Hot Springs, and has remained a resident of this city. He has thoroughly identified his interests with those of the city and assisted in building the first training school for nurses in Hot Springs, having for the past sixteen years been president of the institution. He was also one of the organizers of the College of Physicians & Surgeons at Little Rock, Arkansas, and during the life of the college filled the chair of dermatology and syphilology. He has also become interested in financial affairs and was one of the organizers of the Citizens National Bank, of which he is now a director.

In 1898 Dr. Drennen was united in marriage to Miss Marian Tillman of Columbus, Georgia, and they have a large circle of friends in the city. In his political views the Doctor is a democrat and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Central Methodist church. Fraternally he is identified with Hot Springs Lodge, No. 380, B. P. O. E., and Centennial Lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Hot Springs, and he is also a member of the Business Men's League. He was the first secretary of the first Federal board of the Hot Springs reservation and assisted in forming its medical laws. He has remained throughout his life a close and discriminating student of his profession, thus greatly promoting his knowledge and skill, and in his chosen field has made continuous progress. He is a valued member of the Hot Springs and Garland County Medical Societies; the Arkansas State Medical Society, of which he served as president in 1906 and 1907; the Southern Medical Association, of which he has been councillor; the Tri-State Medical Society, which honored him with its presidency in 1899; the Mississippi Valley Medical Society; and the American Medical Association. He has made wise use of his time, his talents and his opportunities and has gained that preeminence which follows superior ability and concentrated effort. He is a man of high purposes and ideals and his life work has been one of broad usefulness.

Robert L. Buffalo, filling the position of cashier of the Bank of England and a well known resident of the little city of England, has so directed his efforts as to win substantial success in business and to gain the respect and high regard of those with whom he has been brought into contact through social as well as business relations. He is a native son of Lonoke county, born near England in 1880, his parents being L. L. and Clarkee Buffalo. The father was a native of North Carolina and on leaving that state removed to Mississippi after the Civil war. About 1868 he came to Lonoke county, settling ten miles north of Carlisle. He had served as a private in the Confederate army during the war and in days of peace he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits. His father was also a native of North Carolina and removed thence to Holly Springs, Mississippi.

Robert L. Buffalo was educated in the local schools and in Ouachita College. He afterward served for two years in the Philippines, being engaged on scout duty in northern Luzon while in the service. In 1901 he returned to the United States and devoted his attention to farming in Lonoke county until 1905, when he became associated with the firm of Eagle & Company, merchants of England. Subsequently he obtained a position in the Planters Bank of England and in 1914 entered upon active connection with the Bank of England, in which he is now the cashier, proving a capable and obliging official and one who has gained much popularity with the general public by reason of his uniform kindliness and consideration to the patrons of the bank.

Mr. Buffalo was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Harper, a daughter of J. T. Harper of White county, Arkansas, and they have become parents of one child, Marion. In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Buffalo are connected with the Baptist church, contributing generously to its support and taking an active interest in the various lines of church work. Fraternally Mr. Buffalo is a Mason and loyally follows the teachings and purposes of the craft. During the World war he served as chairman of the united war work campaign and did everything in his power to further the interests of the government and promote the success of the allied army. His life has been spent in this section of the state and the fact that many of his stanchest friends are those who have known him from his boyhood to the present time is proof of the sterling traits of his character and the upright course in which he has walked.

CHARLES R. JONES.

Among the successful business enterprises of Siloam Springs is the Jones Supply Company, automobile dealers, of which Charles R. Jones is the vice president and general manager. He is a man of determined purpose and marked strength of character who has made wise use of his time, talents and opportunities and his enterprise has brought him steadily to the front. He is a native of Kansas, his birth having occurred in Chautauqua county on the 14th of June, 1876. His parents were J. A. and Martha (Burr) Jones, the former a native of North Carolina, while the latter was born in Illinois, and in that state their marriage occurred. In 1872 they removed to Kansas, where the father followed the occupation of farming until his removal to Benton county, Arkansas, in 1891. He purchased a farm in this county, which he continued to cultivate and improve until 1915, when he came to Siloam Springs, where he is still living. He was a member of the Baptist church and a republican in his political views. Mr. and Mrs. Jones became the parents of seven children, of whom six survive: Dee, who is connected with milling operations in Kansas and Oklahoma; Charles R., of this review; J. L., a prominent contractor and builder of Galena, Kansas; Effie, who married A. W. Tweggs, a well known farmer of Maysville, Arkansas; T. B., who is associated in business with the subject of this review; and Olga, the wife of C. C. Phipps, a farmer residing near Maysville, Arkansas. The maternal grandfather Burr was born in Canada but in early life became a resident of Illinois, where he died when quite young.

In the schools of Kansas and Arkansas Charles R. Jones acquired his education and he remained on the home farm until his twenty-first year, when he went to Texas, continuing a resident of that state for three years. His next removal took him to Missouri, where he worked in the mines, and in 1901 he arrived in Siloam Springs, which place he has since made his home. He secured a situation as clerk in a hardware store at a salary of twenty-five dollars a week and was thus employed for a number of years. In 1907 he engaged in the plumbing business, which he afterward converted into a supply business, while later he turned his attention to the handling of automobiles, also conducting a garage, and is now active along that line. He handles the Chevrolet and Buick cars, regarded as among the best machines on the market; and owing to his aggressive business methods, close application and straightforward dealing, has succeeded in building up a large trade, maintaining two places of business. His interests are conducted under the style of the Jones Supply Company, which has been incorporated for fifty thousand dollars, and he is acting as vice president and general manager of the enterprise, displaying marked executive ability and progressiveness in this connection.

In 1897 Mr. Jones was united in marriage to Miss Ollie Harris, a native of Siloam Springs and a daughter of Wesley Harris, a pioneer of this locality. He served as deputy United States marshal and was killed while making an arrest. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have a family of four children: Jewell, who is attending the Christian College at Columbia, Missouri; Ralph and Earl, who are high school students; and Paul, who is a pupil in the sixth grade of the grammar school.

Mr. Jones is a member of the Christian church and fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Masons, in which latter organization he has attained the Knights Templar degree. He is a stanch republican in his political views and for three terms has served as councilman, making a most creditable record in that connection, his influence being at all times on the side of advancement and improvement. He is numbered among those business men whose advancement has had its root in industry, perseverance and unfaltering determination. He received no financial assistance when he started out in life but has gradually worked his way upward as he has proven his worth and capability, until he now ranks with the leading business men of Siloam Springs, while his sterling traits of character have won for him the unqualified esteem of all with whom he has been associated.

JAMES S. KOLB, M. D.

The medical profession has many capable representatives in Clarksville, where Dr. James S. Kolb has successfully practiced for a number of years, his ability being demonstrated in the splendid results which have followed his labors. A native of Mississippi, he was born in Lowndes county, October 20, 1864, and comes of Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Milton Kolb, was born on the Emerald Isle and came to America with his parents in early life, the family home being established on a farm in Mississippi. There he spent his remaining days, his attention being given to agricultural pursuits. His son, J. E. Kolb, was born in Mississippi and having arrived at years of maturity was there married to Miss Minerva Stewart, likewise a native of that state and a daughter of Joe Stewart, who spent his life as a farmer of Mississippi. On leaving their native state Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Kolb removed to Texas and subsequently became residents of Oklahoma, while in 1878 they came to Arkansas. Mr. Kolb was a carpenter and mechanic, who worked at his trade in Johnson county, showing decided proficiency along various lines, especially in cabinet work. All business and personal considerations, however, were put aside when the country became engaged in Civil war and he served for four years with the Confederate army. He belonged to the Baptist church, while his wife held membership in the Methodist church. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party. To Mr. and Mrs. Kolb were born six children, five of whom are living: W. H., who served as county clerk and as county judge and was active in politics for fifteen years, is living on a farm in Mississippi; Dr. Kolb is the second of the family; Belle is the wife of G. T. Thomas, a farmer of Mississippi; M. V. is a blacksmith and carpenter, residing at Plainview, Yell county, Arkansas; and W. Manus is a school teacher of Oklahoma, being now connected with the high school at Poteau. While serving in the army the father was captured and wounded several times. He was fairly successful in business.

James S. Kolb was educated in the public schools of Johnson county and in the high school at Clarksville and for eight years devoted his attention to farming before he entered upon the study of medicine. He was graduated from the medical department of the State University at Little Rock in 1892 and entered upon active practice in Johnson county, where he continued until 1907. He then pursued a postgraduate course at New Orleans and in 1909 took further postgraduate work in the Electrical Therapeutic College in Chicago. He then began practice in Clarksville in January, 1903, and has here practiced since, save when pursuing his postgraduate studies. He keeps in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress and is familiar with all the latest scientific researches and discoveries of value to the profession.

In 1887 Dr. Kolb was married to Miss Mollie V. Clark, who was born in Johnson county, a daughter of C. P. Clark, an early physician of this county. They became parents of seven children, six of whom are living: Erla, who married Will Ward and after his death became the wife of E. M. Burt, foreman with the Marion Machine Company at Eureka, Kansas; Hallie, the wife of W. J. Morrow, Jr., an attorney of Nowata, Oklahoma; Virgil, a farmer, trader and stock dealer of Clarksville; Davis, who is studying law at Lebanon, Tennessee; Myrtle, a student in the College of the Ozarks; and James, who is also pursuing his studies in that institution. All of the children are graduates of the high school of Clarksville. The wife and mother departed this life April 27, 1908, and in September, 1908, Dr. Kolb was married to Allie Coyle, widow of Dr. Coyle of Coal Hill, Arkansas. She died in February, 1909, and Dr. Kolb was married in 1910 to Miss Anna Fontain, a native of Howard county, Arkansas, and a school teacher prior to her marriage.

Dr. and Mrs. Kolb are members of the Presbyterian church, in the work of which they take an active and helpful part, the doctor serving as one of the elders. He is a Royal Arch Mason and both he and his wife belong to the Order of the Eastern Star. He is likewise connected with the Knights of Pythias. He has passed through all of the chairs of the Masonic lodge. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party. His membership relations along professional lines are with the Johnson County and Arkansas State Medical Societies, the Medical Society of the Southwest, the Tri-State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Society and the American Medical Association and he has been president of the county organization. He devotes his entire time to his professional duties and has given considerable attention to surgery as well as to medical practice. He has been very successful in a financial way and he deserves great credit for what he has accomplished as he learned his alphabet after reaching the age of eighteen years. Prompted by a laudable ambition he has utilized every opportunity to advance his knowledge not only along professional but along various lines and today is a man of broad general information. Success has attended his labors and he now owns a large business building in Clarksville, together with farming interests in the county and he has made every dollar that he possesses. He has never been afraid of hard work and close application and his life record indicates what can be accomplished through individual efforts and should serve as a source of inspiration and encouragement to others.

W. R. CHERRY.

Honored and respected by all, there is no man in Logan county who occupies a more enviable position in business and financial circles than W. R. Cherry, banker and farmer, who enjoys the respect and confidence of his fellowmen not only by reason of the success he has achieved but also owing to the straightforward business policy which he has ever followed. He comes to Arkansas from the neighboring state of Tennessee, his birth having occurred in Trenton, on the 14th of August, 1857, his parents being James L. and Sarah (Morris) Cherry. His grandfather, Robert Cherry, was also a native of Tennessee and in 1859 came to Arkansas, owning a farm near Clarksville, where his remaining days were passed. His father was a native of England and the grandmother of W. R. Cherry, in the paternal line, was of Scotch birth. James L. Cherry was born in Davidson county, Tennessee, September 10, 1835, and died March 10, 1886. His wife, who was born in the same county, January 3, 1833, survived him until January 10, 1918. They were married in Obion county, Tennessee, and in 1859 came to Arkansas, settling near Clarksville. At the outbreak of the Civil war James L. Cherry enlisted and served for four years, being with the command of General Cabell a part of that time. In 1867 he rented a farm in Logan county and in 1874 purchased land, remaining thereon until the time of his death, his attention being given to the further development and improvement of the property. After losing her husband Mrs. Cherry went to live with her son, W. R., in Paris and here departed this life. They had three children, of whom W. R. Cherry is the eldest, the others being: Mrs. M. E. Blair, a widow, living at Van Buren, Arkansas; and Mrs. Malissa Craig, the wife of J. R. Craig, a farmer of Paris, Arkansas. Mrs. Cherry was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Cherry, a well-read man, liberally educated for his day, gave stanch support to the democratic party but was never an office seeker.

W. R. Cherry was educated in the Booneville high school and in the State University, which he entered in 1879, being graduated with the class of 1882. For two years he taught school and following his father's death devoted two years to farming, purchasing the old homestead in 1886. In 1888 he was elected circuit clerk and filled the position for one term. In 1891 he organized the Bank of Paris and served as cashier from the beginning until the 14th of January, 1919, his labors being a most potent element in the continued success and growth of the institution. Later he assisted in organizing the First National Bank, which bought the Bank of Paris. He has long been prominently known in financial circles and his course has been an element in the material development of the state through the loan department. At the same time he is a conservative banker, who carefully safeguards the interests of depositors and while active in the management of banking institutions he enjoys to the fullest extent the confidence of those with whom he has dealings. He is now largely giving his attention to farming interests and he also conducts a general insurance business.

In 1889 Mr. Cherry was married to Miss Myrtle Linthicum, who was born in Charleston, Arkansas, a daughter of Dr. Rufus Linthicum, who for several years was a practicing physician in Arkansas but later removed to Kentucky, where his last days were passed. Mr. and Mrs. Cherry have become parents of five children: James L., the eldest, now a farm demonstrator, living at Helena, Arkansas, was graduated from the State University in 1913. He served with the Eight Hundred and Eighth Pioneer Infantry during the World war, going into training at Camp Pike and crossing to France in August, 1918. He returned home the following June, after ten months spent overseas, in which he served with the rank of first lieutenant; Rufus L., the second of the family, was graduated from the State University of Arkansas in June, 1918, and also joined the army, being stationed at Camp Grant and at Camp Pike. He is now head bookkeeper with the First National Bank of Paris; Robert M., a graduate of the State University of the class of 1919, was the first to enter the army from Logan county, enlisting before he had attained his majority. He was in training at Camp Pike, was commissioned second lieutenant and later first lieutenant and then captain. He was made instructor in the school of fire at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, where he continued until after the armistice was signed. He was also at Fort Douglas for a time and later at Fort Bliss, Texas, after which he was sent to Fort Sill. He is now with the General Electrical Company at Schenectady, New York; Blanche is now a junior in the State University; Marie was also a student in the State University but her health failed and she was obliged to return home. She is, however, a graduate of the high school at Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Cherry have long occupied a prominent position in social circles in Logan county and their home has always been attractive by reason of its warm-hearted hospitality. They are active and helpful members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Cherry belongs also to the Knights of Pythias, in which he has served as chancellor commander. In politics he has always been a democrat. His record is highly commendable and should serve as a source of inspiration and encouragement to others, for he is a self-made man in the truest and best sense of the term, having worked his way steadily upward by reason of his diligence and determination. He is today not only interested in the First National Bank of Paris but also has stock in five or six other banks and in the telephone company. He has been a member of the educational board of Logan county for the past two years. He is a man of liberal education, of broad vision and keen sagacity, highly esteemed for his thorough honesty and integrity, and his life record proves that success and an honored name may be won simultaneously.

J. BEN WILLIAMS.

J. Ben Williams, occupying an enviable position in commercial and industrial circles, is now the president of the Fort Smith Vehicle & Machinery Company. He has gained a substantial measure of success as the years have gone by and at the same time he has won a good name, which is rather to be chosen than great riches. The integrity and enterprise of his business methods is acknowledged by all and steadily he is forging toward the goal of prosperity. Mr. Williams is a native of Sebastian county and a son of J. D. and E. J. (Bugg) Williams. The father followed farming for many years, but is now living retired at the age of seventy-eight.

Spending his youthful days under the parental roof, J. Ben Williams obtained his education in the public schools of Sebastian county and started out in the business world as proprietor of a small grocery store south of Fort Smith. Later he removed to this city and became identified with the Reynolds-Davis Grocery Company, a wholesale concern, with which he remained for two years. At length he embarked in his present business, ambitious that his labors should more directly benefit himself. The Fort Smith Vehicle & Machinery Company was organized in 1914, opening its establishment at 1105 Garrison avenue, with Mr. Williams as the president and N. C. Meals as secretary and treasurer. At first the firm handled vehicles and machinery—buggies, farm implements and heavy farm machinery. In the course of time it broadened the scope of its interests to include shelf and heavy hardware. For two years the company remained at 1105 Garrison avenue and then removed to North Second street, where business was carried on for three years. Finally it secured its present spacious quarters on South Ninth street, where it has a floor space fifty by one hundred and sixty feet. The growth of its trade is indicated in the fact that the original store was but twenty-three by one hundred and forty feet. The firm's capitalization at the beginning was forty-five hundred dollars and today the business is capitalized for twenty-two thousand dollars. The store is one of the substantial commercial interests of Fort Smith and the business has been developed along gratifying lines, showing a steady and healthful growth.

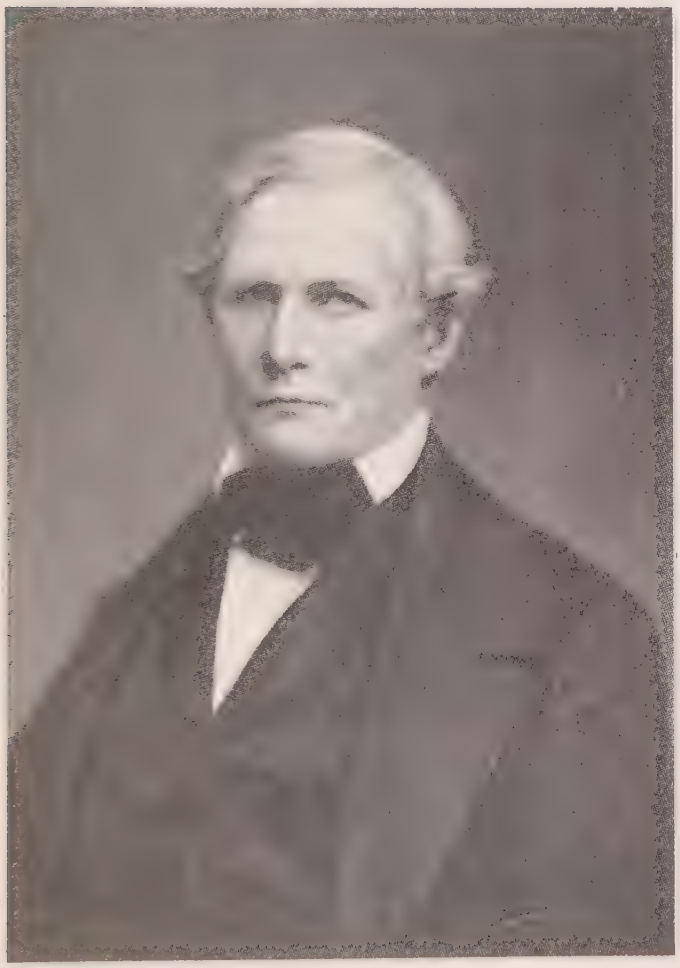
Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Miss Lyntice Shaw and they have become parents of five children: Hugh, Bernice, Lucille, Bessie, and Rosalee.

Mr. Williams belongs to the Business Men's Club. He enjoys the good will and high regard of his contemporaries in the trade circles of Fort Smith and his career is illustrative of the fact that activity does not tire but on the contrary hardens and gives resisting power.

MAJOR WILLIAM HANEY GAINES.

Major William Haney Gaines, who reached the notable old age of ninety-seven years, was one of the honored pioneer residents of Arkansas, coming to this state six years before its admission into the Union. His life history was closely associated with the development and progress of the commonwealth and for many years he was one of the honored citizens of Hot Springs. He was born near Charleston, in Augusta county, Virginia, June 30, 1797, his parents being Abner and Elizabeth (Mathews) Gaines, both of whom were of English descent. There were three Gaines brothers who came from England at an early day, one being Major Gaines' grandfather, and one of his sons was Abner, whose birth occurred October 8, 1766, in Virginia. On leaving Virginia, Abner Gaines, the father of Major Gaines, took up his abode in Kentucky, establishing his home there a few years after his marriage. Here he taught school and carried on farming. He lived in Woodford county and his death occurred October 30, 1839. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Mathews, was born in Augusta county, Virginia, December 29, 1774, and they were married December 10, 1792. The Mathews family came from Ireland to the new world in 1739. Several of the male representatives of the name won distinction in connection with the Indian and Revolutionary wars and the records which they made were most creditable and enviable. Mrs. Elizabeth (Mathews) Gaines survived her husband for a long period and died on the 30th of November, 1861. They were parents of twelve children, eight sons and four daughters: James M., John P., William H., Mary W., R. M., Benjamin P., A. W., A. K., A. L., Elizabeth H., M. P., and Harriett B.

Their son, William Haney Gaines, acquired a common school education, but his opportunities in that direction were quite limited, owing to the fact that he was reared on the Kentucky frontier before many schools had been established in the section in which he made his home. He was truly a self-made man and deserved much credit for what he accomplished. When in his early teens he began earning his living by working at the blacksmith's trade, at which he served a term of apprenticeship and was also obliged to attend school two months longer in order to learn how to keep his accounts. He continued to work at his trade in Boone county, Kentucky, for about twelve years and in addition to his blacksmithing he manufactured wagons, carts and tools of all kinds, which he shipped to the south, being widely known as one of the leading manufacturers of that section of the country. He also worked on a flatboat on the Mississippi river. He was farseeing and sagacious and his broad vision enabled him to recognize something of what the future had in store for the great state of Arkansas. He determined to locate in this state, then a largely unsettled region, and on one of his trips down the Mississippi he landed in Chicot county during a period of high water. He marked trees on the land beyond the high water and when the water subsided he secured the aid of a surveyor, found out to whom the land belonged, and purchased quite an acreage, which he afterward greatly increased.



MAJOR WILLIAM H. GAINES

Major Gaines first visited Hot Springs in the year 1835 and following his marriage to Miss Belding in 1849 he established his home here. He had charge of the Belding claim to the hot springs and in the early days, in connection with business relative thereto, he made many trips to Washington, D. C., on horseback, at a time when it required three weeks to cover the distance one way. He was a man of great physical endurance and courageously met all of the hardships and trials incident to frontier life. It was six years prior to the admission of Arkansas into the Union that he settled in Chicot county, which was then a very sparsely settled region. He afterward took up the occupation of farming and cotton raising, which he carried on extensively until after the slaves were set free, at which time he sustained heavy losses. He was the owner of one hundred and sixty-five slaves and when deprived of their labor he could no longer make farming profitable. He also lost considerable through endorsement of notes for friends, but his courageous spirit enabled him soon to gain a new start. Following the establishment of his home in Hot Springs, he resolutely set to work to retrieve his lost possessions. The Belding property which he represented was in litigation for many years but finally went to the government and it was through Major Gaines' influence that the suit was closed. As the years passed Major Gaines did much to improve Hot Springs and from time to time he made further investments in real estate, until his property holdings were most extensive, making him one of the wealthiest men of the county. In the later years of his life his attention was largely given to land speculation and the purchase of real estate and the rise in property values, owing to the settlement and development of Arkansas, brought him a very substantial measure of prosperity. He was the builder of the Gaines block, a fine brick structure.

Major Gaines was twice married. On the 10th of June, 1819, he wedded Alethea Early, who was born in Boone county, Kentucky, and they became the parents of two children: Whitfield and Virenda, the latter the wife of George W. Sappington. Mrs. Gaines died in 1828, and in the spring of 1849 Major Gaines wedded Miss Maria Belding, by whom he had seven children: Frances L., who became the wife of C. S. Williamson; Augusta, the widow of S. H. Stitt; William H.; Louisa C., the wife of E. S. Blasdel of Los Angeles, California; Mary P., of Hot Springs; Albert B.; and Abner L., who resides in England.

Major Gaines, while closely connected with the development and progress of the state by reason of his business activity, was never an office seeker and the only position of that character which he filled was that of postmaster at Gaines Landing on the Mississippi river, when the district was worth about five dollars per quarter acre. He lived to a notable old age, commanding the respect and confidence of his fellowmen by reason of his broad humanity and generosity. He gave the ground on which the First Episcopal church was built, also the ground for the Methodist church. After a long and useful life, covering almost a century, he responded to the final summons on the 1st of June, 1894. His history is inseparably interwoven with that of Hot Springs and the state, where from pioneer times he bore an active and helpful part in promoting the substantial growth and progress of the commonwealth.

SAMUEL B. PFEFFER.

Samuel B. Pfeffer, a well know representative of business enterprise at De Valls Bluff, where he is engaged in dealing in lumber, is a native of Pennsylvania, his birth having occurred in Luzerne county in 1854, his parents being Henry and Mary (Kishbaugh) Pfeffer. The father was born in Germany and in early life came to the new world. He was a cabinetmaker by trade and at the time of the Mexican war put aside all business interests and considerations and joined the army. He was married in Pennsylvania to Miss Mary Kishbaugh, a native of that state, and it was in Pennsylvania that his death occurred.

Reared in his native state, Samuel B. Pfeffer pursued his education in the public schools of Pennsylvania and continued to make his home within the borders of that commonwealth until he reached the age of twenty-seven years, when he removed to the southwest, becoming a resident of Clark county, Arkansas. In 1880 he took up his abode at De Valls Bluff, where he became a contractor, and in 1904 he established his present business, which is that of handling building materials, paints and commodities of similar character. His business career has been of quiet character but marked by a steady progression that indicates the wise use which he has made of his time and opportunities. Step by step he has advanced and today is at the head of a large and growing business which returns to him a gratifying annual income.

Mr. Pfeffer was united in marriage to Miss Ada Paty, a native of El Paso, Illinois, and they are now parents of one daughter, Bessie. Mr. and Mrs. Pfeffer have membership in the Presbyterian church and are loyal to its teachings and generous in its support. Mr. Pfeffer belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and in politics he is independent, but was elected on the democratic ticket to the office of mayor. His administration of public affairs was characterized by a most progressive spirit and earnest devotion to the general good and he is at all times ready to render any needed service in relation to the progress and upbuilding of the city of his adoption.

JAMES RICHARD FLETCHER.

The qualities which are interwoven into the life record of James Richard Fletcher and have brought him to a notable point in the business world as manager of the real estate department of the Bankers Trust Company of Little Rock are the qualities of industry, determination and perseverance. No matter in how much fantastic theorizing one may indulge as to the cause of success he must ultimately reach the place where he realizes that these three elements are indispensable to honorable progress in business. Mr. Fletcher has been identified with real estate interests in Little Rock since 1890 and few men are so thoroughly competent to fill the position which he now occupies. He is a native son of Little Rock, born in the capital city, April 15, 1878. His parents were Richard and Lillie (Butler) Fletcher. The father was born on a farm in Pulaski county, Arkansas, and spent his life in this section of the state, becoming well known as a cotton broker in Little Rock. His political endorsement was given to the democratic party. He died in Little Rock in 1907 and is still survived by his wife, who was born in Little Rock, a daughter of Milton Butler, a native of Tennessee, who became a resident of the Arkansas capital in 1850. To Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher were born a son and two daughters, all of whom are living.

The public schools of his native city afforded to James R. Fletcher his educational opportunities and he early became identified with real estate interests. Through the intervening years he has carefully studied every phase of the business, has kept thoroughly informed concerning the Little Rock realty market and by reason of his adaptability and enterprise has been enabled to secure for his patrons the property desired. He has negotiated many important realty transfers and his experience, broad and valuable, and his thorough reliability, led to his election for the office of director of the real estate department of the Bankers Trust Company in 1917. Since that time, or for a period of four years, he has continued to act in this responsible position.

In 1907, in Little Rock, Mr. Fletcher was married to Miss Mary C. Collins, who was born in this city and educated in the public schools, passing through consecutive grades to her graduation from the high school. Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher attend the First Methodist Episcopal church and he belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and The Maccabees. In politics he is a democrat. During the war he took active and helpful interest in everything pertaining to the support of the government and the cause of the American and allied armies in the field and did active work in connection with all Liberty Bond and War Stamp drives. He is thorough and painstaking in everything that he undertakes and in business affairs or in the discharge of his public duties he never fails to reach his objective.

REV. EDWARD ROBERT STEEL.

An analyzation of the life work of Rev. Edward Robert Steel, pastor of the First Methodist church at Pine Bluff, shows him to be a man of scholarly attainments, of broad human sympathy and of unfaltering zeal in his chosen field. Wherever he is known his acquaintances bear testimony to the value of his service as a potent agency in the moral progress of the race. Arkansas is proud to number him among her native sons. His birth occurred in Sevier county in 1865, his parents being Judge T. G. T. and Phoebe (Turrentine) Steel. The father was born in the Shenandoah valley of Virginia, while the Turrentines came originally from Shelbyville, Tennessee, the father of Mrs. T. G. T. Steel being the Rev. Archie Turrentine, who was a well known preacher throughout that section of Tennessee. He and three of his brothers came to Sevier county, Arkansas, about 1836 and for an extended period he engaged in preaching the gospel throughout that locality. Two of his sons were killed while serving with the Confederate forces in the Civil war. The Steel family came originally from Ireland, the progenitors of this branch in the new world first settling near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, while subsequent removals were made by later generations of the family to Mississippi, Virginia and North Carolina. Judge T. G. T. Steel, the father of Edward Robert Steel, was of the Virginia branch of the family and in early manhood devoted his life to the preaching of the gospel, which he followed for many years after coming to Arkansas, being actively identified with the work of the church in this state. At length he entered the legal profession and became a leader at the bar. He achieved notable distinction as a contemporary of Garland and other distinguished lawyers of that period. He also served in the Arkansas house of representatives and for many years sat upon the bench as circuit judge. His life was a contributing factor to the work of upholding the legal and moral status of the state. His early labors in the ministry and his later work as lawyer, jurist and lawmaker have placed his name high on the roll of those who have formulated the policy and directed the destiny of the commonwealth. To Judge and Mrs. Steel were born six children: Archelaus C., who was a prominent attorney and leading citizen of Sevier county and is now deceased, became the father of nine children, namely: Rupert, who is engaged in business in Sevier county; Kate, who is the wife of Dr. Norwood and lives at Lockesburg; Jessie, the wife of J. Holcomb; Will, who is widely recognized as a prominent attorney and public-spirited citizen of Texarkana; Frank, an abstract man residing at De Queen; Custer, who is assistant cashier of the Bank of Lockesburg; Mary, the wife of Hugh Latimer of De Queen; Irene, who is the wife of L. E. Hinton of Shreveport, Louisiana; and Allene, the wife of Edward Patterson of St. Louis, Missouri. James S., the second of Judge Steel's family and one of the foremost citizens of his community, is now circuit judge of the ninth judicial district. To him and his wife have been born seven children: Robert, who prepared for law practice and was serving as prosecuting attorney in the state of Oklahoma at the time of his death; Lyda; Percy, who is engaged in law practice at Ashdown, where he has also done valuable public service; Maggie, the wife of Wesley Everett; Thomas and Kay, who are business men of Oklahoma; and George, a leading lawyer and valued citizen, who is serving as prosecuting attorney in his father's district, this being a rare instance of a father and son in the offices of judge and prosecuting attorney, respectively. Alice, who is the widow of W. C. Park, reared a family of four sons, as follows: Charles, a practicing physician of De Witt, Arkansas; Ernest, who is deceased; Thaddeus, who is engaged in business at Lockesburg; and Fay, who served with the rank of lieutenant in the United States army during the period of the World war and who is now cashier of a bank at De Queen. William A. is the pastor of the Park Avenue church in Hot Springs and deserves mention as one of the oldest divines in the Little Rock conference, having given nearly forty years of faithful and devout service to the people of the state. To him and his wife were born three children: Mamie, the deceased wife of Fred Venable; Jeanette, the wife of Booker Latimer; and Hudson, who received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Hendrix College and is now serving as superintendent of schools at Stamps, Arkansas. Fannie Steel gave her hand in marriage to W. H. Collins and has five children: Abe, a prominent lawyer of De Queen, who served at one time as prosecuting attorney; Mrs. Alice Moon; Mrs. Nell Evans; Mrs. Pauline Rice; and Henry, who is attending school. Edward Robert was the youngest of the household. Endowed by nature with keen intellectual force, the representatives of the family have used their talents wisely and well, winning distinction in their various chosen fields of labor and contributing to the upbuilding and progress of the communities with which they are identified.

The Rev. Edward R. Steel was educated at Hendrix College and, having qualified for the ministry, accepted his first charge on Peytonville Mission in the Little Rock conference. Later he was assigned to duty at Center Point circuit by the conference and afterward became pastor of Asbury church at Little Rock. Subsequently he was appointed chaplain of the state penitentiary at Little Rock and studied prison reform and methods in many places throughout the country, attending the international prison congress held at Indianapolis, Indiana, and other gatherings of a similar nature. He instituted the movement for the establishment of a reformatory for boys under twenty-one years of age thus to separate first offenders from the older and hardened criminals. He advocated many effective measures that have been accepted in modern penal institutions and he was a very popular chaplain, having been successful in interesting many of the men in his teachings and in producing higher standards among them. He was later transferred by his church to the Arkansas conference at Bentonville and built the church at that place. He was afterward sent to Fayetteville, where he completed the church and raised funds for the final payment thereon. His next charge was on the Fort Smith district and subsequently he was pastor of Central church, Fort Smith, for four years. He then served for four years at Conway and planned and began the present church building at that place. Eight years ago he came to Pine Bluff and inaugurated the movement and raised the funds which led to the building of a beautiful new church edifice here at a cost of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. The church has not only prospered in a material way but has been a most potent force in furthering the moral development of the community. Its work is splendidly organized in all of its departments and the church has ever been deeply interested in foreign missions, maintaining a missionary, the Rev. J. C. Hawk, at Chang-chau, China. The First Methodist church of Pine Bluff has also built a church at Sao Paulo, Brazil, and is now building a hospital at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Mr. Steel has the generous and helpful cooperation of his people and splendid results are being accomplished as the years pass by.

Rev. Edward Robert Steel was united in marriage to Miss Lydia Burrow, a daughter of the Rev. I. L. and Rebecca Burrow. They had one son, Edward, who died at the age of six months, and the mother died in 1891. Mr. Steel has since married Kate Tyler, a daughter of Joseph K. and Harriet (Marsh) Tyler of Buffalo, New York. The children of this marriage are: Richard T. and Samuel T., who are students at Hendrix College of Conway; and Marshall T. and David M., who are high school students in Pine Bluff. That Rev. Mr. Steel is a man of scholarly attainments has been shadowed forth between the lines of this review. He possesses executive power, an analytical and logical mind, combined with the gift of effective speaking and his labors are proving a most vital force in promoting the moral progress of the communties in which he has lived and labored.

GEORGE B. ROSE.

Directing his course in the line of his profession and his duty, George B. Rose has won distinction as an eminent representative of the Little Rock bar, where he is practicing as senior partner in the firm of Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough. His name is equally widely known in literary circles and he is recognized as one of the most competent art critics of the southwest. An excellent pen picture of him may be given by quoting the words, by which he has been characterized by another noted lawyer of national reputation, "the finished gentleman, the careful student, the heir of traditions of learning and breeding, of scholarly instincts and resources." Born in Batesville, Arkansas, on the 10th of July, 1860, he is a son of U. M. and Margaret T. (Gibbs) Rose, and the brother of William Rose of Independence, Missouri, who is the author of the Tin Owl Stories published in 1901.

George B. Rose was but five years of age when his parents removed from Batesville to Little Rock, Arkansas, and in the capital city he has since made his home. He was educated in St. John's College in this city and afterward studied law under the direction of his father, being admitted to the bar in January, 1879. Through the intervening period of forty-two years he has remained at the Little Rock bar and during this period has argued many cases. On the 10th of July, 1881, he was taken into partnership by his father, the style of the firm being U. M. and G. B. Rose. That firm continued until March 13, 1893, when Judge W. E. Hemingway resigned his position on the supreme bench to join it and the style of Rose, Hemingway & Rose was then assumed. On the 5th of October, 1905, the firm of Cantrell & Loughborough was merged with it, and the firm name of Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough was then adopted and has since been maintained. The law firm has been in existence for a longer period almost than any other in the southwest. In 1819 Robert Crittenden, the first acting governor of Arkansas, founded the firm. He admitted Chester Ashley to a partnership, and in his turn he took Judge Watkins as his associate. The latter admitted Judge Rose to a partnership, which continued to the time of Judge Watkins' death. No one better knows the necessity for thorough preparation than Mr. Rose and no one more industriously prepares his cases than does George B. Rose. He is always courteous and deferential toward the court, kindly and forbearing toward his adversary and his course in the court room is characterized by a calmness and dignity that indicates reserve strength. From the outset of his professional career he has never seemed to lose sight of any essential point bearing upon his case and his analysis of the fact is clear and exhaustive. He is a very able writer, his briefs always showing wide research, careful thought and the best and strongest reasons which can be urged for his contention, presented in cogent and logical form and illustrated by a style unusually lucid and clear. He is now at the head of a very extensive clientage, practicing as senior partner in the law firm of Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough and his high professional standing is indicated in the fact that in 1902 he was honored with election to the presidency of the Arkansas State Bar Association.

On the 2d of May, 1882, Mr. Rose was united in marriage to Miss Marion Kimball of Little Rock, daughter of Judge Eben W. Kimball, who was born at Rindge, New Hampshire, August 31, 1828, a son of Ebenezer D. and Hannah (Wallace) Kimball, the Kimballs being a family well known in New England and of colonial descent. Eben W. Kimball was educated in the free schools of Salem, Massachusetts, and at Harvard University and read law in the office of David Roberts of Salem, author of Roberts on Admiralty Law. He was admitted to the bar in Massachusetts in 1849 and in 1864 removed to Indianapolis, Indiana, becoming a resident of Kansas City, Missouri, in 1872. On account of his health he removed to Little Rock in 1874 and there resided until retiring from business. He was a republican in politics but never an office seeker, confining his efforts to the practice of his profession, in which he won marked success. He was also a man of substantial literary attainments. In 1857 he wedded Mary Carlton, daughter of Nathaniel Stowers of Salem, Massachusetts. She died in 1880, leaving two children: Marion, now the wife of Mr. Rose; and Horace, a well known attorney of Spokane, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Rose became the parents of two children: a daughter, who died in infancy; and a son, Clarence E., who is an electrical, mechanical and civil engineer.

Mr. and Mrs. Rose have long occupied a commanding position in the social circles of the city. Mr. Rose has largely found his recreation in travel and keen joy has come to him in the study of art. He is particularly familiar with the art of the Renaissance period and is the author of a volume entitled, Renaissance Masters—art of Raphael, Michelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci, Titian, Correggio, Botticelli, Rubens and Claude Lorraine. This work was prepared and published by him in 1898, 1900 and 1908. He issued another volume called, The World's Leading Painters, in 1911, and his authorship includes numerous articles in reviews on literature and art. He has also published in a large handsome volume a few of the most notable of his father's addresses, prefaced by an able memoir of his father. Both this memoir and the addresses have a literary style comparable to the style of Lord Macauley. Through wide reading George B. Rose has ever kept in touch with the men of master minds of all ages and his comprehensive general information has also been an element in his success as a lawyer, enabling him to understand men and their motives. He is a member of the Arkansas State Bar Association, the American Bar Association and the International Law Association and likewise has membership in the Society of Arts of London, and the National Art Club of New York. He speaks French, Italian, Spanish and German.

JOSEPH F. W. MORRISON.

Joseph F. W. Morrison, member of the bar of Stuttgart, practicing as a partner in the law firm of Chapline & Morrison, was born in Anderson, Indiana, in 1890, his parents being S. P. and Mary E. (Hobson) Morrison. The father was a mechanical engineer of widely recognized ability and power in his profession. He came to Stuttgart to supervise the construction of the first rice mill erected here. He readily solved difficult and involved engineering problems and his capability gained him marked professional prominence.

His son, Joseph F. W. Morrison, completed his education in the Kentucky State University. In young manhood he decided upon law practice as his life work and accordingly directed his efforts and study to that end. When he had completed his law course in the Kentucky University he returned to Indiana and for a time was associated with a prominent corporation law firm of Indianapolis. The year 1914 witnessed his arrival in Stuttgart, where he has remained, successfully practicing his profession here continuously, save for the period of his military service. In June, 1916, Mr. Morrison went to the Mexican border with the Second Regiment of Arkansas state troops as a private. He was ultimately released from duty there but in August, 1917, entered the service in connection with the World war, going to the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Logan H. Roots. There he won a commission as captain and was first assigned to duty with the Thirty-second Division. Later he was transferred to the Thirty-ninth Division and was afterward sent to Fort Sill, where he pursued a course in small arms. He was then again assigned to the Thirty-ninth Division as a member of Company M, One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Regiment, and was sent across the water with this division to France. He pursued a course in the French school of arms and became instructor to the regiment. After the armistice he was assigned to special duty with General Kreger, who was judge advocate general. He rendered most efficient aid to his country in this great crisis and some months after the cessation of hostilities returned to his native land.

Mr. Morrison was united in marriage in 1917 to Miss Oakley Thomas, a daughter of J. O. Thomas. They occupy an enviable position in social circles in Stuttgart, where they have a legion of warm friends. Mr. Morrison is prominent in the American Legion, serving as county organizer of that society and he was a member of the national executive committee in the year 1920, also serving on the national Americanization committee. He is in full sympathy with the high purposes of the order, which is attempting in days of peace, as well as in times of war, to hold high the standards of Americanism and firmly establish the principles of democracy. He is now giving his attention to law practice as a member of the firm of Chapline & Morrison and in this connection is making steady advancement, having already attained a position which many a lawyer of twice his years might well envy.

CHARLES TOBIAS ABELES.

Charles Tobias Abeles, whose business success ranks him as one of the prominent manufacturers of Arkansas and whose sterling qualities of manhood and his devotion to the public welfare class him with the representative citizens of Little Rock, was born in Krakow, Poland, in April, 1854. He came alone to the United States in 1874, when a young man of twenty years. He had pursued his education in the schools of his native country to the age of twelve and from that time has been dependent upon his own resources. The reports which he heard concerning the new world and its opportunities determined him to try his fortune on this side of the Atlantic and after reaching American shores he made his way across the country to Little Rock, where he has remained, save for the period of four years, from 1876 until 1880, when he was in St. Louis, Missouri. He then returned to Little Rock and through the intervening period has been identified with the lumber, sash, door and mill work industry as a manufacturer and jobber. The business now conducted by the firm of Charles T. Abeles & Company was established in 1880 and was incorporated in 1901, since which time Mr. Abeles has been the president and treasurer. Few firms in the southwest are operating so extensively and Mr. Abeles is regarded as one of the foremost business men in the capital city. He has closely studied every phase of the lumber industry and manufacturing of mill work, from the purchase of the standing timber to the sale of the finished product on the market and by reason of his comprehensive knowledge, his unremitting diligence and his perseverence he has attained a most gratifying measure of success.

Mr. Abeles was married in 1882 in Little Rock to Miss Delia Ringelhaupt, and to this marriage was born one son, Theodore D. Abeles, who was born October 3, 1883, and who married Rose Marie Stifft of Little Rock, and they have one son, Theodore D., Jr. On the 14th of February, 1889, in Little Rock, Mr. Abeles was married to Miss Rose Ringelhaupt, a sister of his first wife, who was born in Little Rock, in 1870. They have one child, Charles T., Jr., born June 27, 1894. He was married in March, 1921, to Ruth Ruskin.

Mr. Abeles gives his political endorsement to the democratic party and he holds to the religious faith of his fathers. Fraternally he is a Mason, who has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and has also crossed the sands of the desert with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He likewise belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and he has membership in the Concordia Country Club. During the World war he took a helpful interest in promoting the Red Cross drives and various other organized projects for the public good. He is a man of extremely generous spirit, his benevolences extending to many individuals and institutions. In his philanthropy, however, he is free from ostentation and display, his good work being prompted by a sincere interest in his fellowmen rather than by any desire for public show.

In the fall of 1913 he located at Little Rock, Arkansas, where he successfully practiced for six years, and in September, 1919, did postgraduate work in New York city. Following this he became a victim of the influenza, which resulted in a severe attack of neuritis, and for some months he was obliged to abandon his practice. In November, 1919, he came to Hot Springs for the purpose of taking the baths and was so favorably impressed with the locality that he decided to make this city his permanent residence. In January, 1920, he became a member of the firm of Rowland & Pate and they have become recognized as leading specialists of the city in the treatment of diseases pertaining to the eye, ear, nose and throat.

W. N. IVIE.

W. N. Ivie, a prominent representative of the Rogers bar who has been called upon to fill public positions of honor and trust, has here followed his profession since 1915 and has demonstrated his ability to cope with the intricate problems of the law. He was born in Madison county, Arkansas, near Huntsville, September 20, 1873, a son of Backus and Jane (Litterell) Ivie. Both parents were natives of Arkansas and their marriage occurred in Madison county, this state. The paternal grandfather, Vardamon Ivie, became one of the pioneer settlers of Arkansas and for many years successfully engaged in farming, also dealing extensively in stock. The maternal grandfather also came to Arkansas at an early period in its development and continued to make his home in this state throughout the remainder of his life. Backus Ivie, the father of the subject of this review, was a talented musician and although afflicted with blindness he won a substantial measure of success in the theatrical world, sending out a company which toured the principal cities of the United States. He was a democrat in his political views and attended the Baptist church although not affiliated with that denomination, while his wife was a member of Christ church. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ivie are deceased, the former dying while on a trip to Nebraska, and the latter's demise occurring at Harrison, Arkansas, in 1914.

W. N. Ivie, the only child in the family, acquired his education in the schools of his native state, and being desirous of following the legal profession as a life work, he took up the study of law. Having thoroughly mastered the principles of jurisprudence, he was admitted to practice before the district court in 1901, the supreme court of the state in 1905 and the United States supreme court in 1915. He first opened an office at Huntsville, Arkansas, where he soon proved his ability, and as his reputation spread his clientage increased. His fellow townsmen, recognizing his worth and high professional attainments, called him to public office and in 1908 he was elected county and probate judge of Madison county. His record upon the bench was in harmony with his record as a man and citizen—distinguished by marked fidelity to duty and by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution. In 1909 he was appointed register of the United States land office at Harrison, Arkansas, an office which he continued to fill with efficiency and conscientiousness for a period of four years. On the 1st of January, 1915, he came to Rogers, where he has since engaged in practice. He has been accorded a good clientage, for he has displayed marked skill in the conduct of intricate cases and in his professional service he has ever held to high standards, thus winning the confidence and trust of the public. He also has farming interests, being the owner of a well improved property in Benton county situated near Rogers.

On the 5th of December, 1900, Mr. Ivie was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Vaughan, a native of Madison county, Arkansas, and a daughter of George W. Vaughan, well known as a successful farmer and early settler of that section of the state. His father, Benjamin Vaughan, took a prominent part in public affairs, serving as sheriff of Madison county and also representing his district in the state legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Ivie have become the parents of five children: Lawrence, who assists in cultivating the farm near Rogers; Lillian, who is a junior in the Rogers high school; Jewel and Charles, also attending school; and Naomi, who is five years of age.

Mrs. Ivie is a faithful and consistent member of Christ church. Mr. Ivie is a stanch republican in his political views and a leader in the ranks of the party. He was sent as a delegate to the national republican convention which nominated William Howard Taft for the presidency in 1908 and he was also one of the delegates to the convention who nominated Warren G. Harding in 1920. He was campaign manager for John I. Worthington, the congressional candidate from Harrison, Arkansas, and almost succeeded in winning for him the election in a district which had always been strongly democratic. Mr. Ivie is now serving as chairman of the congressional republican committee for the Third District, and his work in behalf of the party has been far-reaching and effective. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias and in the latter order he is a past chancellor and representative to the Grand Lodge of the state. His ability has developed with the passing years and his talents, natural and acquired, have brought him to an enviable position as a representative of the Benton county bar. It is a well known fact that he is loyal to every principle which he espouses and to every cause which he endorses, and his sterling worth is attested by all who know him.

EPHRAIM G. McCORMICK, M. D.

Dr. Ephraim G. McCormick, successfully engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Prairie Grove, was born at Steeles Tavern, Virginia, February 10, 1855, and is a representative of an old southern family. His grandfather, Thomas M. McCormick, was also a native of Virginia and throughout his life followed the occupation of farming and milling. In 1875 he removed to Prairie Grove, Arkansas, where his remaining days were passed. His mother was a relative of General George B. McClellan of Civil war fame. Thomas M. McCormick made the lumber that was used in the construction of the first reaper that was built for Robert McCormick, of whom he was a nephew.

James W. McCormick, the Doctor's father, was also a native of the Old Dominion and there spent the period of his youth and early manhood. He married Mary Jane Zink, also a native of Virginia, in which state her parents lived and died. It was about the year 1875 that James W. McCormick came with his family to Arkansas, settling in Carlisle. He was a miller by trade and followed that business throughout his life. His religious faith was in accord with the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his political support was ever given to the democratic party. He always kept well informed on the leading questions and issues of the day, political and otherwise, and was regarded as a well-read man of his community. Both he and his wife died in Prairie Grove. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. James W. McCormick were seven children, six of whom are living: Ephraim G., of this review; Thresa Ann, the wife of W. N. Butler, who was connected with the International Harvester Company and is engaged in the insurance business at Prairie Grove; Sallie, who is the widow of Thomas B. Ferguson and lives at Broken Arrow, Oklahoma; Jennie, who is the widow of Dr. James Pitman and makes her home in Cincinnati, Arkansas; La Fayette C., a miller and land owner at Farmington; William T., who was a druggist and also interested in the telephone company of Prairie Grove, where he died about 1907, when fifty years of age; and D. N., who is with the Southern Mercantile Company at Prairie Grove, filling the position of manager.

Dr. McCormick obtained his early education in the schools of Churchville, Virginia, and of Moorefield, West Virginia. At length he determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work and with this end in view became a student in the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, from which he was graduated with the class of 1881. He then located for practice in Washington county and afterward opened an office at Lees Creek, Arkansas, where he remained for a period of five years. Subsequently he went to Florida, where he spent a few months, intending to locate in that state but changing his plans, he returned to Arkansas and opened an office in Prairie Grove in 1884. Here he began practice and for a time he lived in Crawford county before coming to Washington county, practicing there from 1879. It was while residing there that he made the money that enabled him to pay his way through college. He also followed school teaching which was a source of revenue to him when he was preparing for his college work. He is today the oldest medical practitioner in Prairie Grove and has long maintained a place of prominence in this section of the state, by reason of the thoroughness with which he qualified for his profession and the ability which he has developed in the years of his practice. He is surgeon for the Frisco Railroad, having served for the past twenty-one years. He built the first telephone line into Prairie Grove, which was among the first, if not the first, in the state. He was the first to buy an automobile in Prairie Grove. He was active in procuring for Prairie Grove their steam railroad, the O. & C. C., and was also active in procuring the man to do the grade work for the railroad.

On the 10th of February, 1884, Dr. McCormick was married to Miss Mamie Gilliam, who was born in Clarksville, Texas, a daughter of Charles D. Gilliam, who came to Washington county, Arkansas, and here engaged in farming for a number of years. In the meantime, however, he had followed merchandising in Crawford county for a period. Dr. and Mrs. McCormick have become the parents of two sons and a daughter: William Grover, a chicken fancier, who handles full-blooded chickens at Prairie Grove, formerly traveled for a number of years for the Curtis Publishing Company, having a splendid position with that corporation; Myrtle is the wife of James C. Parks, telephone manager at Prairie Grove; and Charles Arthur owns the Ford garage and is agent for the Ford cars.

Dr. and Mrs. McCormick belong to the First Presbyterian church and he is also an examplary follower of Masonic teachings, having served for several terms as master of the lodge. He likewise belongs to the Knights of Pythias. Politically he has ever been an earnest democrat and the offices which he has held have always been in the strict path of his profession. He was a member of the board of pension examiners under President Cleveland, has been county medical examiner and member of the county board of health. He belongs to the Washington County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and also to the American Medical Association. In 1896 he was a delegate to the Pan-American congress in the city of Mexico, where he spent a month. He belongs to the Volunteer Medical Service Corps and he devotes all of his time to his practice, meeting every professional duty that devolves upon him with a sense of conscientious obligation. In the diagnosis of his cases he is most thorough and careful and he has ever been keenly interested in everything that tends to bring to man the key to the complex mystery which we call life.

H. and Sallie P. (Fowlkes) Hassell, both of whom were natives of Middle Tennessee. The former was a son of John Hassell, who was born in Scotland and who was owner of land on Hassell's creek, which was named in his honor. In his younger days he traveled through Arkansas and traded with the Indians when Arkansas Post was the capital of the state. He engaged in buying furs and in trading in cattle and horses among the Red Men. His last days were spent on the old homestead on Hassell's creek. His wife belonged to the Adair family of that locality. The maternal grandfather was W. W. Fowlkes, a native of Middle Tennessee, who became a farmer and extensive land owner and who also had a number of slaves but he lost his property during the Civil war. He afterward came to Arkansas, settling in 1873 in what was then Van Buren county but is now Cleburne county. There he purchased land near Pearson and at once began to clear away the timber that was on the property, a part of which had been improved. On that place he continued to reside until his demise.

M. H. Hassell was educated in subscription schools and enlisted for service in the Confederate army at the outbreak of the Civil war. He was wounded in a skirmish and later was discharged but reenlisted, serving unitl the end of the war, being on duty east of the Mississippi river throughout the period. At the time he received his discharge he was serving under General Gollycoffer. He then returned to Tennessee, where he was married and began farming on his own account, owning land in that section. He afterward sold his property there and in 1874 removed to Cleburne county, Arkansas, where he purchased a partly improved tract of land, a portion of which, however, he had to clear and develop. This land was situated on the Red river and there he carried on general farming and stock raising. In 1897 he bought a farm near Rosebud in White county, Arkansas, and here spent his remaining days, his death occurring in 1910, when he was seventy-one years of age. He retired from business a short time prior to his demise. He was of the Primitive Baptist faith and gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. While in Cleburne county he served as justice of the peace. His widow survives, at the age of seventy-two years. In their family were ten children, nine of whom are living: J. He then taught school in a rural district for two years and later took up the study of medicine. He was first a student in the medical department of the University of Arkansas in 1891-92 and after leaving Little Rock practiced in Rosebud, White county. He next entered the medical department of the University of Tennessee and gained his M. D. degree in 1895, after which he returned to Rosebud, where he continued to practice until 1907 and then came to Searcy. Here he opened an office for the general practice of medicine. Dr. Hassell has membership in the White county and Arkansas State Medical Societies, the Southern Medical Society, the Tri-State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He has served as president of the county society and vice president of the Tri-State Society. He has been city health officer of Searcy since 1909 and has throughout the years enjoyed a large private practice, his ability being widely recognized. He is a thorough student and quickly recognizes the value of any idea or new method that is proposed in relation to the treatment of disease.

Dr. Hassell was married to Miss Lula Darden, a native of White county, Arkansas, and a daughter of J. W. and Nancy Darden. They became parents of eight children, seven of whom are living: J. W., Jr., who conducts a tailoring and cleaning establishment in Searcy; Guthrie, who is a teacher of piano in the State University at Fayetteville and who won a scholarship from Searcy at the age of seventeen years, whereby he became a university student and gained his A. LONOKE RICE PRODUCTS COMPANY.

The Lonoke Rice Products Company of the city of Lonoke, of which E. N. Kirkpatrick is the manager, is engaged in the milling of rice and rice by-products and is operating a very large mill—one of the first in the state. The establishment of this mill greatly stimulated rice growing in this section and has been an important feature in the business development of the city in which it is located. The mill has a capacity of twenty-four hundred barrels daily, taking care of the local production, which amounts to the yield from twelve thousand acres of rice land, this yield normally reaching five hundred thousand bushels per season. The present corporation has been in charge of the mill since 1917 and the officers are: Aristo Brizzolara of Little Rock, president; F. J. Schmitz, vice president; M. B. Gray, secretary; and E. N. Kirkpatrick, general manager. Prior to the time when the present corporation took over the business the mill had been operated under the name of the Lonoke Rice Milling Company. The plant was financed and erected by local Lonoke business men and among those who were prominent in the promotion of the original enterprise were Patrick H. Wheat, W. P. Fletcher and Charles G. Miller. These men were largely instrumental in giving Lonoke a rice mill and thus stimulating its business development. After the industry was placed upon a firm foundation the mill was sold to the present corporation and constitutes one of a chain of rice mills operated by the company throughout the south. Their products are shipped throughout the country and the business is one of growing proportions.

E. N. Kirkpatrick, the present efficient manager, was born in Nashville, Tennessee, and is a son of Leslie and Mary (Rogers) Kirkpatrick. The father was a well known wholesale grocer of Nashville, Tennessee, during his lifetime, occupying a prominent position in the commercial circles of that city. The son completed his education in the Vanderbilt University of Nashville. He afterward engaged in the brokerage business at New Orleans and subsequently became associated with the Louisiana State Rice Milling Company. He became thoroughly grounded in this industry, acquainting himself with the business in principle and detail, so that he was well qualified to take up his present duties when becoming associated with the Lonoke Rice Products Company.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is a veteran of the World war, having served with the coast artillery at Fort Monroe as a private, while later he entered the Officers' Training Camp. He is a young man of progressive spirit, watchful of every opportunity for advancement, and in the legitimate fields of trade and commerce has made steady progress, now occupying an enviable position for one of his years in the business circles of Arkansas.

He has won distinction in this field of the profession and has come to be regarded as one of the leading specialists of the state. During the period of his residence in Hot Springs he has taken postgraduate work in Chicago, New York city, Philadelphia, London, Vienna and Berlin. His high standing in the profession is indicated in the fact that he has been chosen to the presidency of the Hot Springs and Garland County Medical Society and he has also served as a member of the council of the Arkansas State Medical Society. He likewise belongs to the Southern Medical Association, the American Medical Association, the American Academy of Ophthalmology and Oto-Laryngology and the International Congress of Ophthalmology and is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons.

C. B. STARK, M. D.

Dr. C. B. Stark, engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Heber Springs, was born in old Van Buren county, now Cleburne county, on the 27th of February, 1867, and is a son of J. Whit and Mary Thorn (McMorris) Stark, who were natives of Graves county, Kentucky. The former was a son of Thomas Stark, a native of South Carolina, who at the age of sixteen years removed to Kentucky and ultimately came to Arkansas, settling in old Van Buren county in 1858. There he entered a large amount of land and made his home, but died while en route to Kentucky during the Civil war. He wedded Lucinda Stark and after her death wedded Betsy Moise of Kentucky. The ancestral line can be traced back in South Carolina to a period antedating the Revolutionary war and it was in that state that John Stark, one of the great-grandfathers of C. B. Stark, was born. The grandfather in the maternal line was Whit McMorris, a native of Kentucky, whose father was a physician, educated in Ireland, whence he came to the United States and engaged in the practice of medicine. Whit McMorris devoted his life to the ministry of the Baptist church. He married Hannah Little and reared his family in Kentucky, where his last days were passed.

It was in Graves county, Kentucky, that J. Whit Stark and Mary Thorn McMorris were reared and married. He took up the occupation of farming as a life work and in 1859 removed to old Van Buren county, driving across the country with a team of mules and prairie schooners. They had to ford the rivers or ferry across. Mr. Stark made three trips to Kentucky overland and return. On reaching Arkansas he entered a claim in what was then a sparsely settled district. His land was covered with the native growth of timber and he had to clear a space sufficient to enable him to build a log cabin. The first year he planted about five acres of corn and as opportunity offered he continued the work of developing his place. He enlisted in the Confederate army at the outbreak of the Civil war, joining Company A, of the Tenth Arkansas Infantry Regiment, and with his command proceeded east of the Mississippi. He was taken ill in Louisiana and was home on a furlough at the time of the surrender of the Confederate forces. He had to walk much of the way home, notwithstanding the condition of his health. After the war he continued to engage in farming and later bought land on Little Red river, which was partly improved. This he further developed and he devoted his life to the work of tilling the soil and caring for his crops. He died in 1919, at the age of eighty-three years, having for two decades survived his wife, who departed this life in 1899, at the age of sixty years. Their family numbered seven children: Joseph, a Baptist minister, living in Van Buren county, Arkansas; C. B.; Milton, a rural mail carrier and school teacher, living at Shiloh, Arkansas; Anna, the wife of William Marr, occupying the old home farm of the Stark family near Shiloh; Ida, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Johnny, who became the wife of Joe Haskins and died at the age of thirty-five years; and Blanche, who married Dr. E. F. Hodges and died at the age of twenty-two. The religious faith of the parents was that of the Baptist church and Mrs. Stark was a member of the First Missionary Baptist church, which was organized in this part of the state. Politically Mr. Stark gave his support to the democratic party.

Dr. Stark completed his literary education at Quitman College and during his boyhood days remained under the parental roof, his preliminary education being acquired in the public schools of Heber Springs. He afterward became a student in the medical department of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock and gained his professional degree upon graduation with the class of 1890. He then removed to Shiloh, where he opened an office and engaged in practice until 1895, when he located at Whitebead, Oklahoma, there spending two years. He then again took up his abode at Shiloh but in 1913 came to Heber Springs, where he has continued in general practice. He has taken postgraduate work at the Tulane University at New Orleans, there studying in 1902-3 and again in 1915 and 1916. He has a large and important practice and is regarded as one of the most capable physicians of this part of the state. He is likewise interested in farm lands in Cleburne county.

Dr. Stark has been married three times. He first wedded Maude White of Little Rock, and of their six children, three are living: Dibrell, a farmer of Cleburne county; O. D., who is engaged in farming and in raising live stock at Shiloh; and John Whit, a letter carrier of Okmulgee, Oklahoma. Three of the children died in infancy. For his second wife Dr. Stark chose Lela Roper and their firstborn child also died in infancy. The second, Maude, is the wife of H. H. White of El Paso, Texas. For his third wife Dr. Stark wedded Ollie Heister. Dr. Stark is a member of the Baptist church and he also belongs to Scarlet Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Shiloh and to the Odd Fellows lodge at that place. He has passed through all of the chairs of the latter organization and is ever a faithful follower of the teachings and purposes of these societies. He devotes the major part of his attention to his professional duties, however, and is accorded a large practice.

W. M. BRADY.

W. M. Brady, who is serving his second consecutive term as sheriff of Faulkner county, is a native of this county, where his birth occurred on the 9th of December, 1867, a son of James M. and Susan (Graham) Brady, both of whom are deceased. The paternal grandfather, William Brady, came to White county, this state, from his native state of Tennessee in the early 40's, making the trip overland with oxen and suffering the usual privations of those early pioneer times. He engaged in farming in White county and at the time of his demise had amassed a substantial fortune. Grandfather Graham was born in Georgia and came to Austin county at an early day. He likewise made the trip overland with oxen. Locating in Austin county he farmed there for several years and then removed to old Conway county, now Faulkner county, where his death occurred. The father of Sheriff Brady was born in what is now White county, this state, and he received his education in the schools of his native county. In later life he engaged in farming and removed to old Conway county where he purchased school land. Clearing that land, he followed general farming and stock raising and achieved a gratifying amount of success. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted for service in the Tenth Arkansas Infantry under General Fagan and participated in many of the important battles of that war, among them the battles of Shiloh, Bull Run and Chickamauga and he was severely wounded at Franklin, Tennessee, when he was shot through the neck, the shoulder-blade and the foot. He was captured by the Confederate soldiers and confined in a Louisville prison for eleven months, securing his release in June, 1865. He then returned to El Paso, White county, and resumed his farming until his death. He died on the 12th of May, 1915, at the age of seventy-four years. Mr. Brady married Miss Susan Graham, a native of Georgia, whose demise occurred in 1905, when sixty-five years of age. To their union the following children were born: W. M., whose name introduces this review; Mary, the wife of James Higgins, deputy to State Secretary Hopper of Little Rock; Walter, engaged in the general mercantile business in Faulkner county; Kate, the wife of William Naylor, a mail man with residence in Little Rock; Flora, who is now the wife of F. A. Frayner, associated with Mode & Clayton in Conway; Virgil, a farmer;

Horace, who died at the age of eighteen years; and another child whose death occurred in infancy. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the father gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. Fraternally he was a Mason and a member of the blue lodge.

W. M. Brady received his education in the common schools of his native county and remained on the parental farm until he became of age. He then started farming on his own account, purchasing a tract of good land in the county and he followed general farming and stock raising with a great deal of success until 1906 when he was elected sheriff of the county. He served four years in that office and at the termination of that period resumed his farming. In 1918, however, he was reelected to the office of sheriff and reelected in 1920 for his second consecutive term. As incumbent in that office Mr. Brady is fulfilling the responsibilities of his department in a manner highly satisfactory to his constituency and the community at large, and his friends are legion. He has disposed of his land interests and is devoting his entire time and attention to his duties as sheriff. For four years he was engaged in the mercantile business and during that period proved himself a man of keen business sagacity and initiative.

In 1902 occurred the marriage of W. M. Brady to Doris Spark, who is a native of Faulkner county and a daughter of W. G. Richards. Her father was born in Georgia and came to Conway county in the late '60s. He engaged in farming here until his demise in 1911. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Brady six children were born, only three of whom are living: Royce, Nolan and Preble, all attending school. The other three children died in infancy. Mrs. Brady is well known in the club and social circles of Conway and she is an active worker in the Baptist church.

The political views of Mr. Brady coincide with the principles of the democratic party, for whose candidates he always casts his ballot. He is an enthusiastic promoter of the town at all times and is a member of the Commercial Club, to all of the efforts of which association he gives his support and cooperation. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World.

WILLIAM CLAIRE GREEN, M. D.

Dr. William Claire Green, president of the Little Rock Sanitarium and numbered with the most skilled and able physicians and surgeons of the state, was born on a farm in Claire county, Michigan, August 23, 1868, his parents being James Edward and Eliza (Brown) Green, both of whom were natives of Ohio. The father was born in Wood county, that state, in 1832, and the mother was born in Seneca county, in 1838. They were married in Williams county, Ohio, in 1859, and became parents of five sons and two daughters, all of whom are living, Dr. Green being the fourth in order of birth. His father settled in Bradford, White county, on coming to Arkansas, and there followed the farming and the carpenter's trade. During the Civil war he enlisted as a member of the One Hundred and Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry and became a buglar of his regiment, so continuing from 1861 until 1864. He died in Bradford, Arkansas, January 1, 1903, and is still survived by his wife, who makes her home in Pulaski county.

The youthful days of William Claire Green were spent on the home farm in Claire county, Michigan, and on a farm in Saline county, Kansas, to which his parents removed about 1876, when he was eight years of age. There he attended the country schools and later returned to his native state, where he took up the study of nursing, being graduated at Battle Creek, Michigan. He came to Little Rock in 1890 with no capital; in fact he had incurred an indebtedness of four hundred dollars previous to this time. Through the intervening years he has made steady progress. On the 26th of December, 1900, he established the Little Rock Sanitarium, which was incorporated in 1907, with Dr. Green as the president. In the meantime he took up the study of medicine and was graduated from the medical department of the Arkansas University in 1905. The sanitarium of which he was the founder was incorporated in 1907, its patronage having become so great that it was impossible for him to handle the business alone. He is a physician and surgeon of marked ability and his institution is splendidly equipped for the care of both medical and surgical cases. In addition, Dr. Green owns a farm and fine residence in Pulaski county and is a successful poultry raiser, having turned to this as a recreation.

On the 25th of April, 1893, Dr. Green was married to Miss Etta Throckmorton, who was born in Waverly, Pike county, Ohio, October 8, 1870, a daughter of William and Sarah Alice (Lawson) Throckmorton, who were likewise natives of the Buckeye state, the Throckmorton ancestry, however, coming from Virginia, while the Lawson family came from Kentucky. For a considerable period Mr. and Mrs. Throckmorton resided at Bradford, White county, Arkansas. The father died in 1895, while the mother's death occurred in December, 1912.

Dr. Green votes with the democratic party and is well informed concerning the vital questions and issues of the day. He belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and to the Knights and Ladies of Security, as well as to the Fraternal Order of Eagles. His religious faith is that of the Seventh Day Adventist church. He is a great believer in the out-of-doors and enjoys life in the open. He keeps a fast motor boat in commission and takes great pleasure in camping trips accompanied by his wife.

DWIGHT CLARK ROOT, M. D.

Pine Bluff has every reason to be proud of the medical profession as here represented. Men of pronounced ability have entered upon the active work of the profession here, employing the latest and most scientific methods in the care of the sick and accomplishing splendid results. Well established in his practice in this city is Dr. Dwight Clark Root, a Tulane man whose liberal training constituted the basis of his steadily growing success and power. Born in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, in 1874, he is a son of Dwight C. and Anna E. (Van Tromp) Root, the former a native of Bridgeport, Connecticut, while the latter was born in the state of New York and was descended from old Dutch Colonial ancestry.

In the schools of his native city Dr. Root pursued his early education and in preparation for a professional career he entered Tulane University at New Orleans, from which institution he was graduated in 1904. He then located for practice in his native state but afterward removed to Arkansas, settling at Little Rock, where he remained for five years. On the expiration of that period he came to Jefferson county and has since practiced within its borders, making his home and maintaining his office in Pine Bluff, where he has a liberal patronage. His ability is attested by many of the leading families of the city and it is well known that Dr. Root is most conscientious in the discharge of his professional duties, is extremely careful in diagnosis and is seldom, if ever, at fault in foretelling the outcome of disease.

In 1899 Dr. Root was united in marriage to Miss Nina Moore, a daughter of J. D. Moore of Shreveport, Louisiana, and they are parents of a daughter, Myrtle, who is now the wife of G. T. Murray of New Orleans. Fraternally Dr. Root is a Mason and exemplifies in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft. The Methodist Episcopal church numbers him among its consistent members and his influence is ever on the side of progress, reform and improvement.

J. FAIRFAX LOUGHBOROUGH.

J. Fairfax Loughborough, vice president of the Arkansas State Bar Association, has been engaged in the active practice of his profession for twenty-seven years and through sixteen years of this period has been a partner in the firm of Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough. He bears a name that has long been associated with the bar of the state, for his father was the Hon. James M. Loughborough, who entered upon the active practice of law in Little Rock in 1872 and soon gained a notable position as a leader in his chosen profession. The father was born in Frankfort, Kentucky, where he was reared and educated and on leaving that state established his home in Missouri. In 1872 he came to Arkansas' capital and was made counselor for the old Cairo & Fulton Railroad, which was then being built from the north into Arkansas and which now constitutes a portion of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad. Subsequently he accepted the position of attorney for the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad and the Little Rock & Hot Springs Railroad and while filling those positions he was elected for political service, being chosen a member of the Arkansas state senate in 1876. He took his seat as a member of the upper house of the general assembly and was the author of a bill which enabled Pulaski county to secure relief from a heavy burden of debt. He also negotiated on behalf of the state what were known as the Loughborough bonds, the sale of which brought financial succor to the state whose fiscal affairs had been greatly disrupted during the Civil war and the so-called reconstruction period. Mr. Loughborough was a lawyer of pronounced ability and power and his labors were a potent element in advancing the interest and welfare of his adopted state. In many ways he left the impress of his individuality and ability for good upon the records of the commonwealth. His life was so varied in its activities, so honorable in its purposes, so far-reaching and beneficial in its effect that Little Rock most proudly claims him as one of her foremost citizens and when he was called to the home beyond she placed his name high on the roll of her honored dead. He died when still in the prime of manhood, in 1876, while his wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Webster, survived until 1887. Their family numbered two sons and four daughters, of whom the two sons are living.

One of these sons is J. Fairfax Loughborough, who was born in Little Rock, February 17, 1873, and was therefore but three years of age at the time of his father's demise. He attended the public schools until he had mastered the branches of learning therein taught and later he became a pupil in the Methodist University, while subsequently he matriculated in the Arkansas Industrial University at Fayetteville. He determined to make his life work the profession which had claimed the attention and energy of his father and accordingly became a law student in the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, where he was graduated as a member of the first class in 1894. Having won the Bachelor of Laws degree and secured admission to the bar, he at once entered upon active practice in Little Rock and in a calling where advancement depends entirely upon individual merit and ability he has worked his way steadily upward. He bears the reputation of being a resourceful and effective advocate, who most thoroughly prepares his cases and seems to lose sight of no point that in anyway will promote his cause. In 1905 he became a member of the firm of Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough, a concern which today ranks with the most eminent at the Arkansas bar. The diligence and energy which Mr. Loughborough displays in the preparation of his cases, as well as the earnestness, sagacity and courage with which he defends the right as he understands it, challenges the highest admiration of his associates. Acknowledgment of his high professional attainment has come to him from his fellow members of the bar, for in 1914 he was elected to the presidency of the Little Rock Bar Association and in 1921 was made president of the Arkansas State Bar Association. He likewise is a member of the American Bar Association and is serving on its committee on jurisprudence and law reform.

In Little Rock on the 21st of October, 1902, Mr. Loughborough wedded Miss Louise Wright, a native of this city and a daughter of W. Fulton Wright, well known in Little Rock. Her grandfather, Judge George C. Watkins, was a pioneer member of the law firm, with which Mr. Loughborough is now connected.

During the World war period Mr. Loughborough was chairman of the legal advisory board of Pulaski county. He was also on the advisory board of home service of the Red Cross and was legal adviser of the state food administration. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party but he has never been an aspirant for public office, preferring that his public duties should be done as a private citizen. He has rendered effective service to his community and to the commonwealth in various ways, being now a member of the commission having in charge the Arkansas Tuberculosis Sanitarium, and he is also a school director of Little Rock. In Masonry he has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and has crossed the sands of the desert with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. In club circles, too, he is prominent and widely known, having a life membership in the Athletic Association of Little Rock, while he also belongs to the Little Rock Country Club and to the Quapaw Club. His life has been characterized by signal service to mankind along many lines and especially has he won prominence and distinction in his chosen profession, holding ever to its highest ethical standards.

W. H. PRETTYMAN.

W. H. Prettyman, senior partner in the City Feed Company of Fort Smith, has been connected with this line of business since 1895, or for a period of twenty-six years. He is classed with the substantial business men of the city, alert and energetic, and gratifying results have followed his efforts from the beginning. Mr. Prettyman is a native of Illinois and came to Fort Smith in 1887. Here he was first employed as a letter carrier and later he engaged in the lumber business, which he followed for ten years, but finally sold his interest in that connection to concentrate his efforts and attention upon the feed business. This he established in 1895 in partnership with S. J. Collier, their place of business being located at the corner of Garrison and Towson avenues. They had built up a good trade when in 1897 the cyclone which devastated Fort Smith entirely destroyed their property. They started again, however, on the same location and in 1911 removed to their present quarters at Tenth and Rogers streets. Mr. Collier remained a partner of Mr. Prettyman until in 1920, when his interest was purchased by C. C. Clinton, forming the present firm. Business has always been carried on under the name of the City Feed Company and they handle annually a large amount of groceries and feed, catering to the country trade. Formerly they confined their attention largely to the feed business, but since the automobile has replaced horses they have built up a large grocery department and their patronage in that connection is quite extensive. The business methods followed by the firm have always been such as would bear the closest investigation and scrutiny and progress has followed their industry and integrity.

Mr. Prettyman was united in marriage to Lizzie M. Collier, and they have three daughters and a son: Mrs. R. S. Suggs; Hazel, the wife of Clarence Burg; Keith, who is with the Fort Smith Light & Traction Company; and Esther, who is a school girl. The son Keith was in the service for two years during the World war. Mr. Prettyman belongs to the Business Men's Club, an organization that is not only social in its nature but has to do with the development of the commercial interests of Fort Smith, for he has never allowed personal interest or ambition to dwarf his public spirit or activity. His is the record of a strenuous life—the record of a strong individuality, sure of itself, able in purpose, quick in perception, swift in decision, energetic and persistent in action.

R. L. SMITH, M. D.

A native son of Arkansas and a representative of one of the most prominent pioneer families of the state, Dr. R. L. Smith has for over a quarter of a century been numbered with the medical fraternity of Russellville and is one of the best known and most highly respected physicians and surgeons of Pope county. He was born at Dardanelle, Arkansas, November 8, 1873, and his parents were Louis and Martha (Harris) Smith, the former a native of Mississippi and the latter of Alabama. The father was a son of John Smith, who was also born in Mississippi, in which state he spent his life, devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits. The mother was a daughter of John Harris, a native of Alabama and a member of the Cherokee tribe of Indians. Mr. and Mrs. Smith were married at Columbus, Mississippi, and soon after the Civil war they made their way to Little Rock, Arkansas, the father becoming one of the first engineers employed by the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company. For some time he continued to follow his profession at Little Rock and then moved with his family to Dardanelle, in Yell county, this state. He was the pioneer sawmill operator in that county, purchasing his mill at Cincinnati, Ohio, and shipping it to this section, and for several years he successfully continued his operations along that line. He next came to Russellville, where he started a cotton gin, also buying large quantities of that commodity, and later he turned his attention to financial interests, establishing the Bank of Russellville, of which he was serving as president at the time of his death. While residing in Dardanelle he purchased a bell for the Baptist church and was recognized as one of the influential citizens of that place, while he also contributed substantially to the upbuilding and development of Russellville. Fraternally he was identified with the Masonic order, in which he attained the Knights Templars degree, and in his political views he was a stanch democrat. In public affairs he took a deep and helpful interest, serving on the school board and also as one of the aldermen of his city. He was a self-made man, who constructed his own success and through close observation and judicious reading and study acquired a valuable fund of knowledge. His wife's death also occurred in Russellville. To their union were born six children, all of whom survive, namely: Fannie, who married John Trest, a well known farmer residing in Russellville; Georgia, the wife of Will T. Meek, a traveling salesman, whose home is also at Russellville; Lula, who married D. S. Moore, now acting as fuel inspector for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Company and a resident of Fort Worth, Texas; Kate, the wife of R. L. Harkey, who is engaged in the harness business at Russellville; R. L., of this review; and Ida, who married Jack Smallwood, agent at Russellville for the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company. Mr. and Mrs. Smallwood are members of the Christian church.

In the acquirement of an education R. L. Smith attended the grammar schools of Russellville and in 1893 he was graduated from the Fort Smith high school. He then entered the Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio, and on the 12th of May, 1896, received his professional degree from that institution, opening an office at Russellville in the same year. Here he has since successfully followed his profession and with the passing years his practice has continually increased, until it has assumed large proportions. He has taken postgraduate work in Chicago and also at Tulane University of New Orleans, Louisiana, and is now specializing in surgery. He has been very successful in this field and through constant reading and close study of the cases which come under his care he is continually promoting his knowledge and skill. In 1920 he founded a hospital in Russellville, leasing a building in association with Dr. L. Gardner, and the institution now has twenty-five beds and two operating rooms, elevator service, and is equipped for X-ray work, being thoroughly modern and up to date in its appointments. Owing to his superior professional skill and knowledge, Dr. Smith is often called in consultation, and in the course of a year he performs many difficult operations, drawing his practice principally from Russellville. He is the owner of a farm in this vicinity but confines his energies to his professional duties, in the discharge of which he is most conscientious and thorough, and has attained high rank among those whose skill is uniformly acknowledged.

On the 22d of December, 1896, Dr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Gertrude Munday, a native of Russellville, and a daughter of J. F. and Jennie Munday, prominent residents of this place. Her maternal grandfather, N. D. Shinn, was one of the leading men of Arkansas, representing his district in the state legislature and also serving as county judge of Pope county, while he was likewise an extensive landowner. Her father, a native of North Carolina, became well known as a journalist, editing the Russellville Democrat for a number of years, and he was also a successful merchant. Dr. and Mrs. Smith have become the parents of five children: Dorothea, the eldest, married Lee V. Marble, superintendent of public schools at Portland, Arkansas; Robert F., who was graduated when eighteen years of age from the Henderson-Brown College, with the degree of B. A., is now a teacher in the State Agricultural School at Russellville and is preparing to attend the Missouri University in 1923 in order to win his Master of Arts degree; Louis M. is a sophomore at the Henderson-Brown College; Jane is a high school student; and Helen is attending grammar school.

Mrs. Smith is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and in her daily life exemplifies its teachings. In his political views the Doctor is a democrat and has been called to public office, serving as councilman and also as mayor, in both of which connections he rendered effective service for the public good, his influence being ever on the side of reform and improvement, adavncement and upbuilding. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of which he has twice been exalted ruler, and his professional connections are with the Pope County Medical Society, of which he is now serving as president, the Arkansas Medical Society, and the State and National Medical Eclectic Associations. His time and attention are concentrated upon his profession, in which he has made continuous progress, and he deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, for he has attained his present position of distinction entirely through his own efforts. He is a man of high purposes and ideals and his life work is one of great usefulness and value.

ALCUIN P. EASON.

By reason of his close application and thoroughness, Alcuin P. Eason has reached the creditable place that he occupies in the insurance circles of Fayetteville. He is not a native son of Arkansas, for his birth occurred in Mississippi, on the 14th of March, 1881, a son of John Thomas and Elizabeth (Bourbon) Eason. On the paternal side he is descended from Virginia stock, his ancestors later removing to Alabama, where his grandfather was born at Huntsville. He was a well-to-do man and owned about one hundred and fifty slaves prior to the war. He later made his home in Mississippi. The maternal grandfather was born in France and came to this country with Lafayette. He served gallantly in the Revolutionary war and was living in Virginia at the time of his demise. Both of the parents of Alcuin P. Eason were born in Mississippi, and in that state they were married and lived a number of years. He engaged in the general mercantile business at Coldwater, Mississippi, and likewise conducted two or three stores in the Mississippi delta. He achieved great success as a merchant and in 1898 came to Fayetteville. After locating here, however, he took up the insurance business, and was active along that line for many years. His demise occurred in 1918, at the age of seventy-five years and six months. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Eason, seven of whom are living: Mrs. J. F. Gilliland of Coldwater, Mississippi; Mrs. U. L. Smelser of Fayetteville; Mrs. W. P. Veazey of Coldwater, Mississippi; Alcuin P., whose name initiates this review; J. T., Jr., in the wholesale feed business in Fayetteville; H. E., in business with his brother here; and A. A., a drilling contractor at El Dorado. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the father was a Mason and a stanch supporter of the democratic party. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war, his sympathies being with the south, he enlisted as a private and subsequently won promotion to the captaincy of the Seventeenth Mississippi. He was active in the first battle of Manassas and surrendered his company at Appomattox. When Mr. Eason came to Fayetteville in 1898 he brought the following letter of introduction from a friend and comrade:

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 26th, 1894.

Dear Sir:

As a typical Confederate Veteran I most earnestly commend my friend and comrade, Hon. J. T. Eason of Coldwater, Tate county, Miss., who served in my Regt. (17th Miss. Vol. Army N. Va.) and followed the varied fortunes of the "Stars and Bars" from "Manassas to Appomattox" with a fidelity, courage and devotion unsurpassed—daring every danger and shrinking from no responsibility. As a friend he is equally courageous, steadfast and true. As an enemy bold, open and defiant—never "striking below the belt."

He has represented his county in the lower branch of the State Legislature with honor to himself and constituents, but it is as plain "Tom" Eason an "all round clever fellow" that ties him to his friends.

(Signed) W. D. HOLDEN, COMD'R.

He was for two terms mayor of Fayetteville and during his incumbency in that office did much for the development and improvement of the general welfare. He was a self-made man in every sense of the word and at his death a feeling of deep bereavement swept the community, for in his passing Fayetteville lost a pioneer and representative citizen.

Alcuin P. Eason received his early education in the schools of Fayetteville and in due time enrolled in the University of Arkansas. He was active in all campus affairs and became a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, a national college fraternity. After graduating from the university he engaged in the mercantile business in Coldwater, Mississippi, and after spending two years there he returned to Fayetteville and associated with his father and brother in the insurance business. Subsequently he bought out their interests and he has conducted the business alone ever since. Mr. Eason has an extensive and important business and he writes all forms of insurance.

In 1910 occurred the marriage of Mr. Eason to Miss Emma Rowe, a native of Greenwood, Arkansas, and a daughter of Styles T. Rowe. He was judge of the twelfth district and resided at Fort Smith for many years. He was prominent in the Masonic circles of the state and was grand master of the state at one time. Judge Rowe's demise occurred in 1916. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Eason two children have been born: Thomas Rowe and Emma Evelyn, both attending private schools.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Eason has given his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. He has always taken an active interest along political lines and for three times served as alderman of Fayetteville. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Knight Templar and a member of the Mystic Shrine, a Modern Woodman and a Woodman of the World. He is a public-spirited citizen and his aid may always be counted upon in furthering any movement for the development and improvement of the community. He devotes his entire attention to his insurance business and in all his acts displays an aptitude for successful management.

Dr. W. W. Gill, engaged in the practice of dentistry in Judsonia, is a native of White county, Arkansas, his birth having occurred near West Point, August 23, 1877, his parents being J. C. and Fannie J. (Hanson) Gill, who were natives of Tennessee and of Alabama, respectively. The father came to Arkansas in 1871, settling in White county. He was a carpenter and devoted most of his time to his trade, being among the early carpenters of this state. He also farmed to some extent. He was married here and afterward took up his abode in Judsonia, where he continued to make his home until his demise, which occurred in 1885, when he was thirty-eight years of age. His widow long survived, departing this life in 1914, at the age of fifty-six years. They were the parents of four children, of whom three are living: W. W.; R. H., a resident of Memphis, Tennessee; and G. G., who is located in Judsonia. One child of the family died in infancy. The mother was a faithful follower of the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church. Politically Mr. Gill was a democrat, giving unfaltering allegiance to the party.

Dr. Gill, having acquired his education in the public schools of Judsonia, started out in the business world as a clerk in stores and afterward became identified with the dry goods trade here, in which he was associated for twelve years with C. E. Newman, the business being carried on under the firm style of Newman & Gill. Thinking to find a professional career more congenial, however, he afterward took up the study of dentistry, entering the dental department of the University of Tennessee at Memphis and there winning his D. D. S. degree as a graduate of the class of 1915. Returning to Judsonia, he opened an office and has continued in general practice since that date, devoting his entire time to his professional interests and duties. He has a well equipped office, supplied with the latest improved appliances and the countless little delicate instruments which constitute the equipment of the successful dentist. He belongs to the Northeastern Arkansas Dental Association, the Arkansas State Dental Association and the National Dental Association.

Dr. Gill was married to Miss Lela C. Best, a native of White county, Arkansas, and they have become parents of three children, of whom the youngest died in infancy, the others being J. W. and B. E., both at home. The parents are helpful and consistent members of the Baptist church, in which Dr. Gill is serving as a deacon, and both he and his wife are teachers in the Sunday school. They manifest a most earnest interest in all branches of the church work and have done everything in their power to promote the growth of the church and extend its influence. Fraternally Dr. Gill is a Mason, belonging to Anchor Lodge No. 384, A. F. & A. M., of Judsonia. He has always voted with the democratic party and has served as recorder of his town for thirteen consecutive years. He likewise filled the position of secretary of the school board of Judsonia for twelve years and the cause of education has found in him a most worthy champion. His labors are a forceful element in public progress and the worth of his work is widely acknowledged. At the same time he is making steady progress and winning substantial success in his profession by reason of the thoroughness with which he does his work and the employment of the most modern scientific methods in the care of the teeth.

WILLIE JOHN PINSON, M. D.

Dr. Willie John Pinson, who since 1872 has made his home in El Dorado, has been closely associated with the material, intellectual, political and moral progress of the community. He has had marked influence over public thought and action for many years and his efforts have always been on the side of right, progress, reform and improvement. He was born March 13, 1860, in Lisbon, Union county, Arkansas, and was the second son of Dr. John Hendricks and Fannie E. (Ducker) Pinson. He completed his public school education as a high school pupil in El Dorado in 1878 and received his professional training in the medical department of the Arkansas University, from which he was graduated in 1882.

Following his graduation from the medical college, Dr. Pinson entered upon the practice of medicine which he followed from 1882 until 1900, spending the last four years of the period at Omaha, Texas, on the Cotton Belt Railroad. Following his return to El Dorado he was called to public office through appointment to the position of deputy clerk, in which capacity he served from 1890 until 1900. In the latter year he was made circuit clerk of Union county, Arkansas, and filled that position until 1906. He had previously been county examiner of Union county from 1896 until 1898 and in 1917 he became chief deputy United States marshal for the western district of Arkansas under John H. Parker and was stationed at Fort Smith in the discharge of his official duties until 1921. He has long exerted a widely felt influence in political circles, his opinions carrying weight in the councils of the democratic party. He served as a member of the state democratic central committee in 1911 and 1912 and in the latter year was elected to the Arkansas legislature from Union county for a term of two years, so that he became active in framing the laws of the state.

Dr. Pinson has become fully well known and prominent through his association with the work of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, at El Dorado. He was superintendent of the Sunday school from 1902 until 1912 and was president of the board of stewards for a period of ten years. He was also secretary of the Camden district conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and was a member of the General Conference in 1910, which met at Asheville, North Carolina. No good work done in the name of charity or religion seeks his aid in vain and his efforts have been an effective force in advancing the cause of Methodism in this part of the state. He was also the secretary and one of the directors of the El Dorado board of education from 1912 until 1917 and proved a stalwart champion of the public schools. Fraternally he is connected with El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., also with El Dorado Chapter, No. 118, R. A. M., and Albert Pike Consistory at Little Rock, Arkansas. He also belongs to Al-Amin Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is loyal to any cause which he espouses and his efforts are an effective force in promoting progress and growth in connection with many interests with which he is identified.

J. S. MILLER.

J. S. Miller, cashier of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Huntsville, has developed that forcefulness and strength of character which comes from making the best use of opportunities and through the exercise of that determined purpose which enables the individual to overcome all obstacles and difficulties. It is a recognized fact that it is under the stimulus of opposition and the stress of necessity that the strongest and best in man is brought out and developed and Mr. Miller's record is an illustration of this fact. Thrown upon his own resources from an early age he is truly a self-made man in the best sense of the term. Born in Osborn, Dekalb county, Missouri, September 15, 1872, he is a son of Columbus and Mary (Stewart) Miller and a grandson of Ben Miller, who was a native of Indiana but died in Missouri when seventy-five years of age. The grandfather in the maternal line was George W. Stewart, who spent his life in southern Indiana, where he was successfully engaged in farming, conducting his interests on an extensive scale. Both Columbus Miller and Mary Stewart were born in southern Indiana, near Rising Sun, and there resided for a number of years, the father following the occupation of farming. The mother died in her native state and the father afterward came to Arkansas from Missouri in a covered wagon, arriving ultimately in Madison county, where he purchased a farm, spending his remaining days in this county. For a time he was engaged in merchandising with his two sons at Dutton and there his death occurred. He served as a soldier of the Union army during the Civil war with the Ninety-first Indiana Volunteer Infantry, being on duty at the front for a year and a half. He belonged to the church of the Latter-Day Saints. He was a republican in his political views, always giving stalwart allegiance to the party. His wife was a member of the Christian church. By his first marriage he had six children, but J. S. Miller of this review is the only one living. Having lost his first wife, the father married again and the surviving children of that marriage are: Florence, who is the wife of Bob Cornett of Greenland, Arkansas; Mary, the wife of Dorsey Parris, a farmer of Madison county, Arkansas; Son; and Lottie.

J. S. Miller, whose name introduces this review, acquired his education in the schools of Indiana and Arkansas. He was but thirteen years of age when his mother died and was the eldest of the family of four children then living. The father was in very limited financial circumstances and left the younger children under the care of J. S. Miller while he went west to work, that he might get better wages than he could secure in Indiana. J. S. Miller then cared for a large stock of wheat on his grandfather's farm and made some money that spring. With his earnings he came to Little Rock and afterward became driver on one of the old-time horse cars of the city. He received small wages, yet managed to save something of what he earned. He also studied during the time that he drove the car and later taught school. He likewise cut cordwood at seventy-five cents per cord. In fact, he scorned no honest employment that would assist him in gaining a start in life and he always made it his rule to save something of what he earned. When he had qualified for teaching he followed that profession for thirteen years and afterward became active in mercantile circles in partnership with his father and brother and for eleven years concentrated his efforts and attention upon the conduct of the store which they owned.

Mr. Miller then withdrew from commercil pursuits in order to accept public office, having been elected circuit clerk, in which position he served for one term. With his retirement from office he was made assistant cashier of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Huntsville and in 1917 was advanced to the position of cashier, in which capacity he has continued, contributing in no small degree to the continued success and growth of the bank. He also owns farm property in Madison county and a good farm in Oklahoma. Following his marriage he started out in life with a cash capital of but fifteen dollars. Today he is one of the prosperous residents of Huntsville and his success is the direct outcome of his own labors intelligently directed.

In 1893 Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Minerva Cornett, who was born in Kentucky, a daughter of John Cornett, who came to Arkansas in 1875 and settled on a farm in Madison county. They have become parents of eight children: George W., who was a member of the navy during the World war, assisted in laying the mines in the North Sea, a most dangerous task, and he was on the second vessel when the Germans surrendered their fleet; Mary is the wife of E. M. Stevens, an electrician employed by the Standard Oil Company at Fullerton, California; Guy F. also makes his home at Fullerton; Edith is a widow and is now employed on a paper at Wichita Falls, Texas; Cora, John, Clifford C. and Goldie are all at home.

Mr. Miller and his family are members of the Missionary Baptist church and he is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World and has passed through the chairs of both lodges. He represented the Odd Fellows in the Grand Lodge and in the Grand Encampment. In politics he is a republican but has never been ambitious to fill office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his business affairs. Step by step he has advanced, gradually working his way upward until he now occupies a prominent position in business and financial circles not alone by reason of the success he has achieved but also owing to the straightforward business methods which he has ever followed.

JERRY BELL.

Jerry Bell, the efficient cashier of the Midland State Bank at Midland, Sebastian county, is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Greenwood in 1887. His parents are Jesse and Anna (Gorham) Bell, the former born in Washburn, Arkansas, while the latter is a native of Georgia. Jerry Bell obtained his early education in the schools of Greenwood and afterward continued his studies in Hendrix College. He started out in the business world as an employe of the Farmers Bank at Greenwood and in 1912 he came to his present position as cashier of the Midland State Bank, having now served in this capacity for more than nine years, during which time he has contributed largely to the continued growth and prosperity of the institution. The other officers of the Midland State Bank are: G. C. Packard, president; and G. K. Dixon, vice president. The first chief executive was W. L. Seaman and the bank was organized in 1912, at which time Mr. Bell became associated therewith. Throughout the period of the existence of the bank he has continued as cashier and his close application, his thoroughness, his ability and his business integrity have been potent factors in promoting the success of the institution.

Mr. Bell was united in marriage to Miss Bessie Deal and they are widely and favorably known in Midland, where they have gained many warm friends. Mr. Bell had a brother, Clifford, who served with the United States navy during the World war, being on duty in the Canal Zone. Mr. Bell has ever been deeply and helpfully interested in public affairs, giving his aid and support to all measures tending to advance the upbuilding and promote the welfare of the city in which he resides.

Dr. John A. Moore, a physician and surgeon, successfully practicing in El Dorado, was born in Three Creeks, Union county, Arkansas, May 9, 1873, his parents being Richard A. He was afterward graduated from the Memphis Hospital Medical College, now the University of Tennessee, which conferred upon him his M. D. degree in 1898. He located for practice at Lisbon, Arkansas, where he remained for fourteen years, becoming recognized as one of the most capable and successful physicians and surgeons of that place. During the year 1912 he lived in New Mexico for the benefit of his health, which was greatly improved during his sojourn in that state. In the late fall he came to El Dorado, where he has continued and is recognized today as one of the foremost medical and surgical practitioners of the city. He took postgraduate work in the West Side Hospital Postgraduate School in Chicago in 1901, in the Tulane University at New Orleans in 1912 and again in New Orleans in 1915, while in 1916 he studied further at the Polyclinic in New York city and in the Postgraduate School of New York in 1919. Thus he has availed himself of every opportunity to promote his knowledge and increase his efficiency in medical and surgical practice and he has always enjoyed the high esteem and confidence of his colleagues and contemporaries in the profession, by reason of his close conformity to advanced professional ethics and standards. He is now the president of the Warner Brown Hospital of El Dorado and a member of its board of directors.

On the 3d of June, 1900, Dr. Moore was married to Miss Daisy May Graham of Lisbon, Arkansas, and they have become parents of three children, two sons and a daughter: J. Dr. Moore and his family attend the Baptist church and along strictly professional lines he is connected with the Union County and Arkansas State Medical Societies, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., and El Dorado Chapter, No. 114, R. A. M. His practice affords splendid opportunity to exemplify the beneficent spirit of the craft and he is continually extending a helping hand where aid is needed, recognizing at all times the brotherhood of mankind and the obligations thereby imposed.

In 1912 he entered the automobile field and established the Central Garage, securing the agency for the Overland cars, but discontinued that line in 1915, substituting the Dodge and Buick machines, which he continued to carry until 1919. In that year he relinquished the Buick agency and now handles the Dodge and Packard cars, for which he has succeeded in building up a large sale in this territory, owing to his aggressive business methods and straightforward dealing. Mr. Nutt is president of the Lamar Bath House Company, and is building a new bath house in Hot Springs, which will be the last bath house to be built on government reservation, as this is the last lease for which there is space. R. A. SIMPSON, M. D.

The public as well as the profession accords Dr. R. A. Simpson a prominent position among the medical practitioners of Hot Springs. Close study has formed the basis of his advancement, and combined with an appreciation of the scientific phases of the profession, is a deep and abiding sympathy that prompts him to put forth earnest and unfaltering effort where the welfare of his fellowmen is involved. He was born in Grenada county, Mississippi, December 12, 1872, a son of Alexander J. and Sarah J. (Creekmore) Simpson, the former a native of Huntingdon, Tennessee, while the latter was born in Calhoun county, Mississippi. FORREST A. WOOD.

Forrest A. Wood, occupying a prominent position among the successful educators of Arkansas, is now serving as superintendent of schools of Benton county, to which position he was elected in 1918, and under his able direction the schools are making splendid progress. His excellent training for the profession and his long experience in school work have given him clear insight in regard to school affairs, which well fits him for the office which he occupies. He was born in Louisiana, June 8, 1876, a son of Thomas H. and Mary R. (Harris) Wood, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Pea Ridge, her present home being within two miles of her birthplace. They were married in Arkansas and the father became a soldier in the Confederate army during the Civil war, enlisting from Tennessee in 1862. He became one of the escort of General Forrest and served for two years in the war, losing a leg at the engagement at Selma, Alabama. After the cessation of hostilities he returned to Benton county, Arkansas, where he purchased a small farm, which he brought under a good state of cultivation, and also followed the profession of teaching for several years. In 1880 he was elected treasurer of Benton county and for six years filled that office, afterward returning to his farm, on which he spent his remaining years, his demise occurring on the 19th of June, 1889. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and a democrat in his political views. He started out in life empty-handed and through perseverance, energy and close application accumulated a competence. Mr. and Mrs. Wood became the parents of two children: Forrest A., of this review; and Bessie, who is the widow of Henry Pierce and resides with her mother. The maternal grandfather, Nicholas Harris, was born in Tennessee and in an early day came to Arkansas, becoming one of the pioneer settlers of Benton county, where he died when about ninety years of age, having contributed four sons to the Confederate cause.

In the acquirement of an education Forrest A. Wood attended the country schools and the grammar and high schools of Bentonville, later becoming a student in the Mount Vernon Normal College at Pea Ridge, Arkansas, from which he was graduated with the class of 1904. He had taken up the profession of teaching in 1904 and since the age of six years has been continuously connected with the schools of Benton county, either as teacher or pupil. His successful work as an educator led to his selection for the office of superintendent of schools of Benton county in 1918 and his attention is concentrated upon his professional duties, which he is discharging most capably and conscientiously. In this connection he has charge of one hundred and thirty-four districts, containing two hundred and fifty teachers, the number of pupils amounting to eleven thousand, nine hundred and twenty-eight on the 1st of July, 1920, there being but twenty-eight negroes among them. The standard of education in Benton county is the highest in the state, the percentage of illiteracy being two and five-tenths. The total enrollment for the year 1920 was nine thousand, eight hundred and ninety-seven. Mr. Wood has issued a statistical record of the Benton county schools which gives the grades and salaries of the teachers and other useful information, this being the only record of the kind which has ever been issued in the state. He not only thoroughly understands the needs of the pupils, but also has that executive force necessary in exerting his authority over the teachers. The cause of education rests with him in safe hands and he exerts his influence to better school facilities and school equipment and is ever ready to cooperate with the teachers in order to bring about harmonious collaboration.

In 1900 Mr. Wood was united in marriage to Miss Iva Berry, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Benjamin F. Berry, who came to Bentonville in 1885, following the trade of a carpenter. To this union has been born a son, Henry F., who is a student in the Arkansas State University. Mr. Wood is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and in his political views he is a stanch democrat. Studious by nature, he keeps in touch with the most modern ideas in regard to the education of children and is every ready to transform ideas into realities if he is convinced of their worth. The general public is as one in recognition of his untiring and effecting work and he ranks with the leading educators of the state.

He became identified with the Mansfield Lumber Company of Fort Smith, and he was the first local manager of that company. Subsequently he embarked in the lumber business on his own account in El Reno, Oklahoma, where he remained for eight years. That enterprise was conducted under the name of the El Reno Lumber Company and he won substantial success in that connection. In 1918 Mr. Peer sold out his lumber interests and became president of the Mansfield Hardware Company, with large stores located at Mansfield, Fort Smith and Van Buren. He has a wide acquaintance in this part of the state, where his entire life has been spent, and the sterling traits of his character are attested by the warm friendship accorded him by those who have known him from his boyhood to the present.

CLAUDE A. RANKIN.

For some years Claude A. Rankin has engaged in the abstract business in Murfreesboro and he is now serving his second term as county treasurer of Pike county. A native of this state, he was born at White Oak, Cleveland county, on the 22d of November, 1884, and is the eldest son of Elisha T. and Martha W. (Daniel) Rankin. The paternal ancestors came from Scotland to America in 1793 and located in Lincoln county, North Carolina. His grandfather Rankin was born in that county in 1812 and resided there until manhood, when he removed to Murfreesboro, Tennessee. The maternal ancestors came from England and first located in South Carolina, from which state they removed to Tennessee and thence to Cleveland county, Arkansas, where they arrived in 1850. Elisha T. Rankin was born in Mississippi and came with his parents to this state in 1848, when he was three years of age, his parents being among the pioneer settlers of that section of the state. His father and one brother served in the Federal army throughout the Civil war and two other brothers saw service with the Confederate army. On the 12th of February, 1884, in Cleveland county, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Rankin to Miss Martha W. Daniel, who is still living on the old homestead at Roy, at the age of sixty years. Mr. Rankin's demise occurred at Roy in 1911, when sixty-six years of age. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Rankin ten children were born, nine boys and one girl, Claude A., whose name initiates this review, being the eldest. Eight boys and the girl are living. One of Mr. Rankins' brothers, Street Rankin, enlisted for service in the World war and died on the 20th of May, 1920, from tuberculosis, contracted while in active service. His death occurred soon after his return to America and came as a severe blow to his family and many friends in the community. Street Rankin was a member of Company D, Thirty-fourth Infantry, Seventh Division and he was with his regiment in the St. Mihiel drive. He was in active service until the signing of the armistice closed hostilities.

In the acquirement of an education Claude A. Rankin attended the public schools of Athens in Howard county. For the five years following Mr. Rankin taught in Pike, Hempstead and Howard counties, but in 1910 turned his attention to other pursuits. From 1912 to 1916 he was engaged in the conduct of a mercantile business in Murfreesboro and disposing of that interest in the latter year, he made his initial step into the abstract business with which he has since been identified. He has built up a large business along that line and is enjoying more than gratifying success. Prior to entering the mercantile business at Murfreesboro he served as deputy clerk under R. N. Alford of Pike county, from 1908 to 1910, and was again called to public office in 1911, when he was elected assessor of Pike county, serving until 1914. He represented Pike county in the state legislature in 1917 and was one of the authors of the house bill on the Bone Dry Law of Arkansas, which was passed at that time.. In 1919 he was elected county treasurer of this county and is now serving his second term in this office, having been reelected in 1921, his term to expire in 1922. Mr. Rankin also has extensive farming and stock interests in Pike county.

On the 24th of June, 1907, in Hempstead county, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Rankin to Miss Leola Kennedy, a daughter of James L. and Harriett H. Kennedy, residents of Arkansas. To their union four children have been born: Jimmie, who died in infancy; Hazel, fourteen years of age; Arnell, twelve years of age; and Claude A., Jr., six years of age. The children are now students in the grammar schools of Murfreesboro.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Missionary Baptist church and Mr. Rankin is superintendent of the Sunday school, which position he has held since 1912. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to the Pike blue lodge, No. 91, and to Hill Chapter, Royal Arch Masons of Nashville, this state. He holds the office of D. D. G. M. for the fifteenth district, which comprises Clark, Pike, Howard, Sevier and Little River counties. He is considered one of the exemplary members of the craft. In every undertaking with which he has been connected, Mr. Rankin has achieved success and he is one of the leading citizens of Murfreesboro. As a public official he has served his fellowmen to the best of his ability and has won their utmost confidence and respect, while he likewise occupies a position of prominence among the business men of Pike county.

JOHN P. ROBERTS.

It was a laudable ambition that prompted John P. Roberts to prepare for law practice and his force of character and unfaltering determination have enabled him steadily to work his way upward in a calling where advancement depends entirely upon the individual effort and capability. He is now a successful lawyer of Booneville and has spent his entire life in this section of the state, his birth having occurred on a farm seven miles south of Booneville on the 11th of March, 1876. His father, James A. Roberts, was born in eastern Tennessee in 1835 and his death occurred in February, 1920, so that he had attained the advanced age of eighty-five years. He was early left an orphan and therefore knew nothing of his people. After reaching adult age he married Elizabeth Maysey, who was born in 1846 and departed this life in 1892. She was a daughter of William T. Maysey, also a native of Tennessee, who in 1870 came to Logan county, where he owned a farm. He reared a large family of twelve children and died in Logan county at an advanced age. The marriage of James A. Roberts and Elizabeth Maysey was celebrated in Tennessee and the year of 1873 chronicled their removal to Logan county. Here he purchased land and devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits until his death. He had served as a soldier of the Federal army from 1861 until 1865, after which he returned to Tennessee and there carried on farming until his removal to Arkansas. In politics he was always a republican and both he and his wife were believers in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, Mr. Roberts holding membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, and his wife in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. They had a family of five children: W. T., who is a merchant of Booneville; James H., who is also connected with mercantile interests at Booneville; Charles M., a lawyer and farmer residing in the same city; John P., of this review; and C. V., who is a school teacher at Booneville.

John P. Roberts is indebted to the public school system of Logan county for the educational opportunities which were accorded him. He was reared upon his father's farm, on which he remained to the age of twenty-two years, taking his part in the work of the fields and early becoming familiar with every phase of farm life. It was his desire, however, to enter upon a professional career and while still on the farm he devoted his evening hours to the study of law and thus qualified for the bar, to which he was admitted in January, 1904. He at once entered upon active practice and in 1914 he was admitted to practice before the supreme court of the state and before the United States supreme court in Oklahoma on the 25th of April, 1917. Since first licensed to practice he has followed his profession in Booneville and his course has been marked by steady progress as he has given proof of his ability to cope with the intricate and involved problems of the law. He readily sees the relation between cause and effect and his presentation of a case is always clear and forceful and his deductions thoroughly logical. He is likewise interested in stock raising and farming, handling full-blooded polled red cattle. He has an excellent farm property and derives therefrom a substantial annual income, but the major part of his attention is given to his professional interests, which are constantly developing in importance as well as in volume.

On the 13th of March, 1898, Mr. Roberts was married to Miss Arizona Elizabeth Kelley, who was born in Logan county, Arkansas, a daughter of William Kelley, a farmer who came to this county from North Carolina in 1865. Mrs. Roberts died March 18, 1921, leaving two children: Nannie May, who is the wife of George Edwards, a farmer of Booneville; and Johnnie Fae, who is now pursuing her high school work in Booneville. Mrs. Roberts was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church and a lady of many excellent traits of heart and mind which endeared her to all who knew her. Mr. Roberts and his children are likewise identified with the Methodist church and he is a Royal Arch Mason. He has served as junior and senior warden in the lodge and is a most loyal follower of the teachings of the craft. He likewise belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen. Politically he has ever been a republican and twice has been elected to serve as mayor of Booneville. He is also the present city attorney and has filled this office for a number of years. He served as postmaster under President Taft and on one occasion he was a candidate for prosecuting attorney, being defeated by only three hundred votes in a district that gives a normal democratic majority of twenty-five hundred. He carried his home district of Logan county, which had previously given a democratic majority of four to one. This certainly indicates his personal popularity and the confidence reposed in him by his fellow townsmen, who know that in office he is always most loyal to the duties that devolve upon him and that he displays marked ability in the performance of any task whereby the welfare and progress of city, commonwealth or country are conserved.

HON. HENDERSON M. JACOWAY.

Hon. Henderson M. Jacoway, six times reelected to congress, belongs to that class of statesmen who regard a public office as a public trust and in the discharge of his duties he has been thoroughly conscientious and earnest, while his labors have been an effective force toward the realization of high ideals in citizenship. Ability and devotion to duty are the qualities which have brought him to the front and his entire public and private record has reflected credit and honor upon the district and the people who have honored him. Mr. Jacoway was born in Yell county, Arkansas, November 7, 1872, his parents being Judge W. D. and Elizabeth Davis (Parks) Jacoway. The father was a native of Tennessee and cast in his lot with the pioneer settlers of Arkansas, accompanying his father, B. J. Jacoway, to this state in ante-bellum days. The latter became one of the leading planters of Arkansas in the first half of the nineteenth century and also figured conspicuously in connection with public affairs prior to the Civil war, holding the office of United States marshal for the western district of Arkansas. His son, Judge W. D. Jacoway, was sent back to Tennessee for educational training and matriculated in Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, where he prepared for his professional career, being graduated from the law department of that institution. He then returned to Arkansas and won distinction as a representative of the bar of this state. He likewise became widely known as an able jurist, sitting upon the bench of the circuit court from 1879 until 1884, his decisions being strictly fair and impartial, so that he "won golden opinions from all sorts of people." He departed this life in May, 1905, when sixty-nine years of age, and is survived by his widow, who was born in Nashville, Tennessee, and is a daughter of Sam Parks, who established the first wholesale mercantile house in Memphis, Tennessee, and was also mayor of that city.

Henderson M. Jacoway spent his youthful days in Dardanelle and became a public school pupil there, after which he attended Winchester College at Winchester, Tennessee, and was graduated from that institution, thus completing his more specifically literary course. A review of the broad field of business, with its countless opportunities along industrial, commercial and professional lines, at length decided him to take up the practice of law and to this end he became a student in Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, being there graduated from the law department with the class of 1898, at which time he won valedictorian honors. He was there a student under the Hon. J. M. Dickinson, late secretary of war, who at that time was a member of the faculty of the university.

Mr. Jacoway entered upon the active practice of law in Dardanelle, and although advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, he worked his way steadily upward, his practice steadily increasing in volume and importance. He early won recognition of his ability in other directions as well, for when President Cleveland chose the commissioners to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes for the abolishment of tribal relation, he was made secretary of the commission. He continued to act in that capacity in a most acceptable manner until the election of President McKinley, when he left the service. With the election of Hon. C. C. Reid to congress, Mr. Jacoway became his secretary and his duties there familiarized him with affairs in the national capital, proving of great value to him when a decade later he returned to Washington as a member of congress. At the close of his secretarial service in the east he returned to Arkansas and entered upon law practice in Yell county, where in 1904 he was elected prosecuting attorney of the fifth judicial district. He continued to occupy the position for four years and made a most capable official, thoroughly safeguarding the judicial interests and legal rights entrusted to his care. In this connection a contemporary biographer wrote: "His experience in public affairs is somewhat unusual for a man of his age and eminently qualifies him for the efficient discharge of the duties of the office to which he now aspires. His duties while on the Dawes commission and as private secretary to Congressman Reid offered him unusual opportunity to master and familiarize himself with the affairs pertaining to the federal government and to acquire an acquaintance with public officials and departmental regulations at Washington not ordinarily possessed upon entering the office of representative in congress. The benefits for which Mr. Jacoway will put forth vigorous and enlightened effort in the halls of congress. are those nearest the hearts and interests of his constituents—good altruistic causes, with disadvantage toward none, with benefit to all. He defined these aspirations shortly previous to his election and they are here appended from the columns of a local publication: 'Mr. Jacoway stated that he would devote himself to such legislation as would tend strongest to the upbuilding of the agricultural interests of the community. Arkansas, he stated, is principally an agricultural state, and agricultural education, education in the industrial arts, good roads, and facilities for transportation equal to those of our neighbors, will make us one of the greatest commonwealths on earth. He is in favor of the extension of the rural free delivery service, governmental aid to agricultural schools, and public roads, the improvement of our rivers and a fuller recognition of the rights of organized labor.' Mr. Jacoway made his campaign upon broad grounds and appeals to no particular class, insisting that no man who proposes to represent the whole people has a right to claim any particular class as his political asset."

On the 19th of September, 1907, Mr. Jacoway was married to Miss Margaret Cooper of Beaumont, Texas, a daughter of the Hon. and Mrs. S. B. Cooper of that place. They have become parents of a son and a daughter: Bronson Cooper, who is thirteen years of age; and Margaret Elizabeth, a little maiden of five summers. Theirs is a hospitable home in Dardanelle, where the family has an extensive circle of warm friends.

Mr. Jacoway is a Royal Arch and thirty-second degree Mason, loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft, and he also belongs to the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. His public and private record is alike above reproach. He has always been loyal to those rules of conduct which make for the uplift of the individual and equally faithful to the mandates of government. At all times he has made partisanship subservient to the general good and placed the public welfare before personal aggrandizement. While he would not have had opposition for renomination he will voluntarily retire from congress.

ROBERT B. WYATT, M. D.

Dr. Robert B. Wyatt, a Fort Smith physician, was born in Charleston, Tennessee, in August, 1873, a son of Thomas R. and Frances (Fuqua) Wyatt. He is of Scotch-Irish lineage and a descendant of Sir John Wyatt of England. The family came from England to America, representatives of the name living in Virginia and North Carolina before removal was made to Tennessee, where the birth of Thomas R. Wyatt occurred. The father possessed natural mechanical ability and ingenuity and made the first steel plow manufactured. He spent the last thirty-five years of his life in the government employ in connection with river improvement, principally the rivers of Tennessee. He was a captain in the Union army during the Civil war, joining the northern forces before he had attained his majority and serving for four years. Eventually he was pensioned.

Dr. Wyatt is one of a family of twelve children, six of whom are living. His brother, Alois P. Wyatt, is in the government employ. He is sent all over the country to inspect machine shops under government contracts and was recently sent to Europe to install a plant. He was engaged in such work during the World war and his position is one of responsibility.

Dr. Wyatt was educated at the high school in Charleston, Tennessee, and in the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. He received his professional training in a medical college of Kansas City, Missouri, from which he was graduated in 1910. He put his theoretical knowledge to the practical test by serving for a year in the hospitals of Kansas City and later removed to Sulphur Springs, where he had a summer home. There he practiced for about two years and in 1911 came to Fort Smith, where he has engaged in the general practice of medicine for a decade, although specializing to a considerable extent in diagnosis.

Dr. Wyatt was married to Miss Ella V. King, a daughter of the Rev. E. W. King, a Methodist minister of Fort Smith. She was born and reared in this city and died November 10, 1919, her death being deeply regretted by many friends. There were four children of the marriage, two of whom are living. Artelle Robbie and Ella Minerva. The former is a graduate of the University of Missouri and of the Christian College at Columbia, Missouri, where she specialized in expression. She is now the wife of Harry Lewis Dietrich, formerly of St. Louis but now identified with the First National Bank of Fort Smith. Ella Minerva was graduated in 1921 from the Christian College of Expression and won her degree of Bachelor of Journalism at the University of Missouri. For two years she was society editor of an evening paper at Columbia, Missouri. She is now engaged in writing a book and she also writes illustrated feature stories for local papers.

Dr. Wyatt is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Mystic Shriner and is also identified with the Woodmen of the World. He was president of the Phi Beta Pi, a medical fraternity, while at school. For several years he was assistant surgeon of the Kansas City Southern Railway. He belongs to the Sebastian County Medical Society and the Arkansas State Medical Society, and, holding to high professional standards, has made steady progress in his chosen life work, his ability being attested by the liberal practice now accorded him.

J. L. SWOFFORD.

J. L. Swofford, an accountant of the firm of Frambers & Swofford of Fort Smith, with offices in the Arkansas Valley Trust building, was born at Coal Hill, this state, in 1889 and is a son of Loda and Mary (Butts) Swofford. After acquiring a public school education he attended a business college and started out in the world on his own account as a bookkeeper. He promoted his knowledge of accounting as a student in the department of accounting in La Salle University at Chicago, Illinois, and subsequently he entered the government service in connection with the income tax department.

In 1920 Mr. Swofford entered into partnership with R. C. Frambers for the conduct of an accounting business and already they have gained a large clientele which includes many of the leading business men and important firms of Fort Smith and the surrounding country. While they engage in general accounting, they are also well known as income tax specialists. Mr. Swofford has ever endeavored to reach high standards of efficiency and the firm in which he is a partner now enjoys a most enviable reputation.

GEORGE WALTER MIKS.

George Walter Miks, engaged in the conduct of a flour mill and of the electric light plant at Ola, is a native of Iowa, his birth having occurred in that state April 30, 1861, his parents being Emanuel A. and Mary (Wright) Miks, both of whom were natives of Ohio. They were married, however, in Iowa, to which state they had gone as young people. The grandfather in the paternal line spent his entire life in Ohio, dying in young manhood. The maternal grandfather, Joseph Wright, was a native of Iowa and died in Missouri, where he had devoted his attention to farming until killed by the bushwhackers on account of his sympathies with the Union cause. Emanuel A. Miks served an apprenticeship to the wagon maker's and blacksmith's trade in Ohio and after removing to Iowa entered the employ of Joseph Wright, whose daughter he afterward married. In 1865 he removed to Salina, Kansas, where he established the first blacksmith shop west of the sixth principal meridian. He remained in Salina for twelve years and then removed to Halstead, Kansas, while in 1884 he became a resident of Johnson county, Arkansas, where he operated a mill. He next established his home in Ola, where he also conducted a mill, and he was likewise prominently connected with the horticultural development of this region, for he planted the first apple and peach orchard in Yell county, having one thousand trees and developing a very fine orchard. He was quite successful in his business affairs and was at all times a progressive citizen, his aid and influence being on the side of improvement and advancement. At the close of the Civil war he was for a time in the employ of the government as a blacksmith in connection with the establishment of the stage line through to Denver. The Miks family were of the Moravian faith and one of the ancestors came to America in the same ship with John Wesley. Mr. Miks belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and became a charter member of Salina Lodge No. 28 at Salina, Kansas. In politics he was a greenbacker. His wife was a member of the Christian church, and both were highly esteemed people, enjoying the confidence and warm regard of all who knew them. They had a family of six sons, of whom three are yet living: George Walter; V. C., who conducts a feed mill at Porum, Oklahoma; and Ira, owner of a feed store at Wichita Falls, Texas.

G. W. Miks pursued his early education in the schools of Salina, Kansas, and started out in the business world as a blacksmith, working for his father. He devoted twelve years to labor of that character and then engaged in the sawmill business with his father in Johnson county, Arkansas. Later the father removed the mill to Ola and G. Walter Miks returned to Kansas. Although living in Arkansas, he engaged in threshing in Kansas for twenty-two years and also farmed in that state but returned to Arkansas in 1911, settling at Ola. Here he purchased a gin, also built a flour mill and an electric light plant, both of which he still owns, the mill having a capacity of twenty-five barrels per day. Mr. Miks is also building an ice plant and is thus actively identified with the business development of the town, being actuated at all times by a most enterprising and progressive spirit.

In 1881 Mr. Miks was married to Emma Ruch, a native of Ohio, and to this union three children were born, of whom two are still living: Georgia, who was married June 1, 1913, to Bert W. Poole, of Dalton, Georgia, and they now make their home in Ola, Arkansas; and Pearl, who was married April 28, 1912, to Jeff Ellis, of Ola, and they now reside in Dardanelle, Arkansas.

Mr. and Mrs. Miks hold membership in the Christian church and fraternally he is connected with the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen. In politics he maintains an independent course, voting for men and measures rather than party. His entire attention is given to his business affairs and he deserves much credit for what he has accomplished since he started out in life empty-handed. He had to buy his wedding clothes on credit, but he possessed industry and determination and these qualities have enabled him to make steady advancement until he is now one of the leading business men of the community, possessed of a comfortable competence.

HENRY HODGEN KIRBY, M. D.

Dr. Henry Hodgen Kirby, surgeon for St. Luke's Hospital, has developed skill and efficiency of a high order in his chosen field of labor and his services are of great benefit and value to mankind. He is actuated by broad humanitarian principles in his practice as well as by the legitimate desire for success and he has made steady advancement from the beginning of his professional career. Arkansas numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred in Harrison, Boone county, October 28, 1883. His parents are Leonidas and Rhoda Virginia (Crump) Kirby. The latter was a daughter of a Confederate veteran. Dr. and Mrs. Leonidas Kirby reside in Harrison, where for many years he has engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery, following his graduation from the St. Louis Medical College. His political endorsement is given to the republican party and he served on the Council of Defense during the World war. He is still actively and successfully engaged in practice and his ability is attested by the liberal patronage accorded him. To him and his wife have been born six sons and a daughter, of whom one son died in infancy.

Dr. Henry H. Kirby, the sixth in order of birth in the family, attended the Harrison public schools until graduated from the high school and afterward continued his education in the Arkansas State University, which he attended for two years in 1901-1902. He next entered the Washington University at St. Louis and completed his professional course with the class of 1906. Throughout the intervening period he has largely specialized in surgery and his ability in this connection is pronounced. He has comprehensive knowledge of anatomy and the component parts of the human body, together with the onslaught made upon it by disease. He is cool and collected in the face of emergency and a steady nerve as well as marked skill have contributed to his successful surgical work. He is now one of the surgeons for St. Luke's Hospital, a position of large responsibility, making full demand upon his time and energy. He belongs to the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association and through the proceedings of these bodies he keeps in close touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress.

On the 11th of November, 1911, Dr. Kirby was married to Miss Gladys Manning, who was born in Clarendon, Arkansas, and who continued her education in the State University of Arkansas, graduating from that institution with the class of 1911. She is a daughter of Manning and Jessie (Winfield) Manning. The former a native of Mississippi, is deceased. The mother now makes her home in Clarendon, Arkansas. Dr. and Mrs. Kirby have become the parents of four children: Leonidas Manning, born October 12, 1913; Mildred Celeste, born December 17, 1915; Henry H., Jr., born July 16, 1918; and Carolyn Joyce, born August 2, 1920.

Politically Dr. Kirby is a democrat, and religiously he is identified with the Christian church, in which he is serving as deacon, his life being guided by its advanced principles that have to do not only with man's relation to his Maker but with his relation to his fellowmen as well.

BURWELL W. BENTON.

The extent and importance of the business interests under control of Burwell W. Benton place him as one of the prominent figures in connection with the hardwood lumber trade of the southwest. He makes his home at Pine Bluff but owns and operates sawmills in various sections of the state and he is, moreover, the president of the Benton Miller Oil Company. His interests have been developed along most progressive lines, with a recognition of the opportunities and possibilities of trade and his keen sagacity and diligence have been forceful factors in the attainment of his present-day success. Mr. Benton was born in Carthage, Texas, in 1872, a son of J. M. and Isola (Chatham) Benton, the former a native of Jackson, Tennessee, while the latter was born in Charleston, South Carolina. The father served in the Confederate army, being flag bearer of his regiment and was wounded in battle. His father, J. M. Benton, removed from Missouri to Tennessee and the family had long been represented in the south. The grandfather of Mr. Benton in the maternal line was J. W. Chatham, who married a Miss Clark and it was in Carthage, Texas, that J. M. Benton and Isola Chatham were married. They became the parents of five children: Burwell, Jennie, Beulah, William and Lucy.

Burwell W. Benton pursued his education in the schools of Texas, where he made his home until 1889, when at the age of seventeen years he came to Arkansas, settling in Pine Bluff. A little later he became identified with the wholsesale grain trade and was engaged in mercantile pursuits for seventeen years. For an extended period he has been identified with the hardwood lumber industry, maintaining his offices in the Citizens Bank building of Pine Bluff. In this connection he owns and operates several sawmills in the state, buying and selling hardwood lumber, his patrons being largely eastern dealers and manufacturers. He ships hardwood lumber to the value of a hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually, having thus built up a business of very substantial proportions. He is thoroughly acquainted with every phase of the lumber trade and his correct valuation of logs and of standing timber has constituted one of the chief elements in his growing success.

Mr. Benton was united in marriage to Miss Anastacia Walsh and they are well known in Pine Bluff, where they have many friends. Mr. Benton belongs to the Knights of Pythias, is a past grand chancellor of Arkansas, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also well known in club circles, being president of the Civilian Club and also president of the Ad Club. He is allied with many progressive movements, contributing to the growth and upbuilding of the state and of the community in which he makes his home, his labors at all times proving cooperant factors in public progress.

A. C. HANEY, M. D.

Dr. A. C. Haney, who since 1917 has engaged in medical and surgical practice at Atkins, was born on a farm about a mile and a half north of the town, October 2, 1889, his parents being J. F. and Margaret (Webb) Haney, and a grandson of John Haney, who was born in Alabama and who enlisted for service in the Confederate army during the Civil war. He was wounded in battle and the same shell which wounded him killed his son. The maternal grandfather was Hamilton Webb, a native of Arkansas, who devoted his life to farming but died at a comparatively early age. J. F. Haney was born in Alabama, January 30, 1863, and his life record cóvers the intervening period to the 17th of December, 1921. He was married in Pope county, Arkansas, to Margaret Webb, whose birth occurred in that county in 1866 and she is still living. Mr. Haney came to Pope county in 1885 and for three years rented land, after which he purchased a small farm, incurring a considerable indebtedness in so doing, as he had money enough to make only a little payment upon the place. As the years passed, however, he prospered and afterward purchased two hundred and sixty acres of land additional. He became a well known live stock raiser, making a specialty of handling horses and mules and in this business he met with substantial success. He voted with the democratic party and both he and his wife were members of the Baptist church. Their family numbered nine children, of whom Dr. Haney is the eldest, the others being: Stewart, who is on a farm in Pope county; Sewood, who occupies the old home farm; Stanley, Zerl and Zula, all at home; Avis, Monte and Ralph, in school.

Dr. Haney, after attending high school, continued his education in Ouachita College at Arkadelphia through a period of two years and pursued his first course of lectures in the medical department of the State University at Little Rock. He was later a student in the medical department of the University of Tennessee at Memphis for two years and in 1914 he was graduated in medicine from the University of Oklahoma. He began practice near Russellville, Arkansas, and in 1917 removed to Atkins, where he has remained. His ability is recognized and today his practice is large and gratifying. His professional service, however, was interrupted by military duty and on the 12th of September, 1917, he enlisted in the United States army, going to the training camp at Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga, Tennessee. He was assigned to the One Hundred and Fourteenth Field Artillery at Camp Sevier, near Greenville, South Carolina, and was afterward sent to New Orleans in April. On the 20th of May, 1918, he left New Orleans and made his way to Camp Mills, New York, and on the 26th of May he sailed for Europe, landing at Liverpool on the 8th of June. He was then transported to Havre, France, where he remained until the 20th of August and was then sent to the front. He was in four of the most important engagements that occurred in the closing year of the war, that on the St. Mihiel sector, the Argonne forest offensive, the engagement at Woevre Plains and in the Toul sector, where he was stationed when the armistice was signed. He was promoted to a captaincy on the 17th of February, 1919, and received his discharge on the 25th of April, following. Dr. Haney then returned home and resumed the private practice of medicine, in which he has continued, reaching Atkins on the 6th of May, 1919.

In 1913 Dr. Haney was married to Miss Annie Jackson, who was born in Atkins, a daughter of Mack Jackson, a farmer, living near this city. On January 15, 1922, a son, Dewell, was born to this union. Dewell is a stout, healthy boy and bids fair to be a Dr. Haney, Jr. Both Dr. and Mrs. Haney are Christian people, Mrs. Haney having membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, while Dr. Haney belongs to the Baptist church. Since 1914, N. H. White has engaged in the real estate business in Fayetteville under the name of White & Company. There is no man in the community more familiar with land and land values than Mr. White and he has a business of extensive proportions. He handles a great deal of local real estate and also represents various farm and city loan companies. He was born in Clayton county, Iowa, October 4, 1857, a son of Balaam and Lois (Larmphear) White, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Pennsylvania. Grandfather Larmphear was born in Pennsylvania and removed to Iowa at an early day. He engaged in farming in that state and became one of the representative agriculturists of the community. Mr. and Mrs.

White were married in Iowa, to which state they removed with their parents at an early day, and Mr. White farmed there until his demise. Both he and his wife died there, representative citizens of the community in which they resided for many years. Seven children were born to their union, three of whom are living: N. H., whose name initiates this review; Myron, living at Edgewood, Iowa; and Robert, farming near Edgewood, Iowa. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church and the father gave his political allegiance to the republican party.

N. H. White received a common school education in Iowa. At the age of seven years he left his home and went to live with his grandparents. As soon as he was old enough to work he secured employment on neighboring farms by the month and followed that line of occupation until he was twenty-five years of age. After his marriage he rented a farm on which he resided for three years, at the termination of that time, removing to Marathon, Iowa, where he engaged in the livery stable and draying business. He conducted that business successfully for twenty years. Subsequently he removed to Minnesota and engaged in the real estate business at Montevideo for seven years. He did well in that line and finding it much to his liking came to Fayetteville in 1914 and has been a prominent real estate man here since. He conducts his business under the name of White & Company and in addition to handling a large local business, represents various farm and city loan companies. He is well versed in land values and is regarded as safe and sane in his judgment on all matters of investment.

In Iowa, in 1881, occurred the marriage of Mr. White and Miss Emma A. Watts, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of William Watts. Her father was born in England and came to the United States at an early day, locating in Iowa. He won prominence as a carpenter, cabinetmaker and farmer and his demise occurred in Iowa. She was chosen from a class of two hundred and fifty to do some food demonstration work and for that she was awarded a third diploma.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise, Mr. White has given his political allegiance to the republican party and the principles for which it stands. Mrs. White is a member of the Baptist church and both she and her husband are consistent members of the congregation. Although Mr. White devotes the greater part of his time to his real estate interests he is a public-spirited citizen and as a member of the Chamber of Commerce takes an active interest in any movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare.

SAMUEL GEORGE BOYCE, M. D.

It is characteristic of the American soldier of the late war that after faithful performance of duty he has returned to his home, quietly taking up the pursuits of private life, demanding no recognition for his bravery and loyalty other than a chance to make good as a private citizen. Dr. Samuel George Boyce is numbered among those who rendered the utmost aid within their power in connection with the prosecution of the World war and today he is pursuing the practice of his profession in Little Rock, his capability well entitling him to a large and growing practice.

Dr. Boyce was born in Hodgeman county, Kansas, May 29, 1887, and is a son of Dr. Samuel George and Katie (Fyock) Boyce. The father was born in Ireland in 1850 and came to the United States when twelve years of age. His wife was born in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in 1858 and they were married in Kansas City, Kansas, becoming parents of two sons and three daughters, of whom one son and three daughters are yet living. The father took his family to Pueblo, Colorado, where he engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery to the time of his death, which occurred in 1891. His political endorsement was given to the democratic party. His widow survives and yet makes her home in Kansas City.

Dr. Samuel George Boyce, Jr., acquired his education in the schools of Ottawa, Kansas, and of Kansas City, Missouri, and after deciding upon the practice of medicine as a life work he entered the Western Eclectic College of Medicine and Surgery in Kanass City from which he was graduated in 1909 with the degree of M. D. He has remained a constant student of his profession, utilizing every opportunity to broaden his knowledge of the science of medicine and surgery and thus promote his efficiency. In 1912 he did postgraduate work in the Kansas City Postgraduate Medical School and Hospital and he spent the scholastic year of 1919-20 as a student in Tulane

DR. SAMUEL G. BOYCE

University of New Orleans. Following his graduation he located for practice in Little Rock, Arkansas, where he has remained since 1909. His ability is widely recognized and he today enjoys an extensive practice of an important character.

On the 22d of September, 1909, Dr. Boyce was married in Little Rock to Miss Mary Lucille Babcock, who was born on the 18th of February, 1888, in the capital city, a daughter of William F. and Julia Burnelle (Bernie) Babcock, nee Smade. They still reside in Little Rock and Mrs. Babcock is well known as the author of a number of works. Dr. and Mrs. Boyce have become the parents of two children: Julia Burnelle, born February 28, 1911; and Samuel G., born March 20, 1913.

Dr. Boyce has continuously engaged in the practice of his profession since his graduation save for the period of his service in the World war. He enlisted on the 28th of June, 1917, and became a first lieutenant of the Medical Reserve Corps, remaining with the army until honorably discharged February 26, 1919. In August, 1917, he reported for active duty at the Medical Officers' Training Camp at Fort Riley, Kansas. In September, 1917, he reported for duty to the Thirty-fifth Division at Camp Doniphan, Fort Sill, Oklahoma, and was attached to the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Ambulance Company. He sustained several very severe wounds at the front. Though not expected to do so, he felt that in going to the firing line he might save the lives of wounded men who otherwise would bleed to death before reaching the aid stations in the rear. His superior officer, Lieutenant Colonel Vinsonhaler, said of him: "Dr. Samuel G. Boyce, while battalion surgeon of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Infantry, was wounded in the line of duty. He dressed wounded soldiers under fire. After being wounded and on his way to the rear, he removed part of his own bandages to make a tourniquet to save a brother officer, Lieutenant Robert S. Boyd of Washington, D. C., who was bleeding and in great danger. This occurred at the Meuse-Argonne, between Boulden and Exermont. Lieutenant Boyce was several times operated on in base hospitals and particles of shrapnel removed, leaving him with a permanent lameness. It can be said of him that he did his whole duty bravely—and that is as much as can be said for soldiers." Dr. Boyce arrived at Hoboken, New Jersey, on the U. S. S. Maui, January 25, 1919, and entered Embarkation Hospital No. 4, New York city. He was transferred February 2, 1919, to the base hospital at Camp Pike, Arkansas, and was honorably discharged on the 26th of that month. He was also one of the organizers of the Independent Oil Men's Association of the United States and has been very active therein. He is now serving for the second term as president of the association, which has its headquarters in Chicago. In June, 1921, he was elected president of the National Petroleum Marketers Association, which is an amalgamation of the Independent Oil Men's Association and the American Independent Oil Men's Association. In July, 1921, he organized the Arkansas-Tennessee Oil Marketing Association, of which he became the president. It is a self-evident fact that he is a prominent leader among the oil men of the country and his efforts are most effective along this line of work. He has studied closely the complex problems that confront the oil men and his powers of organization and his executive force have been most effective in promoting oil interests in the southwest. He is a director of the National Petroleum Mutual Fire Insurance Association of Philadelphia, which is one of the leading mutual insurance companies owned and controlled by the independent oil industry.

THOMAS J. GAY

Collins, who was born in Corsicana, Texas, June 28, 1878, and is a graduate of a private school for girls in that city. They have become the parents of a son, Hubert Madison, who was born on October 8, 1895, and who was married in Independence, Kansas, January 19, 1917, to Halyebert Phillips Craig.

Mr. Gay gives his political endorsement to the democratic party, which he has supported since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He belongs to the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, taking an active part in its work and serving on its board of stewards. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine, a Knight of Pythias and a member of the United Commercial Travelers. Appreciative of the social amenities of life he has membership in the Country Club, the Rotary Club and the Spring Lake Club. He is a man of marked force of character and of notable resourcefulness in business. He deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, being strictly a self-made man, dependent upon his own resources since starting out in life at the age of seventeen years. Step by step he has advanced through the utilization of the opportunities which have come to him and today he stands as one of the prominent representatives of the oil interests of Arkansas. Within this year oil has been discovered and is being refined in Arkansas. In addition to the marketing, principally in Arkansas, he is now in a position to market the output of refineries in El Dorado and Little Rock, shipping in tank cars over the United States.

JUDGE FRANCIS M. FULK.

The life story of Judge Fulk should be of interest. Ohio numbered him among her native sons, his birth having occurred at Lock, Licking county, on the 9th of January, 1852. He came of a family of English ancestry founded in America by his great-grandfather. The early generations of the family resided in Virginia and several of the name participated in the Revolutionary war. From Rockingham county, Virginia, the grandparents of Judge Fulk removed to Ohio and when their son was but a little lad of four years they started westward for Iowa and took up their abode at West Grove.

Judge Fulk was there reared in what was comparatively a pioneer district and when he had completed his public school education he continued his studies in Howe's Academy at Moulton, Iowa, while later he became a student in the Iowa Wesleyan University at Mount Pleasant. He then took up the profession of teaching and was thus engaged in Davis county, Iowa, and in Marshall county, Missouri, while the year 1870 witnessed his arrival in Arkansas, at which time he became a resident of Monroe county. There again he was identified with the work of the schoolroom and later he was a teacher at Wheetley, in St. Francis county, where he remained until his marriage. He steadily worked his way upward until at the time of his death he was numbered among the millionaire residents of Little Rock.

It was on the 3rd of August, 1873, that Judge Fulk was united in marriage to Florence M. Parsons and to them were born two sons: Judge F. Guy Fulk, a distinguished representative of the Little Rock bar, served for twelve years as judge of the second division of the circuit court for Pulaski and Perry counties; the younger son, Augustus M. Fulk, is represented on another page of this work.

In 1873 Judge Fulk removed to Pulaski county, establishing his home in Union township, where he resided for a few months and then took up his abode in Little Rock. Here he worked at the carpenter's trade and in that way earned enough money to buy a small stand at the old market on Fifth street, between Main and Louisiana streets. His initial step in commercial circles brought to him the opportunity for steady advancement in the business world. He had been successfully identified with commercial interests for a number of years when he turned to the profession of law, qualified for practice and entered upon the work of the bar, being admitted at Little Rock in 1874, although it was not until 1881 that he entered actively upon the work of the profession, in which he continued until his death. It was not long before he had gained a large and lucrative practice and in later years, when his sons had been admitted to the bar, they joined him in organizing the firm of Fulk, Fulk & Fulk. The practice of law, however, constituted but one phase of Judge Fulk's activities, for he was equally well known in real estate circles. He made extensive investments in property, recognizing the trend of the times and acquiring large land holdings which his judgment told him would rapidly increase in value. In 1883 he joined John B. Jones and W. B. Worthen in organizing the Little Rock Real Estate Exchange, having offices on the site of the New Capitol Hotel. The soundness of his opinions concerning real estate investments was manifest in the prosperity that came to him through his property holdings. His possessions included a number of valuable business blocks, together with large tracts of land adjacent to the city. He was also the owner of the Fulk building, adjoining the Federal building, and such was his recognized ability in making choice of real estate that many sought his advice and opinions concerning investments of this character.

On the 24th of March, 1910, Judge Fulk was called to his final rest, being then but fifty-eight years of age. At his passing words of deep regret were heard on every hand, for he was a man who numbered his friends by the hundreds. Of him Judge J. W. House said. "He was one of the best friends that a man could have and was a man of strict integrity. I have known him intimately for twenty-one years and have found him to be a man of remarkable ability, both in business and as an attorney. He was always upright in his dealings and I regret very much to hear the news of his death." J. E. Williams, who had known Judge Fulk for thirty-five years, spoke of him as "a remarkable man in every respect, one whom I admired as a citizen and as an attorney and a man who was always upright in his dealings, honest in his opinions and a friend to all who knew him." Hon. Dan W. Jones, governor of Arkansas, said: "I have known Judge Fulk twenty years and have always considered him a straightforward man of wonderful native ability, an attorney of more than ordinary merit and a man of the highest integrity and moral character. He was a man upon whom one could always depend as a friend." Many other equally commendable words were spoken by those who were closely associated with Judge Fulk during his active business and professional career in Little Rock. He was prominently known in democratic circles, although he never sought nor desired office for himself. He served as chairman of the democratic central committee of Pulaski county at various times through a period of thirty years and on many occasions was chairman of the board of election commissioners in his county. He belonged to the Christian church in his later years and his life at all times was guided by the highest principles and standards of conduct.

E. M. WILLIAMS.

E. M. Williams, publisher of the Carlisle Independent, a newspaper of Carlisle, Lonoke county, was born in Chariton county, Missouri, in the year 1867, and is a son of M. R. and Ellen Williams. The father was born in Howard county, Missouri, while the mother's birth occurred in Chariton county, that state. Her parents were from Kentucky and became residents of Missouri in 1819, when the work of progress and development seemed scarcely begun in that state. M. R. Williams was a newspaper man who published The Spectator at Salisbury, Missouri, a paper that was afterward issued under the name of the Press Spectator. He not only exerted a widely felt influence over public thought and action through the columns of the paper but also took active part in framing the laws of the state as a member of the general assembly of Missouri. To him and his wife were born three children: E. M., of this review; C. C., living in Little Rock; and Thomas, whose home is in Stuttgart, Arkansas.

E. M. Williams acquired a country school education and when his school days were over began learning the printer's trade in his father's office. In the year 1889 he arrived in Arkansas City, where he published a newspaper known as The New Enterprise, in which undertaking he was associated with John W. Davis. In 1893 he returned to Missouri and afterward went to what was then the Indian Territory, settling at Afton, where he founded The Afton Advance. After publishing his journal at that place for a time he returned to Carterville, Missouri, where he founded The Daily Journal. Once more he came to Arkansas and took up his abode at Stuttgart, where he and his brother owned and published The Free Press, conducting the paper for a period of sixteen years. It was in 1916 that E. M. Williams removed to Carlisle and purchased the Independent, of which he has since been editor and proprietor. His long connection with the newspaper business has made him familiar with every phase of the work and he follows the most progressive methods in collecting news and publishing the journal. Its circulation has largely increased under his management and the Independent has become one of the successful journals issued in this part of the state. Mr. Williams also published "A Special Review of the Rice Industry," which appeared in a handsomely bound volume which would have done credit to a metropolitan newspaper. It contains a digest of the achievements in the matter of the rice industry in this entire region and in its publication he had the cooperation of the business men of Lonoke and neighboring counties.

In the year 1902 Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Laur of Olena, Arkansas, a daughter of Dr. C. T. Laur. He and his wife have a very wide acquaintance in Carlisle and this section of the state and enjoy the high regard of all. Mr. Williams is at all times actuated by a most progressive spirit and as a newspaper publisher has done much to further the interests and promote the welfare of his adopted city.

JOHN WEBB VAN HOY.

John Webster Van Hoy, widely and prominently known by reason of his connection with the forest reserve interests and now engaged in the general practice of law in Mena, was born in North Carolina, August 28, 1880, a son of William A. and Sarah (Campbell) Van Hoy, who were also natives of that state. The father, who was born in 1847, died in 1916 in Morganton, North Carolina, while the mother, who was born in 1849, is still living in that state. The father devoted his life to agricultural pursuits. His father, Edward F. Van Hoy, was also a native of North Carolina and served for a short time in the Civil war. The maternal grandfather, John R. Campbell, was likewise born in North Carolina and made farming his chief occupation. In his political views William A. Van Hoy was always a stalwart democrat and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. They were the parents of nine children, seven of whom are living.

John Webster Van Hoy, the third in order of birth, is the only member of the family residing in Arkansas. He pursued his education in the common schools of his native state and in Wake Forest College, being graduated there in 1910 on the completion of a law course. He taught school, however, for ten years before pursuing his law studies and he educated himself, earning the money by school teaching that enabled him to make preparation for the bar in Wake Forest College. He was admitted to practice in 1910 and continuously followed his profession until 1917, when he was appointed title attorney in the United States department of agriculture and was assigned to the duty of examining titles to land being acquired by the United States for the forest reserve. In 1918 he was transferred to Arkansas and had charge of the Ozark and Arkansas forest reserve, a duty which he has since discharged with marked capability and promptness. In 1922, however, he formed a law partnership with Duke Frederick and intends to devote his attention to private law practice, giving up his forest reserve work.

In 1913 Mr. Van Hoy was married to Miss Nettie Paris Casey, who was born in North Carolina, a daughter of William A. and Henrietta Casey, who were natives of that state, in which her father followed farming for many years but is now living retired. Mr. and Mrs. Van Hoy are parents of five children: Sarah Henrietta, John Webster, Jr., Jeanette, Mary Frances and William P.

The parents are members of the Baptist church and politically Mr. Van Hoy is a democrat. He served as secretary to a member of congress in 1915 and 1916 and was clerk on the house committee on expenditures in the department of agriculture at the time he was acting as secretary. He has, however, retired from political activities in order to devote his attention to law practice and the strong qualities which he previously displayed in professional work promise well for his future as an attorney at the Arkansas bar.

LESLIE W. STURDIVANT.

Leslie W. Sturdivant is engaged in farming in the vicinity of McCrory county. He is a native of this county, his birth having occurred near McCrory on the 26th of August, 1887, his parents being Charles W. and Helen (McMurtry) Sturdivant, who were natives of Virginia and of Woodruff county, Arkansas, respectively. The father removed from the Old Dominion to Tennessee and about 1880 came to Arkansas, settling in Woodruff county. He then operated a cotton gin at McCrory and also carried on farming and dealt in live stock. He further extended his efforts by building a sawmill near McCrory, which he operated for some time, and he also owned timber lands. In fact, he became a most prominent figure in the industrial and commercial development of his section of the state. He entered merchandising in partnership with Major McCrory, Dr. J. B. Neil and J. W. Wilder, the business being carried on under the name of the McCrory Mercantile Company. He also became a stockholder in the Newport Grocery Company of Newport, Arkansas, and was elected one of its directors. His business interests were ever of a nature that contributed to public progress and prosperity as well as to individual success and his enterprise and industry were an important contribution to the development and advancement of this part of the state. He always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Their family numbered four children, of whom three are living: Robert, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Leslie W.; Mabel Helen, the wife of Roy Satterfield of Lufkin, Texas; and W. C., living at Brownwood, Texas, where he is an electrician. Charles W. Sturdivant, the father of this family, departed this life in 1904, when forty-four years of age, while his wife was called to the home beyond in 1898, at the comparatively early age of thirty-three years.

Leslie W. Sturdivant pursued his education in the public schools of McCrory and afterward went to Brownwood, Texas, where he entered the preparatory department of the Howard Payne College. There he continued his studies until graduated on the completion of the college course in June, 1909. He next entered the Baylor University at Waco, Texas, and won the Bachelor of Arts degree upon graduation with the class of 1911. Starting out in the business world, he engaged in the sale of life insurance at Brownwood until 1914, when he returned to McCrory, here looking after his father's estate. He has since purchased the interests of the others in the estate and is now sole owner of the extensive and important business interests which were left by the father. In 1920 he began the production of seeds and in his farming he specializes in Paymaster corn, Triumph cotton and Certified sweet potatoes. He also grows other crops and he is extensively engaged in the raising of blooded Duroc Jersey hogs and of Cornish game chickens. He built upon his place a storage house in which to store seed from the time of harvest until ready for marketing. He finds a large sale for cotton seeds and corn over the state of Arkansas. He also grows broom corn and is engaged in the manufacture of brooms. In his storehouse he has a potato bin with a capacity of ten thousand bushels. He cultivates four hundred and eighty acres of land, following the most scientific methods in the care end development of his crops, and his is today one of the best improved farms in this part of the state. He is also vice president of the Woodruff County Farm Bureau and is secretary and treasurer of the Arkansas Sweet Potato Growers Exchange of Little Rock.

Mr. Sturdivant was united in marriage to Miss Lallie Ray Browning, a native of Hendersonville, North Carolina, and they have become parents of two children, Louise Browning and Helen Walton, both at home. Mr. and Mrs. Sturdivant belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is connected with the Elks Lodge No. 960 at Brownwood, Texas, and has taken the entered apprentice degree in Masonry at McCrory. He votes with the democratic party but has never been ambitious to hold office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his business affairs, which have always been most wisely and intelligently directed and have ever been characterized by a most progressive spirit. He has come to be recognized as an authority upon many questions relating to crop production in this part of the state, owing to his wide experience and the success which has attended his labors.

COOLEY STROUD ELLIS, M. D.

Dr. Cooley Stroud Ellis, a physician concentrating his efforts and attention upon active medical practice at Hazen, was born at Pleasant Plains, Independence county, Arkansas, in 1876, and is a representative in both the paternal and maternal lines of old southern families. His parents were J. M. and Nannie (Stroud) Ellis. The father was born in Newton, Mississippi, while the mother's birth occurred in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. John and William, brothers of J. M. Ellis, were killed while serving in the war between the north and the south. Another brother, Thomas Ellis, was killed in the Mexican war and J. M. Ellis also served with the Confederate forces in the Civil war, in which he was wounded. Through his maternal grandmother, Dr. Ellis is descended from the Blackwell family of North Carolina. The Ellis family came into Independence county at an early period in the pioneer development of this region. To Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Ellis there were born nine children, seven of whom are living: William, who is a physician, engaged in practice at Blooming Grove, Texas; John, living at Kingsville, Texas; Fannie, the wife of B. W. Crow; Lou, the wife of W. Fosterberry; Ora, the wife of F. M. Teas; Thomas, a farmer of Independence county; Kate, the deceased wife of J. S. Ham; Ada, the deceased wife of George McKee; and Cooley Stroud of this review. The father departed this life in the year 1898 and for more than a decade and a half the mother survived, her death occurring in 1914.

Dr. C. S. Ellis, having mastered the elementary branches of learning taught in the common schools, continued his education in the Mountain Home College and in the Northen Texas Normal School. Having determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work he later entered the Louisville (Ky.) Medical College and when his course there was completed he opened an office at Oil Trough in Independence county, where he remained for three years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Shelbyville, Arkansas, where he again practiced until 1914, when he came to Hazen, where he has resided through the intervening period. He is regarded as one of the capable and successful physicians in this part of the state and he has done a great deal of public health work for the government. He has membership in the Prairie County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Ellis was married to Miss Maude Shaver, a daughter of Van and Mary (Livingston) Shaver of Sharp county, Arkansas. They have become parents of three children: Van, Charles and Mary Livingston. Dr. Ellis is deeply interested in the cause of public education and has done effective service in this connection as president of the school board. He has also served as deputy clerk of Independence county. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and with the Woodmen of the World and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Baptist church. Those who know him—and he has a wide acquaintance—attest the sterling worth of his character, as well as his high standing in professional circles.

JAMES A. WARD.

James A. Ward is the vice president and manager of the Chero-Cola Bottling Company, in which connection he is developing one of the important business enterprises of the city. Mr. Ward is a native of Fort Smith. He was reared and educated here and has so directed his business affairs since starting out in life on his own account that his position is now a gratifying and enviable one. Before embarking in the business which now claims his attention he was interested in the wholesale food business. The Chero-Cola Bottling Company was organized and incorporated on the 3d of March, 1919, with the following officers: H. C. Bass, president; James A. Ward, vice president and general manager; and C. J. Wegman, secretary and treasurer. This company is engaged in the manufacture of the famous Chero-Cola and other sodas, which they bottle and sell to the local trade and throughout the surrounding territory, having already built up a business of very substantial proportions. Since Mr. Ward's identification with the company it has seen rapid growth and the extent of the trade makes the business one of gratifying profit.

Mr. Ward belongs to the Business Men's Club and is keenly interested in all those forces which make for the upbuilding of the city and in all organized efforts for its continued growth and the extension of its trade relations.

EVAN SHELBY RODMAN.

Along the steps of an orderly progression, winning advancement through capability and merit, Evan Shelby Rodman has reached the vice presidency of the Bankers Trust Company of Little Rock and is also serving as its cashier. He was born in Barton, Mississippi, May 25, 1882, his parents being William D. and Nannie Eveline (Cumpton) Rodman. The father's birth occurred in Warsaw, South Carolina, in 1842, and removing to Arkansas he settled in Altus, where he followed merchandising. He served during the Civil war with the rank of captain, being for four years attached to the army of northern Virginia. He was once captured in Indiana and incarcerated as a prisoner of war for several months. His political views were always in accord with the principles and teachings of the democratic party. It was in 1871 at Barton, Mississippi, that Mr. Rodman was married to Nannie Eveline Cumpton, who was born at that place in 1850, and they became parents of two sons and a daughter, all of whom are living.

Both the father and mother, however, have departed this life, the death of the latter occurring in June, 1918, while Captain Rodman died in April, 1919.

In the attainment of his education Evan S. Rodman attended the schools of Altus, Arkansas, to which place the family removed in 1890, and he was there graduated on the completion of a high school course. He afterward matriculated in the University of Arkansas, leaving the university in his junior year, in 1903. In the fourteen years which covered the period between the completion of his college course and his identification with the Bankers Trust Company he was engaged in banking. In July, 1917, he entered into active association with the Bankers Trust Company as auditor and was subsequently made assistant secretary. In 1920 he was advanced to the position of cashier and in 1921 became vice president, filling both positions at the present time. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with various phases of the banking business and his position is now one of large responsibility, indicating his resourcefulness and forcefulness as a banker.

In Little Rock on the 10th of June, 1909, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Rodman and Miss Georgia May McClue, who was born in Benton, Arkansas, in 1887 and is a graduate of the Little Rock high school. By her marriage she has become the mother of three children: Evelyn, William McClue and Emmett Lee.

Mr. Rodman is a Scottish Rite Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine and has ever been a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft since initiated into the order. In his political views he is a democrat. When there is a demand made upon his time and energies for public benefit he does not hesitate to make ready response and his cooperation and aid are valued factors in bringing about desired results for the benefit of community, commonwealth and country.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL HENRY STITT.

There are many reasons why Captain Samuel Henry Stitt should find mention in the history of Arkansas. He contributed largely to the upbuilding of Hot Springs and the development of the city into a great health resort. He was active in business circles, a recognized leader in politics and prominent in connection with Masonic interests. His wisely directed efforts had brought him a notable measure of success and at the time of his death he was president of the Arlington Hotel Company.

Captain Stitt was born in Bridport, Dorsetshire, England, November 15, 1843, a son of David Patterson and Mary Ann (Pollard) Stitt. The father was born at Kerr, Dumfrieshire, Scotland, in April, 1803, and long made his home at that place. His wife was born in Taunton, Somersetshire, England, December 24, 1805, and they were married at that place. The death of David P. Stitt occurred January 10, 1867, while his wife died on the 18th of August, 1865. They were parents of eight children: Mary Jane; Elizabeth Pollard; George P., who died in infancy; Hannah P.; Margaret; Jessie; David P.; and Samuel Henry.

The last named was quite young when brought to the new world by his parents, who settled in Nashville, Tennessee. In the year 1868 he came to Arkansas and for a brief period was engaged in the ice business at Little Rock. In the latter part of the same year, however, he came to Hot Springs and was so impressed with the possibilities of this locality as a resort that he induced Major Gaines to become associated with him in the building of a hotel. They formed a partnership under the style of Stitt & Gaines and erected the Hot Springs Hotel. The firm afterward became Stitt & Lewis, the junior partner acquiring the interest of Major Gaines in the enterprise. After a few years Captain Stitt disposed of his share in the Hot Springs Hotel and in 1874 he entered into partnership with Colonel Fordyce and Colonel Bugg in building the old Arlington Hotel on the government reservation. For several years the partnership between these gentlemen was continued, after which Colonel Bugg sold his interest to A. B. Gaines. In 1892 the old Arlington was torn down and the present building erected by a company of which Captain Stitt was the president. He continued as the chief executive officer of that corporation to the time of his death, which occurred on the 9th of July, 1913. He had acted as manager of the old Arlington Hotel and was president of the new Arlington Hotel Company, whereby he contributed much to the development of the hotel interests of this city. He was active in making the hotel one of the beautiful modern hostelries in Hot Springs. He played an important part in the history and development of the city, having ever steadfastly believed in the possibilities and in the future of the resort.

On the 29th of June, 1875, Captain Stitt was married to Miss Augusta Gaines, who was born at Hot Springs, Garland county, a daughter of William H. and Maria (Belding) Gaines, mentioned at length on another page of this work. The children of this marriage are: Mary Elizabeth; Samuel Henry, who died in infancy; Herbert D.; Frank L.; and Harrie, who died at the age of two years. Captain Stitt was devoted to the welfare of his family and found his greatest happiness in promoting their comfort. He was an active and enthusiastic supporter of the republican party and did much to organize party forces in the state at an early day. He was honored by the party on several occasions and his opinions at all times carried weight in its councils. He stood equally high in Masonic circles and was an ardent advocate of the principles upon which the craft is based. A strong and kindly man, a stanch and loyal friend, no good cause ever made appeal to him in vain and in various ways he gave tangible evidence of his love for his fellowmen and his deep interest in the upbuilding of the city in which he so long continued to reside. Captain Stitt was always considered forbearing, a man of quiet demeanor and with little of that aggressive spirit which so often antagonizes. On the contrary he was rather retiring in expressing his views but when called upon to do so he did not hesitate to announce his honest opinions concerning business affairs nor public policy. In a quiet but effective way he contributed to the growth and development of the city and there are many who cherish his memory because of his kindly spirit and his generous disposition.

PHOEBE LININGER, M. D.

Dr. Phoebe Lininger, a physician and surgeon, successfully practicing in Springdale, was born in Ridgeville, Ohio, a daughter of George and Lucinda (Lindley) Struble. Her father was born in New Jersey and her mother was born in New York and they were married in Ohio. The father was a carpenter by trade and became one of the pioneer settlers of northwestern Ohio. He also devoted much of his life to the work of the ministry of the United Brethren church and he married nineteen hundred couples in three counties of Ohio—Henry, Fulton and Defiance counties. To him and his wife were born eight children, five of whom are living, and two of the sons, William and Harrison Struble, served in the Civil war, the latter dying while at the front. Those who survive are: Permelia, a resident of Ohio; Mrs. Mary Dickman at Sumner, Iowa; Dr. Lininger; Angeline, living in Wauseon, Ohio; and George Struble of Gary, Indiana.

The daughter, Phoebe Struble, spent her girlhood in her native state and pursued her education in the public schools there. In young womanhood she became the wife of Andrew Lininger, who was a merchant of Ohio and in 1891 they came to Springdale, Arkansas. Here Mr. Lininger engaged in business for a time but afterward purchased land and during the last twelve years has resided on his farm. They have a splendid small farm of sixty acres, of which six acres is planted to peaches and sixteen acres to apples and in addition they own very valuable city property. Mr. and Mrs. Lininger have two children: Charles, now living in California, has been a teacher of music for many years, but at the present time is living on a farm. He was a student of the State University of Arkansas. The second child is Bertha, the wife of Lee Sanders, who is a banker of Springdale and they have two children, Dorothia L. and Gus Lininger Sanders. Both are now in school, the daughter being a student in Stephens College at Columbia, Missouri.

Dr. Lininger, having laid an excellent educational foundation through her studies in the schools of Ridgeville and of Napoleon, Ohio, completed her preparation for a professional career as a medical student at Kansas City, Missouri, being graduated from the Woman's Medical College of Kansas City, Kansas, in 1903. She had begun the study of medicine when a mere child, under the direction of the old family physician but gave up the idea of practicing following her marriage, until her children were well grown. She then again turned to the profession for which she has a natural love and in the intervening years she has done considerable postgraduate work in Chicago. She began practice in Springdale in 1903 and for a number of years she practiced in Iowa. Since her return to Springdale she has engaged in general practice to some extent but now concentrates her efforts only upon office practice and has been accorded a most liberal patronage. She is a member of the Washington County Medical Society and also of the Arkansas State Medical Society and her social position is one of equal prominence with her place in the profession.

GEORGE N. ROSS.

One of the prominent citizens of Morrillton is George N. Ross, who since 1914 has operated the Morrillton Steam Laundry here. He was born in Callaway county, Missouri, on the 10th of November, 1855, a son of W. F. and Elizabeth (Callaway) Ross. On the maternal side Mr. Ross is descended from Daniel Boone, and Callaway county was named in honor of his great-grandfather. The maternal grandfather, Joseph Callaway, was born and raised in Callaway county, Missouri, where he engaged in farming. W. F. Ross was born in Tennessee and went from that state to Missouri in 1840. He purchased land there for twelve and one-half cents an acre, most of it being wooded and to him fell the arduous task of clearing it and putting it under cultivation. He became one of the prominent farmers in the community. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Callaway and to their union eight children were born: George N., whose name initiates this review; L. L., the wife of D. C. Fletchall; and F. F., William, J. M., J. H., Mary, and N. A., all deceased. The family was affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the father gave his political allegiance to the republican party, in the interest of which he took an active part.

In the acquirement of an education George N. Ross attended the public schools of his native county, walking a distance of from one and one-half to two and one-half miles daily. Upon the completion of his education he worked on the home farm, where he remained until he was twenty-four years of age. Subsequently he became interested in the insurance business and locating in Warrensburg, Missouri, he was active in that business for nineteen years, achieving more than substantial success. At one time he ranked ninth in order of one hundred and seventy-five agents. In 1903, he put the insurance business aside and opened a laundry in Warrensburg, which he conducted quite successfully until 1906, when he came to Arkansas and located in Clarksville. He bought out a laundry there and was active in its operation until 1914, when he disposed of his interests and came to Morrillton. He engaged in the same line of business here, buying out a laundry and installing the most modern machinery, and he conducts it as the Morrillton Steam Laundry. Mr. Ross has displayed keen insight and enterprise in the management of his business and his intelligently directed efforts are being correspondingly rewarded.

Mr. Ross was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Davis, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of J. W. Davis. Mr. Davis was born in Tennessee and went to Missouri previous to the Civil war, where he followed the trade of a carpenter. Upon the outbreak of the war he enlisted in the Union army and served throughout that conflict. After his return to Missouri he resumed his carpentering and also engaged in farming, achieving substantial success. For some time he served his fellowmen as probate judge of Jasper county, Missouri. Mr. Davis is now living in Springfield, that state, hale and hearty at the age of eighty-four years. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and is an elder in the Presbyterian church. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Ross four children have been born: C. L., a bookkeeper in Kansas City; R. D., associated with his father in the laundry business; Andra L., the wife of Albert Brasham of Clarksville, a grocer; and Alma L., the wife of Pryor Cruce, who is engaged in the automobile business in Morrillton.

Mr. Ross takes an intelligent interest in public affairs of the city and state, voting the republican ticket. The family is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally Mr. Ross is identified with the Court of Honor. He is a keen business man, shrewd and discriminating in his commercial transactions, active in management and steady in progress. His pleasing personality, geniality and marked enterprise, as well as his general capability and thorough knowledge of his business, well qualify him for the position he holds among the representative business men of Morrillton.

THOMAS C. FLEEMAN.

Thomas C. Fleeman, postmaster of Ozark, is one of the representative young men of this city and here his birth occurred April 30, 1892, his parents being M. F. and M. U. (Carter) Fleeman. He represents one of the old pioneer families of this county, being a grandson of John Fleeman, who arrived in Franklin county at a very early day and operated a mill here for a number of years, continuing his residence in this locality to the time of his death. His grandfather in the maternal line was Thomas A. Carter, also an early settler, who engaged in the practice of medicine in Ozark for a considerable period. M. F. Fleeman, the father, was born in Franklin county, Arkansas, while the mother's birth occurred in Mississippi. Mr. Fleeman died in the year 1899. Mrs. Fleeman is still making her home at Ozark. M. F. Fleeman owned a livery business and farm property and also owned and operated a ferry. He held membership in the Presbyterian church and was also a loyal follower of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he was a democrat and at the time of the Civil war he served as a captain in the Confederate army. He first entered J. J. Walker's company of the First Arkansas Cavalry, state troops, in the spring of 1861, a command that after the battles of Oak Hill and Wilson Creek was disbanded. He then joined an organization that became Company K, of the Northwestern Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, in which he became first lieutenant and after the death of Captain Krider he was advanced to the rank of captain. He was captured at Webb City, Arkansas, where he had returned for volunteers and was imprisoned on Johnson's Island. To him and his wife were born nine children, six of whom are living: Mrs. J. S. Turner, whose husband is a farmer and banker of Ozark and who is a member of the state highway commission; Mrs. David Bryan, living at Van Buren, where her husband is engaged in banking; Mrs. Ernest Johnston of Chelsea, Oklahoma, whose husband is engaged in the men's furnishings and dry goods business; George, who conducts the Fair Store at Hope, Arkansas; Sula, at home with her mother; and Thomas C., of this review.

In the acquirement of his education Thomas C. Fleeman passed through consecutive grades to his graduation from the Ozark high school. His first work was that of clerk in a hardware store and in 1915, when but twenty-two years of age, he was made postmaster of the home town. He has been reappointed to the position and will remain the incumbent in the office until 1923. He has given general satisfaction as postmaster in the prompt and efficient discharge of his duties and the care which he has exercised in relation to the prompt collection and delivery of the mail.

On the 12th of July, 1916, Mr. Fleeman was married to Miss Cornelia Guthrie, a daughter of L. M. Guthrie, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work, and they have one child, Mary Katherine, who is five years of age. The religious faith of the parents is that of the Presbyterian church and socially they occupy an enviable position. Mr. Fleeman belongs also to the Masons and to the Woodmen of the World and his political endorsement is stanchly given to the democratic party. He has a wide acquaintance in the city in which his life has been passed and the sterling traits of his character are indicated in the fact that his stanchest friends are those who have known him from his boyhood to the present.

JUDGE ARCHIE HOUSE.

Judge Archie House, occupying the bench of the sixth district of Arkansas, was born at Little Rock on the 29th of June, 1892, and is a son of Colonel Joseph Warren House, one of the distinguished citizens of the state, known as the Grand Old Man of Arkansas. Several years prior to the Civil war the family was established in this state by A. B. and Eliza (Wilkes) House, grandparents of Archie House, who in 1858 left Tennessee and took up their abode in White county, this state. There A. B. House turned his attention to the occupation of farming and both he and his wife continued residents of that county until called to their final rest. Their son, Colonel House, was born in Hardeman county, Tennessee, June 12, 1847, and was therefore a lad of but eleven years when brought to Arkansas. He has since maintained a notable place as a lawyer, as a public official, as a political leader and as a man whose personal characteristics have endeared him to all with whom he has been brought into contact. His particularly keen sense of personal and public honor has given him standing among the foremost men of the state. In 1882 he married Miss Ina Dowdy, a native of Memphis, Tennessee, and they have become parents of two sons and three daughters. The elder son, Joseph W. House, Jr., is mentioned elsewhere in this work, while the sketch of the father, Colonel Joseph Warren House, is given at length in this volume.

Archie House, spending his youthful days under the parental roof, attended the public schools of Little Rock until he had completed the work of consecutive grades and was graduated from the high school with the class of 1910. He determined to follow in the professional footsteps of his father and for two years was a student in the University of Arkansas, in which he was graduated from the law department as a member of the class of 1913. He at once entered upon active practice and while advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, no dreary novitiate awaited him. He soon won recognition as an able and resourceful lawyer and one who, while devoted to the interests of his clients, never forgets that he owes a still higher allegiance to the majesty of the law. In May, 1920, he was appointed by Governor Brough to the office of judge of the sixth district court of Arkansas and in November of the same year he was elected to the bench for a three years' term. His course as judge has been in harmony with his record as a man and citizen, distinguished by marked fidelity to duty and by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution.

Judge House is a veteran of the World war, having served with the rank of second lieutenant in the aviation branch of the army, with which he was connected from October 3, 1917, until December 13, 1918, but did not have opportunity to go overseas. In politics he has always been a supporter of the democratic party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. His religious faith is indicated in his membership in the First Presbyterian church and his loyalty to all of the higher ideals of life make him one of the greatly respected young men of his native city.

JAMES STEPHENS THOMAS.

James Stephens Thomas, deputy prosecuting attorney of Cleveland county with residence in Rison, is one of the representative members of the legal profession of Rison. A native of Arkansas, he was born at Rowell on the 19th of August, 1896, a son of D. S. and Dora (Lewis) Thomas, both of whom are living. The paternal ancestors came to America from France and England before the Revolutionary war and settled on the coast of North Carolina. The maternal ancestry is American for many generations back. D. S. Thomas is now fifty-five years of age and a resident of Rowell. He was born and reared in that community, his parents having come from Mississippi to this state in 1855, being among the pioneer settlers of Rowell. The paternal grandfather enlisted in the Civil war from this state and served throughout that conflict as a private in the cavalry of the Confederate army. Upon attaining school age D. S. Thomas attended the common schools of Rowell and in later life engaged in farming, achieving substantial success in that connection. Mr. Thomas was married at Rowell, to Miss Dora Lewis, who is now fifty-two years of age. She was born in Alabama and came to this state in 1860, with her parents, who located on the Saline river. Her father, Tom Lewis, served as a private in the infantry during the Civil war, having enlisted from this state. He likewise saw service in the Mexican war. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas five children were born, all boys, four of whom are living: D. S., Jr., Ed, Earl and James Stephens. The last named son, whose name initiates this review, is the oldest. One boy died in infancy.

James Stephens Thomas received his education in the common schools of Rowell and in due time entered the high school at Rison. He was a student at the State Agricultural College at Monticello for two years and subsequently took a law course at the Hamilton College of Law at Chicago. After three years in that institution he was graduated with the LL. B. degree in February, 1922. Mr. Thomas acquired his higher education through personal efforts, his tuition being paid with the money received from work which he did in his spare time. He taught school in Cleveland county in 1916 and 1917 and in the latter year was admitted to practice law. He was then under age but secured a special permit to practice. In April, 1919, he came to Rison and has since practiced here, having built up a large and lucrative clientage. He is one of the promising young attorneys of the state and has had considerable practice in criminal law, although he is not specializing along that line. In June, 1919, he was appointed deputy prosecuting attorney under J. R. Wilson and is still active in that office. During the World war Mr. Thomas was in service for five months. He enlisted as a private in the infantry and subsequently was promoted to the rank of first-class sergeant of Company M, One Hundred and Eighty-second Division. For some time he was stationed at Camps Pike, Upton, Lee and Merritt.

At Rowell, this state, on the 5th of February, 1917, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Thomas to Miss Lois Robinson, a daughter of D. C. Robinson of Rock Springs, Drew county. To their union one son, James Vernon, has been born. He is now about two years old. Mrs. Thomas is one of the prominent young matrons of Rison and she is active in the club and social circles here. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and they are generous contributors to its support. Since attaining his majority Mr. Thomas has given his allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Although the greater part of his time is taken up by his professional interests, he is ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities, as well as the privileges, of citizenship and to that end takes a prominent part in the furtherance of any movement for public development and improvement.

HENRI PERNOT.

One does not have long to seek for the secret of success, for investigation into the record of most prosperous men shows that industry and capability are the qualities upon which they have builded their advancement. Perseverance and diligence are current coin in the realm of industry. Henri Pernot has never held to any false standards of life and from the outset of his career has recognized that his progress has been dependent upon his own labor. He has therefore closely applied himself to any task which he has undertaken and today he occupies a most creditable position in financial circles as the cashier of the First State Bank in Bonanza, Sebastian county. He is a native of Van Buren, Arkansas, born in 1893, and is a son of Sidney and Mary (Lacy) Pernot. His father, also a native of the city of Van Buren, is a son of the distinguished physician and surgeon, Dr. Henri Charles Pernot, who came from Paris, France, in 1847, and located in Van Buren. He, in turn, was a son of Denis Etienne Pernot, professor of rhetoric and philosophy and inspector of colleges of the Royal University of France, and a grandson of the Countess De Monthule.

Dr. Henri Charles Pernot was born in Thouars, France, in 1820, was educated in the Royal College of Poitiers as a student in the school of medicine and became one of the eminent physicians and surgeons of his native land and also of the southwestern part of the United States. He was the author of a volume entitled "De Ipecacuanna dans le Fevre Pauperole." He filled the office of president of the Crawford County Medical Society and he rendered active service to the Confederate forces as a surgeon in the southern army. He was also well known in fraternal circles, being treasurer of the Masonic lodge at Van Buren. He also served as senior warden in Trinity Episcopal church at Van Buren and his aid and influence were freely and generously given to all projects and plans for the material, intellectual and moral uplift of the community in which he made his home. In 1851 he was united in marriage to Miss E. A. Sargeant, a daughter of Dr. Ichabod Sargeant of Sainte Genevieve, Missouri. Dr. and Mrs. Pernot became the parents of two daughters and three sons: Emily Anstes, the wife of Dr. James A. Mathews of Van Buren; Ichabod Sargeant; Henry Charles; Sidney Austin, who is the father of Henri Pernot of this review; and Elizabeth Ada. The son-in-law, Dr. James A. Mathews, was at one time rector of the Episcopal church at Van Buren, filling that position for many years. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, and was a son of Robert and Anna (La Poir) Mathews. He studied in Trinity College at Dublin and in the General Theological Seminary of New York, after crossing the Atlantic to the United States. Having thus qualified for the work of the ministry, his first charge was at Memphis, Tennessee, and subsequently he accepted the pastorate of Trinity church at Van Buren, Arkansas, where he labored for an extended period, largely contributing to the upbuilding of the church and the extension of the cause. He likewise filled pastorates at Warren, Ohio, Mount Vernon, Illinois, and Cleveland, Ohio. He was a Mason who attained the Knights Templar degree of the York Rite, and everywhere he went he commanded the highest respect and honor of his fellowmen.

Sidney Austin Pernot, father of Henri Pernot, has long figured prominently in financial circles, having become a banker in 1884. He is now connected with the First National Bank of Van Buren. To him and his wife were born four children: Henri, whose name introduces this review; Mary E., at home; Sidney Lacy, deceased; and Laura Louise, also deceased.

Henri Pernot was educated in the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee Subsequent to this time he was employed in the Merchants National Bank at Fort Smith, Arkansas, and in 1917 he volunteered for service in the army, becoming connected with the air service with the rank of sergeant. He was for nine months in England and was mustered out on the 27th of December, 1918. Following his return home he became associated with the First State Bank of Bonanza in January, 1919, and is now cashier of this institution. Mr. Pernot has been a contributing factor to the development and progress of the bank and the success of the institution during the past two years is due in part to his uniform courtesy to the bank's patrons, his efforts to please and his able manner of safeguarding the interests of the institution.

Mr. Pernot was united in marriage to Miss Irene Leyden of Bonanza, where they make their home and have many warm friends. To Mr. and Mrs. Pernot was born, in August, 1921, one son, Henri Charles Stephen. Mr. Pernot belongs to the Masonic fraternity and also has membership in the Episcopal church. His association with these societies is indicative of the rules that govern his conduct and the course which he has pursued throughout his life. Those who know him—and he has a wide acquaintance—speak of him in terms of warm regard and accord him high position both as a business man and a citizen.

From 1906 to 1907 he taught school in Cherry Valley, this state, and from 1907 to 1908, taught at Earl. In 1908, however, he gave up teaching and went into the law office of J. J. Since that time he has continued to practice at Harrisburg and has built up an extensive and lucrative clientage, specializing in chancery and criminal law. Mr. Mayo has not only won for himself an enviable position among the leading members of the legal profession in the state, but is conceded to be one of Harrisburg's most substantial business men. Politically Mr. Mayo gives his allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and his religious faith is that of the Baptist church, to the support of which he is a generous contributor. A public-spirited citizen, with the welfare of the community ever at heart, he is connected with every organization that has for its purpose the development and improvement of the town, county and state and his friends are legion.

Duty, a leading representative of the bar of Rogers, is concentrating his attention upon his extensive law practice and in a profession demanding keen intellectuality and individual merit he has made continuous progress. A native of the south, he was born in Doddridge county, West Virginia, May 7, 1882, his parents being Andrew and Helen (Boneb) Duty. His son, Andrew, gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He died at Garfield, Arkansas, in 1914, but his widow survives and makes her home with the subject of this review. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and endeavors to guide her life by its teachings. Mr. and Mrs. Duty became the parents of two sons, John R. and Claude, both well known attorneys of Rogers and associated in practice.

John R. Duty attended the schools of his native state and afterward took up educational work, to which he devoted twelve years, being very successful as an instructor. He at once entered upon active professional work and in 1915 was admitted to practice before the state supreme court and two years later before the United States supreme court. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason and religiously is a Methodist, loyal to the teachings and purposes of both organizations.

NATHAN C. McCRARY.

Nathan C. McCrary, financier and large landholder, is now vice president of the First National Bank of Ashdown. He is a native son of Little River county, Arkansas, born February 15, 1858. His father, Mathew P. McCrary, was born in Lawrence county, Alabama, about 1828, and was a son of Mathew McCrary and grandson of Mathew McCrary, known as "Yellow Jacket" McCrary of South Carolina, so known because of his hatred of the Tories during the Revolutionary war. Mathew P. McCrary had four brothers, two of whom became residents of Arkansas. One of these, Thomas Marion McCrary, was a prominent lawyer who followed his profession in this state until 1875 and then removed to North Carolina, where he departed this life in 1905. The other brother, R. P. McCrary, became a resident of Little River county, Arkansas, in 1856, and in 1868 or 1870 removed to Comanche county, Texas. Mathew P. McCrary, father of Nathan C. McCrary, devoted his life to the occupation of farming and was also prominent in connection with public affairs. He served as the first county examiner and superintendent of schools in Little River county, was also justice of the peace and filled the position of county judge for one term. He was the first man to be initiated as a Mason into Red River Lodge while it was still under dispensation and after the charter was granted he became the first master of Red River Lodge, No. 174, F. & A. M. He was an elder in the Presbyterian church, as his father had been before him and as his son, Nathan C., is at the present time. Throughout his entire life Mathew P. McCrary was a man who merited and enjoyed the high esteem, confidence and goodwill of all who knew him and when he died in 1906 he left that priceless heritage of a good name which is rather to be chosen than great riches.

Nathan C. McCrary still has in his possession the gun which his father made for him when he was a boy of eighteen years and also has the powder horn which he carried. He was reared on a farm in the vicinity of Richmond and attended the common schools but is largely self-educated. In 1880, when twenty-two years of age, he was married to Miss Jessie Joiner of Richmond and started out to provide for the new home which he had established by clerking in a store at that place. There he remained for ten years and on the 1st of February, 1890, he became identified with a store in Richmond in association with his brother-in-law, H. C. Joiner. This partnership was maintained until the death of Mr. Joiner in 1899, after which Mr. McCrary continued the business for a decade, or until 1909, when he sold the store to the son of his former partner and in that year took control of his farms, comprising twenty-three hundred acres of rich and valuable land, to the care of which he devoted his attention entirely until 1919. In that year he came to Ashdown, where he has since made his home. For twelve years previous he had been identified with the First National Bank and he was also for several years president of the Ashdown Hardware Company. He continued his connection with the store until 1918, when he sold his interests. He is now one of the officials in the First National Bank and he is still giving supervision to his extensive and important farming interests.

By his first marriage Mr. McCrary had five children, all of whom died in infancy with the exception of Martha Nelle, who is now the wife of Seth C. Reynolds of Ashdown. In 1908 Mr. McCrary was again married, his second union being with Mrs. Betty Joiner, the widow of his former business partner.

Mr. McCrary was made a Mason in Red River Lodge No. 174, F. & A. M., in 1880 and became a Royal Arch Mason at Texarkana in 1885, while in 1904 he joined the Knights Templar commandery of Texarkana. He received the Royal and Select Master degree at Little Rock in 1907 and became identified with Arkansas Consistory, S. P. R. S., in 1906. He served as master of the blue lodge for several years, was high priest of Richmond Chapter No. 87, R. A. M., for twelve years and in November, 1920, was elected grand high priest of the Grand Chapter, R. A. M. He is now grand principal conductor of the work in the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of Arkansas and has thus figured most prominently in Masonic circles, being a most true and faithful follower the order is founded. Mr. McCrary has never sought to figure prominently in politics of the craft, his life at all times exemplifying the beneficent principles upon which but served on one occasion as county treasurer to fill out the unexpired term of A. R. Moore. He was so competent in office that he was twice reelected without opposition. He served as chairman of the democratic central committee for a number of years and has given the utmost allegiance to the party because of his firm belief in its principles as factors in good government. He was county chairman of the second, third and fourth Loan drives during the World war. Long a member of the Presbyterian church, he has served for many years as elder, as did his father and grandfather, and the consistent and upright lives of these representatives of the family in three generations have made the family name a most honorable one throughout this section of the state.

J. W. SANDERS.

As secretary and treasurer of The Hellmus Company, general merchants of Grady, J. W. Sanders occupies a prominent position in commercial circles of this section of the state and his initiative spirit and close application have been strong factors in the attainment of the success which is now attending the activities of the firm. He is one of Arkansas' native sons, his birth having occurred at Pine Bluff on the 10th of November, 1862. His father, Benjamin F. Sanders, was a native of Georgia and when ten years of age came with his parents to Arkansas. He became identified as one of the leading merchants of Pine Bluff, later entering mercantile circles of Branchville, and when Lincoln county was created he removed his business to Star City, the county seat. He was a partner of J. W. Hellmus, a brother-in-law, and their interests were conducted under the firm style of Sanders & Hellmus. Through the capable management of his business interests Mr. Sanders acquired a comfortable competence, which enabled him to spend his later years in retirement from active business operations, but he took a prominent part in public affairs, representing Lincoln county in the state legislature soon after the county was created, and he also served as sheriff and collector for the county, his public service being characterized by marked capability and devotion to duty. He was one of the foremost men in southeastern Arkansas and his demise, which occurred in 1876, was deeply regretted by a large circle of friends.

J. W. Sanders attended the public schools of Lincoln county and during the summer following his father's death, which occurred when he was fourteen years of age, he worked on the home farm but in the fall went to Relfs Bluff, where he became a clerk in a general store, thus gaining a knowledge of merchandising. In the spring of 1878 he went to Star City, securing a position in the office of the county clerk, but remained there only until autumn, when he went to Pine Bluff, where he was connected with various interests, becoming a clerk in the post office and later acting as bookkeeper for the Merchants & Planters Bank. He remained with the latter institution for five years and then joined the Bank of Pine Bluff as assistant cashier, also becoming one of its stockholders. About 1903 he organized the Sanders Lumber Company, of which he was sole owner, and successfully conducted that enterprise until 1916, when he sold the business and devoted the following year to agricultural pursuits. In 1917 he came to Grady and purchased stock in The Hellmus Company, of which he was made secretary and treasurer, and he has since served in that capacity. They engage in general merchandising and Mr. Sanders' broad experience and keen business insight have aided materially in the development of their present extensive trade. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias. He has led an active and useful life, employing every opportunity to advance, and the years have chronicled his growing success. As a business man his standing is of the highest and in all matters of citizenship his influence is on the side of progress and improvement.

HON. JOHN H. McLAIN.

Hon. John H. McLain, mayor of Texarkana and a prominent business man of the city who has been identified with commercial and financial interests for a number of years, was born on a farm two miles east of Texarkana on the 25th of January, 1871. His father, Newton McLain, came to Arkansas from Kentucky in young manhood in company with his father, John McLain, who brought his family to this state, driving across the country with oxen and mule teams. He was a slaveholder in ante-bellum days and his son, Newton McLain, served with the Confederate army in the Civil war. He was in the Quartermaster department. He married Josephine Baird and for many years followed the occupation of farming in support of his family. He died at the age of sixty-seven years while his wife died when forty-two years of age.

John H. McLain of this review was born and reared on the old homestead farm. He acquired a common scool education and in young manhood removed to Texarkana, where his father owned considerable improved property. Here John H. McLain turned his attention to merchandising and afterward began buying and selling real estate, meeting with success in both ventures. In 1896 he was elected county treasurer and filled the position for a period of four years. He was also elected city alderman and served in that capacity for two years. In 1919 he was chosen mayor of Texarkana by popular suffrage and made so creditable and excellent a record during his first term's service that he was reelected in 1921 and is now for the second term in office. He is giving to the city a businesslike and progressive administration, characterized by needed reforms and improvements. He is likewise a stockholder in the Merchants & Planters Bank and he is the owner of a considerable amount of business property situated in various sections of the city. His has been an active and useful life fruitful of results and his enterprise and diligence has brought him prominently to the front.

FLORENZ GODT.

Florenz Godt is the senior partner in the firm of Godt Brothers, druggists of Fort Smith, and has been active in the development of an enterprise which is classed with the leading commercial interests of the city, the location of their store being at 723 Garrison avenue.

Florenz Godt is a comparatively young man. He was born in Fort Smith and educated in the city schools, while later he became a student in the Atlanta Medical College, in which he pursued a pharmaceutical course that was completed by his graduation as a member of the class of 1909.

After finishing his studies Mr. Godt worked for a time for Will F. Germann, a druggist of Fort Smith, and in 1914 he and his brother purchased Mr. Germann's store and organized what is today the well known firm of Godt Brothers. They have since carried on the business with excellent success.

Associated with Florenz Godt are his two brothers, Henry and Willie Godt. The three brothers are sons of August and Minnie (Hoffman) Godt. The father was a highly respected citizen of Fort Smith, where he was long engaged in business as a bufilding contractor. The two brothers, Henry and Willie, served in the United States army during the World war and both were on active duty in France. Henry was a member of the Medical Corps of the Seventy-seventh Division and was overseas for two years. Willie was mustered in as a member of the French battalion but had just landed when the armistice was signed.

The three brothers are most enterprising and progressive young business men. They have a splendidly appointed store, attractive in every way and they do a large prescription business, for they have intimate knowledge of remedial agencies and their values. They also maintain a splendid soda department and this brings to them a very substantial revenue. All three brothers are members of the Business Men's Club and are keenly interested in all that has to do with commercial conditions in the city and the extension of the trade relations of Fort Smith with the outstanding territory.

ADOLPH BLUTHENTHAL.

Adolph Bluthenthal, a merchant of Pine Bluff, was born in Germany in 1865, his parents being Aaron and Fannie (Rheinstein) Bluthenthal. The father came to this country in 1882 and settled in Pine Bluff, where he was associated for a time with the S. Bluthenthal Company, cotton factors.

Adolph Bluthenthal spent the first seventeen years of his life in his native country and then accompanied his parents to the new world. Here he has made steady progress in his business career and has long since been recognized as one of the most progressive and successful merchants of the city. He has one of the finest exclusive men's furnishing goods stores in this section of the state. The business was established by L. Kestar, who came from Germany to the new world, settling first in Wyoming, while afterward he removed to Pine Bluff. In 1892 he formed a partnership with Adolph Bluthenthal, who became a half owner and sometime later Mr. Bluthenthal acquired the interest of his partner and is today sole owner of the store, which is thoroughly attractive in the line of goods he carries and thoroughly reliable in the business methods followed. Mr. Bluthenthal is thoroughly alert and progressive in his methods and his enterprise and determination have constituted the basic forces in the attainment of his success.

Mr. Bluthenthal was married to Miss Rae Solomon, a daughter of Sol Solomon of Pine Bluff, and they are parents of four children: Adelle, who was graduated from Goucher College and is a Phi Beta Kappa, is now the wife of Jesse Hyman, vice president of the Gus Blass Dry Goods Company of Little Rock; Henrietta is also a graduate of Goucher College; Madeline is pursuing her studies in Lennox Hall at St. Louis; and David is attending the local schools. Mr. and Mrs. Bluthenthal are members of the Jewish temple, of which the wife is a trustee. They are greatly interested in the work of the temple and have contributed in substantial measure to its progress and improvement. They aid all those forces which make for the general good and their efforts have been a contributing factor to the material, intellectual, social and moral progress of the community.

JUDGE WILSON EDWIN HEMINGWAY.

Judge Wilson Edwin Hemingway, at one time sitting upon the supreme court bench of Arkansas and now successfully practicing at Little Rock as a partner in the firm of Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough, was born in Carroll county, Mississippi, January 4, 1854, his parents being William and Sarah Wesley (Jenkins) Hemingway. Liberal educational opportunities were accorded him. His preliminary training was supplemented by study in the University of Mississippi, which he attended from 1868 until 1870. In the latter year he became a student in the University of Georgia and pursued his studies there for two years. In 1874 he was admitted to the bar, having in the meantime done much private reading that made him thoroughly acquainted with the principles of jurisprudence. He at once entered upon active practice and through the intervening period has advanced steadily step by step until he occupies a foremost position in the ranks of the legal profession of Little Rock. From 1878 until 1881 he filled the office of prosecuting attorney in Washington county, Missouri, and he was again called to office when elected city attorney of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, in 1885. He filled that position for four years, or until 1889, when high professional honors were accorded him in recognition of the ability which he had displayed, for in that year he was elected a judge of the supreme court of the state and remained upon the bench for four years. He was then elected for the full term of eight years, but soon afterward, in March, 1893, he resigned the position through which he had won fame as one of the ablest jurists of the state, in order to enter upon the private practice of law in the capital city, becoming the associate of U. M. Rose, now deceased, and his son, G. B. Rose, who is now a member of the firm of Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough. Through the intervening period, covering twenty-eight years, Mr. Hemingway has been a representative of the Little Rock bar. His mind is analytical, logical and inductive. With a thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the fundamental principles of law he combines a familiarity with statutory law and a sober, clear judgment, which make him not only a formidable adversary in legal combats, but also gained him notable distinction while on the bench. Mr. Hemingway formerly figured in business circles as the president of the Little Rock Railway & Electric Company.

On the 18th of July, 1879, Mr. Hemingway was united in marriage to Miss Mary Helen Girault of Bedford, Kentucky, and they became parents of a son, W. L. Hemingway, now prominent in banking circles of Little Rock. Judge Hemingway and his wife have long been prominently known in Little Rock, where the hospitality of their home has been greatly enjoyed by many friends. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and his political belief is that of the democratic party. He has always stood loyally for those forces and interests which make for the advancement and upbuilding of community and commonwealth and his is a noble character—one that subordinates personal ambition to public good and seeks rather the benefit of others than the aggrandizement of self. Moreover, he has had a conspicuously successful career. Endowed by nature with high intellectual qualities, to which are added the discipline and embellishment of culture, his is a most attractive personality. Throughout his whole life whatsoever his hand finds to do, whether in his professional, in his official duty, or in any other sphere, he does with his might and with a deep sense of conscientious obligation.

MILLS WESLEY ELKINS.

Mills Wesley Elkins, banker, broker and financier, a resident of Little Rock since 1918, was born at Toons, Tennessee, in 1886. When he was seven years of age his parents, James Wesley and Jane (Norton) Elkins, removed to Arkansas and in Sheridan and Pine Bluff he was educated as a public and high school pupil, graduating in 1905. He afterward attended the University of Arkansas two years. During the year 1907 he entered the bond business, in which he has since met with marked success. In 1918 he removed to Little Rock, dealing in municipal bonds, levee, road, drainage and school bonds. There are few men qualified to speak with such authority on the matter of bond investment, and Mr. Elkins is at all times prepared to handle small or large issues and has ample facilities for handling any amount. In 1920 his business reached more than seventeen million dollars and he is justly regarded today as one of the most prominent bond dealers of the southwest. Mr. Elkins is also a director and the majority stockholder in the Grant County Bank at Sheridan, and is a director of the Southern Trust Company of Little Rock, justly ranking with the foremost financiers of Arkansas. The Elkins family, of which he is a representative, is descended from an old colonial Virginia family, the younger generations of which pioneered to Tennessee, and the same spirit of courage and of fearlessness in venturing upon untried ground has been manifest in the business career of M. W. Elkins.

In 1909 was celebrated the marriage of Mills Wesley Elkins and Miss Este May Shaw, a native of Grant county and a daughter of the late Dr. J. B. Shaw and Martha A. (Holliman) Shaw. Dr. Shaw was the leading physician of Grant county for a period of forty years and one of the most prominent men in the profession in the state. He was the son of a pioneer Georgia family and possessed all of the courtly manner of the old-time southern gentleman. His death in 1920 was deeply regretted by a host of friends and warm admirers. Mr. and Mrs. Elkins are the parents of two children: James Alton and Velma Marie. Both Mr. and Mrs. Elkins are active members of the Country Club and the latter is also a most helpful worker in the church and a teacher in the Sunday school. Their religious faith is that of the Baptist church and their cooperation can at all times be counted upon to support the various lines of church work and the extension of its influence. Mr. Elkins' political endorsement is given to the democratic party. He is a very forceful and resourceful man, possessing notable sagacity in business affairs and displaying a prescience that has enabled him to foretell considerable concerning business opportunities and advantages. What he purposes, he accomplishes, and he has become recognized as a dynamic force in financial circles.

JAMES FRANK LEE.

James Frank Lee, comptroller of Pulaski county and an esteemed resident of Little Rock, was born in Carbondale, Jackson county, Illinois, December 22, 1865, and is a son of Greenwood and Mary (Davis) Lee, both of whom were representatives of old southern families. The father was born in Tennessee in 1839 and the mother's birth occurred in Kentucky, in 1844. It was during a visit of his parents to Carbondale, Illinois, that James F. Lee was born. The parents were married in Ripley county, Missouri, in 1861 and they had a family of six sons and eight daughters, of whom four sons and five daughters are living. Removing to the southwest Mr. Lee took up his abode at Weatherford, Texas. He served as a private in the Confederate army from 1862 until the close of hostilities. He always voted with the democratic party. He died in December, 1912, while his widow is still living in Weatherford, Texas. For a few years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Greenwood Lee lived in Ripley county, Missouri, and after reaching school age James Frank Lee there attended the public schools. The removal of the family to Texas enabled him to continue his studies in the schools of Hood county, that state, and later he attended Granbury College of Hood County. He dates his residence in Little Rock from 1910 and is now filling the office of comptroller of Pulaski county, Arkansas, to which position he was appointed by the county judge in April, 1919. He is very prompt, faithful and efficient in the discharge of his duties and his course has won him the high commendation of the general public.

On the 14th of March, 1889, at Lipan, Texas, Mr. Lee was married to Miss Lillian Estelle Williams, who was born in Libertyville, Missouri. They have become parents of four children: Stanley, born February 23, 1891; Mildred, the wife of Van A. Neely; Joe Davis, who was born March 1, 1896; and Jessie Frances. The parents attend and are members of the Asbury Methodist Episcopal church, South, and for three years Mr. Lee served on its board of stewards. He is a Royal Arch Mason, loyally following the teachings and purposes of the craft. He votes with the democratic party and in April, 1919, was called to his present position, which is the only political office he has ever filled. His characteristics of fidelity and loyalty are manifest in the discharge of his duties and Pulaski county numbers him among her officials whose course reflects credit and honor upon this section of the state.

JOHN L. HENDRICKS.

Industrial activity at Camden finds a substantial representative in John L. Hendricks, who is the manager of the Camden Foundry Company, doing general repair work and overhauling of locomotives. He has had thorough training along this line and is well qualified for the duties that now devolve upon him. A native of Missouri, he was born in Cape Girardeau, October 4, 1870. His father, Louis Hendricks, died at the age of about sixty years, in Cape Girardeau, where he had long engaged in the jewelry business. He had served in the Civil war as a private in the Federal army, valiantly aiding the Union cause. He was born in Holland or in Belgium, but the greater part of his life was spent in the new world. He wedded Mary E. Kight, who is living in St. Louis, at the age of seventy-three years. She was born in Jackson, Missouri, and it was in that city that they were married. They became parents of eight children, five sons and three daughters, of whom four sons and two daughters are living.

John L. Hendricks, the second child of the family, was educated in St. Vincent's College, at Cape Girardeau, Missouri, and also acquired a high school education. He started in the business world as an apprentice in the machine shop of the Southwestern Railroad in Cape Girardeau, Missouri, when fifteen years of age, and worked there for four years, becoming a well equipped machinist. At the age of nineteen he left Cape Girardeau and from 1889 until 1904 he traveled and worked in many parts of the world, visiting practically all of the foreign countries and gaining much valuable experience, at the same time storing his mind with many items of interest concerning the various lands that he visited. In 1904 he came to Canon City, Colorado, where he became identified with a foundry, establishing a business on his own account with capital that he had saved from his earnings. After conducting the foundry from 1904 until 1908 he disposed of the business and removed to Camden, Arkansas, where he purchased the interests of the Waters Foundry Company and reorganized the business under the name of the Camden Foundry Company, with Dr. E. L. Watson as a silent partner. Mr. Hendricks manages the business entirely and has made it a profitable enterprise. His patronage has steadily increased to the present time and in fact has almost doubled within this period. He is engaged in the manufacture of iron and brass castings and also does repairing of sawmill machinery and the overhauling of locomotives. He is thoroughly skilled along mechanical lines and his ability has been the source of the steady increase of business which has come to the company since his removal to Camden.

In Canon City, Colorado, June 18, 1904, Mr. Hendricks was married to Miss Matilda Owens, a daughter of James Owens of that place. They are parents of seven children, two sons and five daughters: Blanche, fifteen years of age; Cora, aged thirteen; Jimmy, aged eleven; Caroline, aged nine; Nancy, aged seven; Jessie, aged five; and Johnny, who is in his second year.

Mr. Hendricks is now serving as alderman from the third ward. During the World war he gave much of his time to securing subscriptions for the various Liberty Loans and other war activities. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World and to the Knights of Columbus, being entitled to membership in the last named by reason of the fact that he belongs to the Catholic church. He has worked persistently and diligently in the conduct of his business affairs and his success is the merited tribute and reward of his own labors.

C. C. YARRINGTON.

A successful business man, whose success in life has been on a parity with his well directed endeavors, is C. C. Yarrington, president of the Leader Clothing Store and general manager of that store and likewise of the C. C. Yarrington Company Department Store. He was born in Trenton, Tennessee, on the 11th of March, 1883, a son of George W. and Georgia (Sinkler) Yarrington, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of West Tennessee. The maternal grandfather was a pioneer of Tennessee and was a successful civil engineer. He was a Confederate mail carrier during the Civil war and met his death in a raid at Old Troy. Mr. and Mrs. Yarrington were married in West Tennessee, where he had moved from Clarksville, Tennessee, the place of his youth and early manhood. He engaged in farming throughout his life and died in Trenton, Tennessee, in 1887. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Yarrington: Minnie, the wife of Thomas Harrison, a farmer of Mississippi; Geraldine, the wife of James Stewart; and C. C., whose name initiates this review. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. Yarrington was a stanch supporter of the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government.

In the acquirement of an education C. C. Yarrington attended the schools of Trenton, Tennessee, and his first occupation upon putting his textbooks aside was in a tailoring establishment. After learning the tailor's trade he took up telegraphy and was active along that line in Memphis for some time. Subsequently he secured work in a wholesale house in Memphis, where he remained for about five years, at the termination of which time he engaged in the general mercantile business on his own account at Binghamton, Tennessee. For four years he conducted that enterprise, winning substantial success, but disposed of it and in 1911 came to Fayetteville, establishing the Leader Clothing Store. In 1913 he organized a stock company and in 1917 purchased another store, which is operated as the C. C. Yarrington Company Department Store. He is president of the Leader Store and general manager of both businesses. He is a man of keen discrimination and sound judgment, and his executive ability and excellent management have brought to the concerns with which he is connected a large degree of success. The safe conservative policy which he inaugurated commends itself to the judgment of all, and he has secured for both stores a patronage which makes the volume of trade transacted over their counters of great importance and magnitude. The prosperity of the enterprises is certainly due in a large measure to him, their president and general manager.

On the 6th of June, 1911, occurred the marriage of Mr. Yarrington to Miss May Evelyn Shinault, a native of Mississippi, but a lifelong resident of Memphis, Tennessee. They are the parents of two children: Elinor, attending school; and Charles C., Jr., whose birth occurred in June, 1915.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Yarrington has given his support to the democratic party and though taking an active interest in its affairs has never sought nor desired political preferment. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is identified with the Masons, Elks, Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows. He is past grand of the latter order. Mr. Yarrington likewise holds membership in the Anti-Horse-Thief Association.

JUDGE JESSE B. MOORE.

Judge Jesse B. Moore, attorney-at-law of El Dorado, his large practice being an indication of the ability which he displays in handling important litigation in the courts, was born in Union county, Arkansas, December 16, 1848. His parents were William G. and Susan (Brown) Moore, the former a native of North Carolina, while the latter was born in Virginia. W. G. Moore was a large slave owner and planter. The paternal grandfather, Alexander Moore, was also a prominent planter and slaveholder. They removed from North Carolina to Perry county, Alabama, and in 1848 came to Arkansas, settling in the southwestern part of Union county. There the grandfather spent his remaining days on the plantation which he owned and developed and where he died about 1852. William G. Moore purchased a large tract of farm land adjoining his father's property and in the course of a few years acquired between three and four thousand acres. He was extremely successful in all of his business affairs and was very charitable and public spirited. He lead in and always contributed liberally to all public enterprises of the day. He seemed to prosper in whatever he undertook for his activities and investments were always guided by sound judgment. He died during an epidemic in 1864 which invaded his plantation and took five members of his family, including his mother, and also carried off more than twenty of his slaves.

Judge Moore purchased at the administrator's sale of his father's real estate some twenty-eight hundred acres of the plantation on 25th day of January, 1873, and is still owner of more than five hundred acres of that tract. He was educated through his own individual efforts in the old time subscription schools before the establishment of the free school system in Arkansas and later attended the Southern University of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, at Greensboro, Alabama. Later he became a student in the Cumberland Law School at Lebanon, Tennessee, and after carefully preparing for the bar was admitted to the practice of law in April, 1876, and entered upon the work of his profession in El Dorado. Prior to this time, in 1874, he had represented Union county in the state legislature under Governor Garland's administration. His connection with one of the old and prominent families and his leadership in public affairs had made him well known, so that in the practice of law no dreary novitiate awaited him, notwithstanding the fact that advancement at the bar is proverbially slow. In 1876 soon after taking up the practice of law he was elected county and probate judge of Union county and served upon the bench for one term. He then, by his own choice, retired from politics to give his undivided attention to his professional interests. For twenty-one years he continued his practice at El Dorado and was regarded as one of the ablest and most successful lawyers of southern Arkansas, and achieved marvelous success at the bar and in his investments, and amassed a nice little fortune for the times amounting to about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. In 1897 he removed to Arkadelphia to educate his children and the family home is still maintained in that city. Since 1897 the Judge has divided the greater part of his time between Arkadelphia, El Dorado, St. Louis, Chicago and Little Rock. On the 8th of June, 1918, he reopened a law office in El Dorado, where he has since given his attention to active professional interests.

On the 14th of February, 1878, Judge Moore was married to Miss Lizzie S. Miles, of Monroe, Louisiana, and they have become parents of four children: Albert B., who is engaged in the stave and lumber business at Camden and Magnolia, Arkansas; Lillie B., the wife of Neil Sloan of Arkadelphia; Jesse W., who married Willie Reaves Trigg of Arkadelphia; and William, who married Dell Patterson and is in charge of the men's furnishing department of the Patterson Department Store at Arkadelphia.

Judge Moore was at one time a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows but has allowed his membership in these societies to lapse. He belongs to the Baptist church and is interested in all that makes for the civic, economic and moral progress in his community. His life history is an interesting one inasmuch as he may truly claim the proud American title of a self-made man, for the Civil war ruined and destroyed the fortunes of his father and at the age of sixteen years he was thrown upon his own resources. After the close of the war to make his start in life he farmed for one year and during that time he and his younger brother, Aaron Moore, now of Texarkana, Arkansas, cleared twenty-six hundred dollars through their own individual toil and management. He thus paid his own way through the country schools and college, and during vacation periods he added to his financial resources by teaching school. Today he owns about eight hundred acres of valuable land in Union county, Arkansas, thought to be underlaid with oil and gas, with good prospects for early development and is one of the strong juridical forces of El Dorado. He was one of the promoters of the Arkansas Southern Railroad Company, which constructed one hundred miles of railroad extending from El Dorado, Arkansas, to Winfield, Louisiana, now a part of the Rock Island system, serving as one of the directors of the road and as its attorney. He was also at one time president of the first bank organized at El Dorado and was the associate editor and founder of the El Dorado Eagle, a weekly newspaper published at El Dorado, but sold out at the end of two or three years and retired to devote his time exclusively to his increasing professional business and other interests. Thus in various fields outside of his profession he has contributed to the progress and upbuilding of his county and state. While he has now passed the Psalmist's allotted span of three score years and ten, he still remains an active factor in the world's political and economic progress, and various business duties call him into many sections of the country. At El Dorado he is enjoying a substantial law practice, and he has long since carved his name high on the keystone of the legal arch of the state.

W. E. TEMPLETON.

W. E. Templeton, a druggist and mine owner of Bonanza, is one of those men who uphold the stability of a community through their enterprise, progressiveness and wise use of opportunities. Mr. Templeton was born in Lincoln county, Tennessee, in the year 1882, his parents being A. M. and Mary (Couch) Templeton, the former a farmer by occupation. While spending his youthful days under the parental roof, the family having removed to Sebastian county, Arkansas, W. E. Templeton acquired his education in the public schools and for a time was also a student at Fort Smith. Putting aside his textbooks, he turned to the business world for the opportunities which he hoped would lead him to the goal of success. He became interested in coal development near Jenny Lind in 1914 and is now operating several large mines at that place, conducting his business interests there under the name of the Mama Coal Company. In 1915 he became actively identified with the commercial interests of Bonanza by purchasing an interest in a drug store, of which he is now sole proprietor. This business is carried on under the name of Carter & Company and was originally owned by J. V. Owens. In 1915 it was taken over by V. H. Carter and W. E. Templeton and carried on under the partnership relation for a few years, at the end of which time Mr. Templeton purchased the business, which he conducts independently. He has a well appointed store and his business methods are such as will bear the closest investigation and scrutiny. His enterprise and energy enable him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties in his path and steadily he has worked his way upward. His operations in the coal field, too, have been a source of substantial profit and he is regarded as one of the representative business men of his section of the state.

In 1911 Mr. Templeton was united in marriage to Miss Florence E. Carter, a daughter of William and Carrie Carter, and a sister of V. H. Carter, his former partner, who served in the army during the World war and was at the officers training school at Camp Pike when the armistice was signed. While America was at war with Germany, Mr. Templeton was active in support of all war movements, was sales director of all the Liberty Loans and chairman of the District Red Cross. He was also active in promoting the War Savings Stamps drive, selling stamps to the amount of twenty-eight thousand dollars in one drive. He loyally stood back of every movement that maintained the home line, whereby the country financed the movements of the army on the western front.

Mr. Templeton belongs to all the Masonic fraternities and also the Shriners, and is a loyal follower of the teachings and high purposes of the craft. He finds his recreation in travel and spends from one to three months each year in making extensive automobile trips. He is a believer in the great out-of-doors and the benefit to be derived in that way, and he recognizes the fact that one should not only work well but also play well, or in other words that recreation must constitute an even balance to intense business activity if a normal development is to be maintained.

W. T. ROACH, M. D.

Dr. W. T. Roach is well known in medical circles of Hot Springs as an orthopedic surgeon and is an acknowledged expert in this branch of the profession. He is a native of Illinois, his birth having occurred at Avon on the 7th of August, 1874. When he was two years of age his parents removed to Bushnell, that state, where he attended the grammar and high schools. In 1901 he entered the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and there completed a course in orthopedy. He did not take up the work of the profession at once, however, but turned his attention to commercial pursuits, opening a dry goods and clothing store at Litchfield, Illinois, and later conducting a similar establishment at Medora, that state. For a number of years he was thus engaged, capably managing his business interests, and then resumed his profession, which he has continued to follow. In 1907 he opened an office in Hot Springs and in the intervening period has built up a large practice as an orthopedic surgeon, having a thorough knowledge of the line of work in which he specializes, gained through close study and practical experience. His fraternal connections are with the Knights of Pythias. He is most thorough and conscientious in the performance of his professional duties and enjoys the esteem and high regard of his fellow practitioners and the general public as well.

A. L. BOEN, M. D.

Dr. A. L. Boen, physician and surgeon of Clarksville, was born in Johnson county, Arkansas, February 9, 1868, and is a representative of one of the old families of this part of the state. He is a grandson of William Boen, who was born in Middle Tennessee, and came to Johnson county during the pioneer epoch in the history of Arkansas. His son, Hiram Boen, was born in Middle Tennessee and was brought by his parents to this state in 1851, the family home being established on a farm which his father purchased from the government at a dollar and a quarter per acre. Throughout his life Hiram Boen continued to make his home on a Johnson county farm, save for the period of his four years' service in the Union army in the Civil war, during most of which time he was on duty in this state. He always gave his political allegiance to the republican party and was fearless in defense of his honest convictions. He belonged to the Masonic lodge and both he and his wife were consistent followers of the Baptist church. It was in this state that he wedded Mary Cowen, who was born in Middle Tennessee, and was a daughter of Riley Cowen, also a native of that state. He brought his family to Johnson county, Arkansas, in pioneer times and spent his remaining days here. Mr. and Mrs. Boen became parents of three children: Riley, living in Oark, where he follows farming; A. L., of this review; and Zelphia, the wife of Dr. W. H. Mooney, a druggist of Pettigrew, Arkansas. The family circle was broken by the hand of death when in 1903 Hiram Boen departed this life, his wife surviving until 1909. He had been quite successful in his farming operations and was the owner of two good farms at the time of his demise.

Dr. Boen acquired his early education in the country schools and afterward attended school at Harmony and at Clarksville, Arkansas. In early manhood he engaged in the drug business at Fallsville and at Pettigrew, continuing thus for a number of years before he took up the study of medicine, his interest therein being awakened by his connection with the drug trade. At length he matriculated in the College of Medicine at Little Rock, from which he was graduated in 1907. He had practiced medicine for some years before his graduation and following the completion of his course he opened an office in Pettigrew, where he remained for seven years. Later he practiced for the Frisco Railroad Company at Cass, Arkansas, where the company built a branch line and afterward he removed to St. Paul, where he remained in the active work of his profession until 1918, when he came to Clarksville. Here he entered upon practice in connection with Dr. Lawrence C. Gray and has since made steady progress in his chosen calling. The firm today has an extensive practice of an important character and Dr. Boen is continually promoting his skill and efficiency through study and broad reading, as well as through experience. He is a member of the County and State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association and he served as president of the County Medical Society when in Franklin county. He engages in the practice of surgery to some extent and his ability along both lines is pronounced.

In 1886 Dr. Boen was married to Miss Permelia Mooney, who was born in Newton county, Arkansas, a daughter of William R. Mooney, one of the early timers of Newton county, now living on a farm in Johnson county. Dr. and Mrs. Boen have one child, Belle, who is the wife of James Thickseln, who is employed in a furniture factory in Fort Smith and is considered the best spoke turner of the United States. Dr. Boen and his wife belong to the Baptist church and his membership relations extend to the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In the latter he has passed through all of the chairs. His political endorsement has ever been given to the republican party and he stands as a loyal supporter of those projects and plans which have to do with civic improvement and progress.

PLEASANT REDMOND DAVIS.

Pleasant Redmond Davis had reached the Psalmist's allotted span of threescore years and ten when he died on the 7th day of July, 1910, at his home in Fort Smith. He was born in North Carolina in 1839, a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Black) Davis, who were natives of Virginia and of North Carolina, respectively. The father was a trader in cattle and other live stock, devoting his attention throughout his life to that business.

Pleasant R. Davis was quite young when he went to Tennessee, and in that state he attained his majority. There he was married in 1861, in the town of Jackson, to Miss Sarah Jane Manley, a daughter of Horace and Martha (Hill) Manley, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. Three weeks after his marriage Mr. Davis enlisted for service in the Confederate army in the Civil war and was on duty with a western regiment. He was wounded at the battle of Shiloh and was taken prisoner, after which he was incarcerated as a prisoner-of-war at Cincinnati, Ohio, until two weeks before the surrender of Lee, when he and others escaped. After the close of the war he returned home and took up farming in Tennessee, devoting his attention to that pursuit until he came to Arkansas.

It was in 1870 that Mr. Davis removed to this state and here he established his home at Fort Smith, where he opened a general merchandise store, continuing in the business to the time of his death. The store is still carried on under the name of the Reynolds-Davis Grocery Company, with Mr. Crane as secretary. The business was developed largely through the enterprise and ability of Mr. Davis, a representative merchant and business man, who enjoyed in large measure the high esteem, confidence and goodwill of all who knew him. In the conduct of his business he employed principles which would bear the closest scrutiny and investigation and all who knew him depended upon his reliability and recognized his progressiveness.

To Mr. and Mrs. Davis were born ten children, seven of whom grew to maturity, namely: Thomas C., who is deceased; Martha Elizabeth, who was born in Tennessee and is the wife of B. D. Crane of Fort Smith, who is now secretary of the wholesale business of which her father was a partner; Zeno W., a native of Tennessee, now living at Muskogee, Oklahoma; Lulu Mowen, who was born in Arkansas and is now a resident of Fort Smith; Mrs. Laura Witherspoon, a native of Arkansas, still living in Fort Smith; Mrs. Grace D. Mantor, deceased; and Mrs. Irma Blakely of Fort Smith.

Mr. Davis always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party but was not an office seeker. His religious faith was that of the First Baptist church, which found in him a loyal and faithful member. He died on the 7th of July, 1910, and thus closed an earthly career of seventy years in which he had always followed those rules of conduct which in every land and clime awaken confidence and regard. He enjoyed the high esteem of all and Fort Smith had long classed him as one of her honored and representative citizens.

HON. JAMES H. BERRY.

Of the long line of illustrious men of whom Arkansas is justly proud, the life of none has been more varied in service, more constant in honor, more faultless in conduct or more stainless in reputation than that of Hon. James H. Berry, soldier, jurist, governor and United States senator, who died on the 30th of January, 1913, at the age of seventy-two years. His life was largely one of public service and at all times he was actuated by an unselfish spirit of devotion to the general good. He loved Arkansas and its people and his record was a credit and honor to the state which had honored him.

PLEASANT R. DAVIS

Senator Berry was born on a farm in Jackson county, Alabama, May 15, 1841, a son of James M. and Isabelle Jane (Orr) Berry, of whose family ten children reached years of maturity, namely: Granville; Mary, who married Colonel Sam W. Peel; Fannie, the wife of Rufus Polk; Dick; James H.; Arkansas, known as "Canty," who married Captain Arch McKennon; Willie, who was killed during the Civil war; Sophronia, the wife of Andrew Forrest; Albert; and Emma, who married Dr. A. M. McKennon. All are deceased with the exception of Mrs. Forrest.

James H. Berry was reared on his father's farm adjoining the village of Carrollton, Alabama, and during the winter season he attended the village school, where he received his rudimentary education. When seventeen years of age he entered the Berryville Academy, which was situated eighteen miles distant from his home and was considered the best school in that locality. In 1860, however, after a ten months' course, he was forced to abandon his studies, his mother having died after a long illness which had exhausted the funds of the family, and the father was compelled to sell the home. Going to Yellville, Arkansas, the son secured a clerical position in the store of James H. Berry, a relative, with whom he remained until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he returned to Carrollton, Alabama. There he joined the Confederate army on the 19th of September, 1861, being commissioned second lieutenant of what afterwards became Company E, Sixteenth Arkansas Infantry. They went into winter quarters at Elm Springs, Arkansas, there remaining until February, 1862, when they were sent to meet General Price, who was retreating from Missouri. He continued to retreat to the Boston mountains in Arkansas and early in March, 1862, General Van Dorn took command, advancing with his men to Pea Ridge, where on the 7th and 8th of March they participated in the battle of Elk Horn, known to the Union troops as the battle of Pea Ridge. The engagement resulted disastrously for the southern army, which retreated to the Arkansas river, thence to Memphis, Tennessee, and on to Corinth, Mississippi, there joining General Beauregard's forces about April 15, 1862. A few days afterward Lieutenant Berry's regiment was placed on outpost duty and lost seventeen in killed and wounded in the ensuing engagement. The last of May General Beauregard evacuated Corinth and moved his forces on to Tupelo and Saltillo, where they were stationed until September, when they went to Iuka, Mississippi, there taking part in the engagement of September 19, 1862. They then joined a portion of Van Dorn's army at Holly Springs, Mississippi, and on the 3d and 4th of October, 1862, engaged in the battle of Corinth, General Rosecrans being in command of the Union forces. At this engagement, which was a heavy one, Lieutenant Berry received a severe wound, which resulted in the loss of his right leg. He was captured by the Federal troops and sent to a hospital at Iuka, where he remained for two months and was then taken to Rienzi, Mississippi, by a relative. Five months after receiving his wound he recovered and rejoined his regiment at Port Hudson, Louisiana. Following the surrender of Port Hudson, Lieutenant Berry returned to his old home in Arkansas to visit his sister, Mrs. Peel, and in the fall of 1864 reached Monticello, where he rejoined his command. He remained in that city until February, 1865, when he went to Shreveport, Louisiana, where he obtained a ninety-day furlough from General Kirby Smith. He then made his way to Texas, remaining with relatives in that state until the 1st of May, when the Confederate army west of the Mississippi disbanded. He was at Corsicana, Texas, with General Cabell's forces when the soldiers broke ranks and started for their homes.

Mr. Berry then returned to Ozark, Arkansas, arriving in that city about June 10, 1865. For three months he engaged in teaching school and soon afterward wedded Miss Lizzie Quaile, much against the wishes of her father, a prominent resident of that place, and it was not until seventeen years later that a reconciliation was effected between the two families. After their marriage the young couple established their home in Carrollton, Alabama, and Mr. Berry devoted his attention to the study of law, being admitted to practice at Ozark, Arkansas. In August, 1866, he was first called to public office, being elected to represent Carroll county, Arkansas, in the state legislature. He was the youngest member of the legislature and received for his services a compensation of six dollars a day, out of which he had saved about three hundred dollars at the end of the session. He then returned to Carrollton, where he erected a one-room log cabin, in which the family resided for two years, and there continued to follow his profession until December, 1869, when he disposed of his interests in Carrollton and removed to Bentonville, which city remained his home until his demise. For a time he was associated in practice with Colonel S. W. Peel and in September, 1872, was elected to the legislature from Benton county and in 1874 was made speaker of the house. It was at this time that the democratic party took over the reins of government and it has since controlled the state.

Returning to Bentonville in May, 1874, Mr. Berry formed a law partnership with Judge R. W. Ellis, a most congenial and successful relationship, which was continued until September, 1878, when Mr. Berry was elected judge of the circuit court, in which office he served for four years. He was strictly fair and impartial in all his rulings and his decisions were sustained by the higher courts upon appeal. In June, 1882, he became the democratic candidate for the office of governor, winning the election by a majority of thirty-eight thousand votes. In January, 1883, he entered upon the duties of the office, which he continued to fill until January, 1885, declining to be a candidate for a second term. On the 25th of March, 1885, still other honors awaited him in his election to the United States senate, in which he served continuously for a period of twenty-two years. He at once took rank with the foremost men in that great legislative body and became recognized as a statesman of the first rank. His record was marked by incorruptible integrity and the fearless defense of what he believed to be right and just and he withdrew from the senate no richer than when he had entered it, except in knowledge and experience. He remained out of office from 1907 until October, 1910, when he was appointed by the secretary of war, upon the personal request of President Taft, to succeed General William C. Oates of Alabama, as commissioner to mark the graves of Confederate soldiers who had died in northern prisons during the war and were buried near the places where they had died. He completed that work on the 23d of December, 1912, after which he resumed the duties of private life. His identification with public affairs formed the chief interest of his life and he ever held to high ideals, never employing his talents unworthily nor supporting a dishonorable cause.

Senator and Mrs. Berry became the parents of six children. The eldest daughter, Nellie F., married William H. Hyatt and died on the 11th of June, 1900, leaving two children, Berry and William H., Jr., who were reared and educated by their grandparents, and the former is now the wife of Henry Norton; the second daughter, Bert, married E. O. Lefors; and Jennie is the wife of A. P. Smartt; while another daughter, Bessie, died at the age of six years; there are also two sons, Elliott R. and Frederick. Honor and fame came to Senator Berry in recognition of his sterling qualities of manhood and the record of no citizen of Arkansas has stood in larger measure as a synonym for integrity and uprightness. Long acquaintance with him meant stronger friendship, for his life in its various phases stood the test of intimate knowledge and of close association. Judged by material standards, he was not a rich man, but he left to his family a possession of far greater value—the priceless heritage of an untarnished name.

His son, E. R. Berry, was born in Bentonville, July 7, 1879, and after finishing the work of the grammar and high schools entered the State University of Arkansas. During the period of his father's incumbency in the office of United States senator, Mr. Berry served as his secretary for six years, maintaining his residence in Washington, D. C., after which he returned to Bentonville, where he has since resided. In 1913 he became cashier of the First State Bank of Bentonville, in which capacity he has continued to serve, being recognized as one of the able financiers of Benton county.

In 1902 E. R. Berry was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Dickinson, a daughter of G. W. Dickinson of Calhoun county, Arkansas. After completing her high school course she became a student in the University of Arkansas, from which she was graduated with the class of 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Berry have become the parents of two daughters, Ruth and Mary, aged, respectively, ten and six years. Mr. and Mrs. Berry are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Berry is a democrat in his political views. He is deeply interested in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of his community and for several years has capably filled the office of city treasurer of Bentonville. He is a worthy representative of an honored family and enjoys the esteem and goodwill of an extensive circle of friends.

W. R. BROOKSHER, M. D.

Dr. W. R. Brooksher, largely devoting his practice to surgery in Fort Smith, with office in the First National Bank building, was born in Bartow, Georgia, in the year 1864, and is a son of W. R. and Hester B. Brooksher, the latter born in 1836. The father was born in Spartanburg, South Carolina, in 1829, and at the time of the Civil war joined the Confederate army, taking part in the long contest between the north and the south. In days of peace he devoted his attention to the occupation of farming. To him and his wife were born twelve children, nine of whom are living.

Dr. Brooksher was quite young when his parents removed with the family to Arkansas and in the common schools of this state he acquired his preliminary education. After determining to make the practice of medicine his life work, he matriculated in the University of Louisville at Louisville, Kentucky, as a medical student and there won his professional degree in 1891. He then located for practice in Marion county, Arkansas, where he remained for about four years. In 1895 he removed to Fort Smith, where he has made his home for more than a quarter of a century. Throughout the intervening period he has steadily progressed in his chosen calling and in recent years he has specialized largely in surgery, X-ray and radium treatments. He has become very proficient along these lines, carrying his investigations and researches far into the realms of scientific knowledge and his ability is pronounced.

Dr. Brooksher was married December 24, 1893, to Miss Ida S. Cox of Baxter county, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of three children: W. R., Jr., now associated with his father in practice, was graduated from the Ouachita University, where he received his Bachelor of Arts degree. He afterward won his M. D. degree as a student in Tulane University at New Orleans and for one year he was connected with the New York Hospital, gaining that broad and valuable experience which is never acquired as quickly in any other way as through hospital practice. In 1920 he returned to Fort Smith and here began practice with his father, the firm ranking as one of the strongest and ablest in the city; Monte, the second son of the family, is proprietor of the famous Smoke Shop, located at the corner of Sixth and Garrison streets in Fort Smith; and Lucille was graduated in May, 1920, from the Curry School of Expression in Boston. Both sons were soldiers of the World war.

Dr. Brooksher belongs to the Masonic fraternity, being a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. He is also connected with the Knights of Pythias and he and his wife have membership in the First Baptist church. They are well known in Fort Smith, where the hospitality of many of the best homes is freely accorded them, their social position being equal to Dr. Brooksher's high professional standing.

W. D. COTTON.

In a history of a community it is imperative that mention be made not only of those who are now actively identified with business interests and the general development of the district, but also of those who have at any time been prominent factors in connection with public progress. It is therefore necessary that reference be made to W. D. Cotton, who was long a valued and substantial citizen of Yell county and whose death was the occasion of deep and widespread regret among his many friends. He was born on a farm near Dardanelle, October 1, 1862, and is a son of Jesse and Rebecca (Ryan) Cotton, who were natives of Tennessee, where they were married, removing thence to Yell county, Arkansas, in an early day. The father purchased land and resided thereon until his death, his attention being successfully given to the cultivation and improvement of his farm. He was a democrat in politics and was an honest, upright man, who enjoyed the unqualified confidence of the people. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. They had a family of eleven children, nine of whom reached years of maturity, while six still survive.

W. D. Cotton, the tenth in order of birth in this family, acquired a common school education in Yell county and when seventeen years of age he became a resident of Dardanelle, working in a gin and also along other lines. For a time he was in the county clerk's office, employed under Major Gee and eventually he entered the Dardanelle Bank, which had been organized by Major Gee. His original position was that of bookkeeper and upon the major's death in 1900 he became cashier, occupying that position until his own demise. From the time he entered the bank almost he had full charge of the business and largely established its policy and promoted its activities. At the time of his demise he was owner of one-third of the stock of the bank and through many successive years of the bank's existence he paid an annual dividend of twenty-five per cent. He always followed a conservative method that did not, however, hamper progressiveness and he at all times most carefully safeguarded the interests of depositors. The bank today is a monument of his business adaptability, thoroughness and resourcefulness. It is the oldest bank in the county and its name has ever been a synonym of financial strength and integrity. Mr. Cotton also became connected with many other business enterprises in Dardanelle and was largely interested in agricultural pursuits. He was instrumental in promoting the cultivation of peaches and individually owned a large peach orchard. There is no one to whom the horticultural development of the district is due in larger measure. He was likewise more instrumental in promoting agricultural progress than any other man of the county. His judgment was regarded as particularly sound and people sought and followed his advice about the sale of their cotton, about the best crops to be grown upon their soil and upon other questions of vital interest to their success. Mr. Cotton was deeply interested in the welfare of the people among whom he lived and he was ever ready to assist others by his counsel and often in a more substantial way. He continued an active factor in the business circles of Dardanelle and Yell county to the time of his death, which occurred October 17, 1921.

It was on the 11th of June, 1901, that Mr. Cotton was married to Miss Minnie Sue Jones, who was born in Dover, Arkansas, a daughter of Professor G. A. and Ellen (Foster) Jones, natives of Kentucky and of Gallatin, Tennessee, respectively. They were married in Gallatin. The father was liberally educated in the schools of Kentucky and of Missouri. He ran away from home, however, at the age of sixteen years to join the Confederate army and was with Price until he was wounded a year before the close of the war. In fact he was wounded eight different times while in active service and was held as a prisoner of war in the Federal prison at the time hostilities were brought to a close. About 1876 he removed with his family to Pope county, Arkansas, and was a prominent teacher there, acting as superintendent of the schools of Russellville for nine years. He died in 1896 and is still survived by his widow, who makes her home with Mrs. Cotton. The latter by her marriage became the mother of three children: Ellen, who was a student in the Randolph-Macon School in Virginia for a year, is now attending the State University; John is a student in Hendrix College at Conway; and W. D. is in school in Dardanelle. Mrs. Cotton belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, of which her husband was also a consistent representative. He was likewise a Royal Arch Mason loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft. In politics he was a democrat, but never an office seeker. However, he served on the school board and on the town board and his aid and influence were ever on the side of right and progress. The major part of his attention, however, was given to his business affairs and in this way he contributed in large measure to the material development of his community. In the funeral services the minister in charge said that the people of this district had lost the best friend they ever had. His mind was at all times alert, and possessing an observing eye and retentive memory he was constantly adding to his knowledge through observation, study and experience. He displayed remarkable adaptability, thoroughness and resourcefulness in business affairs, capably conducting various interests and lines of business and the integrity of his methods was never called into question. He left behind him an untarnished name and a memory that is cherished in the hearts of all who knew him.

FRANK T. LEE.

A native son of Arkansas and a representative of one of the pioneer families of the state, Frank T. Lee is a prominent figure in mercantile circles of Dumas, being a member of the firm of Lee Brothers, and since 1903 he has been numbered among the progressive citizens and successful business men of the town. He was born in Lincoln county, Arkansas, February 15, 1868, and his parents were George N. and Cornelia A. (Nix) Lee, the former a native of Georgia and the latter of Alabama. They came to Arkansas in the early '50s, locating in what is now known as Chicot county, but after living there for a short time settled in that part of Arkansas county which subsequently was included within the boundaries of Lincoln county. There the father devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits, with which he was connected throughout his remaining years, dying in 1874. Following his demise the mother made her home with her daughter at Searcy, Arkansas, until called to the home beyond in 1902.

Frank T. Lee acquired his education in the public schools of Lonoke and in the Arkansas State University, which he attended at intervals for about three years. After completing his studies he engaged in farming for three years, after which he followed various occupations until 1897, when he joined his brother, Charles E. Lee, then a member of the firm of Lee & Johnson, engaged in merchandising at Douglas, Arkansas. Mr. Lee of this review purchased the interest of the junior partner and the enterprise has since been operated under the style of Lee Brothers. Disposing of their business in 1899, they later reentered mercantile circles of Douglas, with which they were connected until 1903, when they came to Dumas and have since conducted the leading mercantile establishment of the town. They deal principally with the cotton growers, whom they furnish with supplies, and their trade has reached large proportions. In the conduct of their business they employ the most modern and progressive methods and their success is due in considerable part to the well formulated plans and close application of the subject of this review. They also have extensive holdings in farm and timber lands and in business circles of Dumas their standing is of the highest.

In March, 1895, Mr. Lee married Miss Hallie Stitt of Varner, Lincoln county, Arkansas, and two daughters were born of this union: Marie, now the wife of James G. Berry of Marion, Arkansas; and Cornelia V., a teacher in the public schools of Dumas. The family are earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, with whose activities Mr. Lee is prominently identified, serving as trustee and as steward. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and is also connected with the Masonic order, belonging to Omega Lodge, No. 545, F. & A. M. He is a man of high principles and substantial qualities, enterprising and reliable in business, loyal and public-spirited in citizenship, and at all times displaying devotion to the duties that devolve upon him.

MILES DAWSON KELLY, M. D.

Dr Miles Dawson Kelly, engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Lonoke, was born in Macon, Georgia, in 1879, and is a son of Miles S. and Lydia (Wells) Kelly. The father, also a native of Macon, Georgia, is a son of Miles S. Kelly, Sr., who was born in Ireland and on coming to this country located in Georgia. The father of Dr. Kelly served with the Confederate army in the Civil war for four years. He is a Baptist minister and now makes his home at Prattsville, Arkansas. To him and his wife were born seven children, of whom O. R. Kelly is a physician at Sheridan, Arkansas, while J. W. Kelly is a Baptist minister, now preaching at Prattsville and Sheridan, Arkansas; T. F. Kelly is in the real estate and loan business at Lonoke, Arkansas; and Carrie is now Mrs. H. L. McFarlin, whose husband is a merchant of Little Rock.

Dr. Miles Dawson Kelly was educated in the schools of Prattsville and in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1913 on the completion of a medical course. He began the practice of his profession in Sheridan, Arkansas, in 1902 and about May, 1920, came to Lonoke. Here already he has built up a good practice and his success is continually growing.

Dr. Kelly was married to Miss Susan Hodges of Prattsville, Arkansas, a daughter of B. Hodges, and their children are: Miles F., Robert F., James W. and Rhoda F.

Fraternally Dr. Kelly is a Mason and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist church. They are interested in all those forces which make for higher ideals in citizenship and for progress in the community. Dr. Kelly is well known in the medical societies, being a member of the Lonoke County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. Through the proceedings of these bodies he keeps abreast with the trend of modern professional thought and scientific investigation and he is always ready to employ new and valuable ideas in his practice, yet does not hastily discard old and time-tried methods, the worth of which has been proven.

WRIGHT PRICKETT.

Judge Wright Prickett, attorney at law of Mena and at one time county judge of Polk county, was born in Clermont county, Ohio, November 2, 1861, his parents being Wilson and Susanna (Smith) Prickett, who were also natives of Clermont county. The father was a son of Hiram and Jane (Carter) Prickett, natives of Virginia and of New Jersey respectively. At an early age Hiram Prickett removed to Ohio, where he took up the occupation of farming and in that state reared his family. It was in 1869 that Wilson Prickett, who in the meantime had married again, removed to Missouri. He was a farmer, owning and cultivating land in Missouri, where he reared his family. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and one of the early representatives of the Masonic fraternity. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party. The children born of his first marriage were seven in number, three of whom are living: Anna, the wife of Henry Davidson, a farmer of Nickerson, Kansas; Wright, of this review; and Frank C., a tailor, living in Kansas City.

Wright Prickett pursued his education in the common schools of Ohio and after completing a high school course attended a seminary and Normal College at Lebanon, Ohio. He continued his residence in his native state until 1886 and there worked on a farm and taught school. In the year mentioned, however, he removed westward to Kansas City, Missouri, where he secured employment in the post office and while thus serving days he devoted his evening hours to the study of law until he had qualified for admission to the bar at Kansas City in 1890. There he entered upon active practice and continued a resident of that place until 1899, when he went to Howe, in the Indian Territory, there remaining for a year. On the 19th of November, 1900, he came to Mena and entered upon active practice in connection with Pole McPhetridge, with whom he was thus connected for four years. He afterward practiced alone for a decade and then formed a partnership with Minor Pipkin in 1918. When a year had passed he was striken with paralysis and gave up active practice for a time but having recovered his health he again entered upon the work of the profession and throughout the period of his residence in Mena has enjoyed a large practice of an important character. He was elected and served as county judge of Polk county for three terms, his reelection being indisputable proof of his fairness, capability and impartiality upon the bench. He was also city attorney for one term. For a number of years he enjoyed a very extensive practice and was most successful in its conduct, preparing his cases with a thoroughness that prepared him not only for attack but for defense as well.

On the 1st of June, 1886, Judge Prickett was married to Miss Hattie Doughman, a native of Ohio, and they had one child, Buford, who is now an auto mechanic in Sacramento, California. The wife and mother departed this life in 1888 and on the 30th of December, 1908, Judge Prickett was married to Miss Maude Shaver, who was born in Howard county, Arkansas, a daughter of Robert S. Shaver, who was a colonel of the Seventh Arkansas Regiment, and was in the active fighting at Shiloh and other engagements of the Civil war.

Judge and Mrs. Prickett are members of the Episcopal church, in which he is a lay reader. He is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Woodmen of the World. In politics he has always been a democrat and at the solicitation of his many friends he has become a candidate for the office of county treasurer. Should he be elected there is no doubt as to the efficient service which he will render in this office. Loyalty to duty has ever been one of his marked characteristics and the county has greatly profited by the aid which he has given in the discharge of his official duties. During the World war he was actively identified with the Red Cross and with the exemption board and devoted much time to war work. There are few men more widely known in Polk county than Judge Prickett and none who are held in higher esteem by reason of professional ability and personal worth.

BENJAMIN JOHNSTON TILLAR.

Benjamin Johnston Tillar, by way of the bar and extensive stock raising interests, moved to Fort Worth to become actively identified with city building and real estate investments. He is now the vice president of the Westbrook Hotel Company and is interested in various properties and lines of business, with many of which he is connected as an official or as a director. He is recognized as a dynamic force in the business circles of the southwest, his enterprise constituting the current that puts life and activity into many projects of far-reaching effect and importance. Mr. Tillar was born in Selma, Drew county, Arkansas, in the month of September, 1866; in the public schools of his native town he acquired his early education; later he continued his studies under private instructors. When a lad of thirteen he entered the University of Arkansas, in which he completed a literary course, winning the Bachelor of Arts degree at his graduation with the class of 1886. In order to meet the demands that would be made upon him in connection with the control of a large family estate it seemed advisable that he study law, and to this end he matriculated in the University of Michigan as a law student, winning the LL. B. degree in 1888. Thus thoroughly trained by liberal education for the responsibilities of life, he returned to Arkansas and for two years thereafter devoted his attention to law practice in Little Rock. There his characteristic thoroughness constituted the basis of a steady professional advancement. In 1891, however, he concentrated his efforts and attention upon the cattle business, with headquarters in Midland, Texas, and later transferred his headquarters to Fort Worth. His ranch properties were located in Howard, Borden, Mitchell, Scurry, and Bosque counties, Texas. For eighteen years he directed his efforts along the line of improved management of cattle herds, and attained high rank as a successful cattleman. He became a member of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, which membership he retains, finding in it always a reminder of the strenuous days when his young manhood was rounding out to successful proportions, and of friendships formed in that graphic period.

In 1909 Mr. Tillar removed to Fort Worth, where he concentrated his efforts and attention upon city building and upon investments in city property. He soon won a reputation as a most discriminating investor. His labors were at all times of vital worth, and an element in the upbuilding of the city. He financed and erected the Westbrook Hotel, a million dollar structure, and he is still one of the owners of this property and vice president of the Westbrook Hotel Company. He is also financially interested in some of the other important business properties of Fort Worth and of Dallas and has the care and management of the estates of J. T. W. Tillar and Antoinette Tillar, which include valuable realty holdings in Fort Worth, Dallas, Little Rock and southeast Arkansas. This brings Mr. Tillar, in connection with his own personal investments and ownership, into direct connection with forty or fifty corporations. Under his careful management the assets of the two estates have been greatly enlarged and enhanced. Throughout his business career he has displayed a notable discrimination as to the value and opportunity of specific business situations; and his cooperation is regarded as a most valuable asset in relation to any business project. He has been called to the directorates of many leading financial and business institutions, among them the Farmers & Mechanics National Bank of Fort Worth, the Greater Fort Worth Realty Company, the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium Company, the Syndicate Land Company and the Westbrook Hotel Company.

Mr. Tillar is also a member of the board of trustees of the Texas Woman's College and annually donates twelve scholarships to this institution to aid deserving young girls and women to acquire a college education. He was most generous in his support of all war activities, including Liberty Loan subscriptions, support of the Red Cross and limit purchases of War Stamp savings. He also makes large contributions to charitable, religious and educational institutions, for at no time have his thought and activity been self-centered. On the contrary, he is constantly reaching out along lines of expanding usefulness and activity and there is scarcely any phase of progress or development in the southwest with which he has not in some way been connected. He is a member of the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America and belongs to the Fort Worth Club, the River Crest Country Club and the Fort Worth University Club. He is also a Texas member of the national council of the National Economic League and is a member of the National Arts Club of New York city. Unlike many young men of rich endowment and inheritance he has made his career one of great activity in those fields where local and national progress and prosperity are fostered.

DAVID LUTHER LACY.

David Luther Lacy, president and business manager of Draughon's Practical Business College at Little Rock, was born at Medon, Tennessee, on the 10th of June, 1875. He was graduated from the Medon high school in 1891, completed a course in Draughon's Business College in 1893 and received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Vanderbilt University in 1897. Following the completion of his high school course he acted as manager of the branch store of Swink Brothers at Medon, Tennessee, from 1891 until 1893 and through the succeeding four years was a student in Vanderbilt University. He acted as assistant in the bursar's office of Vanderbilt University from 1895 until 1897, was business manager of the Vanderbilt Commencement Daily in 1897 and also college reporter for the Nashville Daily Sun from 1895 until 1897. During the next five years his time was occupied as traveling solicitor and bursar in the interests of the Ward Seminary for Young Ladies at Nashville, Tennessee, while in 1902 he became district manager of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of San Antonio, Texas, conducting business under the name of D. L. Lacy & Company until 1904. In the years 1903, 1904, 1909, 1910 and 1912 he again represented the Ward Seminary for Young Ladies as traveling solicitor and from 1904 until 1910 also acted as manager of Draughon's Practical Business College at St. Louis. From 1906 until 1909 he served as division superintendent of the northwestern section of Draughon's Practical Business College Chain, from 1910 until 1912 was state manager of the Smith Premier Typewriter Company at Nashville, Tennessee, and from 1912 until 1919 was proprietor of Draughon's Practical Business College at Dallas, Texas. It was in 1920 that he became proprietor of Draughon's Practical Business College at Little Rock, Arkansas, and in the same year was elected vice president of the Draughon Managers' Association, of which he was chosen president in 1921.

On the 19th of December, 1905, in St. Louis, Mr. Lacy was united in marriage to Lucy Jim Hinkson. In politics he is an independent democrat, while fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Royal Arcanum. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he was formerly active in the San Antonio Club of San Antonio, Texas, of which he is now a non-resident member. His office is at No. 119½ Main street and his residence at No. 712 East Capitol avenue in Little Rock.

WALTER NICHOLS TRULOCK.

Walter Nichols Trulock, the widely known and popular proprietor of the Hotel Pines at Pine Bluff, was born here on the 25th of December, 1874. His father, Nichols Beardsley Trulock, was a native of Georgia, born in 1839, and was a son of James Hines Trulock, a cotton planter, who married Amanda Beardsley of Bridgeport, Connecticut. They resided on a plantation in Georgia until 1844, when they removed to Arkansas, settling on Victoria plantation, which Mr. Trulock purchased at Victoria landing on the Arkansas river about ten miles southeast of Pine Bluff. There he departed this life in 1849, survived by his widow and four sons: Nichols Beardsley, Joseph Burton, Marshall Sutton and James Hines, and a daughter, Victoria. His widow remained upon the plantation until 1865 and acquired large land holdings and many slaves. The estate was then divided and Mrs. Amanda Trulock went to Connecticut, the children remaining in Arkansas. The original estate, known as the Trulock or Prairie place, remained in possession of the family until about 1915, when it was sold.

In the maternal line Walter Nichols Trulock is descended from one of the oldest New England families. His mother, Mrs. Marianna Phelps Trulock, nee Lewis, was born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, in 1842, and her parents were natives of Ridgefield, Connecticut, whence they removed to Bridgeport about 1824. The ancestry is traced back in unbroken line to Benjamin Lewis, who settled in Stratford, Connecticut, in 1676, and in the Phelps line the ancestral record shows that William Phelps was born in Tewkesbury, England, was baptized in Tewkesbury Abbey, August 19, 1599, and emigrated to New England in the ship Mary and John, sailing from Plymouth, March 30, and landing at Nantasket, now Hull, Massachusetts, on the 30th of May, 1630. He removed to Windsor, Connecticut, in 1636, and one of the histories of that state records "he was one of the most prominent and highly respected men in the colony, an excellent, upright man in his public and private life and was truly a pillar in church and state." He at one time served as deputy governor. History further relates that "the chief characteristics of the Phelps family have been a high sense of honor, pride of intellect, pride of character, and as professional and business men they have ranked high and were fully successful." They possessed a coat of arms: a lion rampant, six crosses or crosslets. Name Phelps—Greek, Pilos, a friend; Italian, Welf; German, Guelph; English, Phelps.

Thus from two of the oldest New England families Walter Nichols Trulock is descended. He was educated at Jordan's Academy, owned by Dr. Junius Jordan, now superintendent of public schools at Pine Bluff. He attended the University of Virginia through the year 1892-3 and a part of the year 1893-4. He started out in the business world in connection with the cotton trade as a partner of M. W. Taggart & Company at Monroe, Louisiana, and afterward became a member of the firm of Taggart Brothers & Trulock of Pine Bluff. He retired from the cotton business, however, in 1906, to become manager of the Hotel Jefferson, formerly the Trulock, owned and operated by his father and uncle, N. B. and J. B. Trulock. These two owned property on Barraque street, which is now the site of the Hotel Jefferson, on which they built some business houses. About 1887 at the solicitation of Caliph and Mivelaz, who were the lessees of the Capitol Hotel in Little Rock, N. B. and J. B. Trulock built the Hotel Trulock and afterward enlarged it. About 1892 they were forced to take over the hotel and conduct it themselves. Their first manager was Alexander Dryborough, who acted in that position for five years, after which he went to Chicago, where he acquired a hotel and later became wealthy. In 1906 the Messrs. Trulock remodeled and refurnished at a great cost the old Trulock Hotel, which is now the Jefferson and which they sold in 1914. In 1915 they purchased the lease and furnishings of the Hotel Pines and this Walter N. Trulock is now conducting as part owner and manager. Walter N. Trulock, as its genial and capable host, has made it a popular hostelry with a liberal and growing patronage. He has closely studied the modern demands of hotel service and has made the Pines a popular resort with the traveling public. In its management Mr. Trulock displays excellent business ability, keen foresight and undaunted enterprise and his labors are being attended with a substantial measure of success. The name of Trulock has long been prominently associated with hotel management in this state. Into other fields he has also directed his efforts, for he is now the vice president of the Simmons National Bank and president of the Trulock Realty Company.

On the 21st of April, 1897, in Pine Bluff, Mr. Trulock was married to Miss Eliza Orto, a daughter of Dr. Z. Orto, who removed with his family to Pine Bluff from Walnut Ridge, Arkansas, about 1889. Dr. Orto was a practicing physician, following his profession until about 1904 or 1905, when he gave up his practice and became president of the Simmons National Bank. He volunteered his services in the Spanish-American war and served with the Second Arkansas Volunteers with the rank of major. Politically Mr. Trulock is a democrat but not an active party worker. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is interested in all that pertains to public progress and improvement. During the World war he was made chairman of District 12 of the national committee to furnish cooks for the national army. This district comprised the states of Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana and was charged with the duty of organizing and furnishing two hundred and forty cooks for the cantonment at Little Rock within forty days—a task which they accomplished. Mr. Trulock also served as chairman of the hotel and restaurant division of Jefferson county under Herbert Hoover, food controller. He has ever been ready to do his full part in the matter of public progress and improvement in community and commonwealth, as well as in regard to national affairs, and his cooperation has many times been a vital element in securing further public support as to measures for the general good.

WALTER J. TERRY.

For a period of thirty-five years Walter J. Terry has engaged in the practice of law in Little Rock, entering upon the active work of the profession here in 1886, the year following his admission to the bar. He was born on a farm in Benton county, Mississippi, October 20, 1861, his parents being Charles Cornelius and Harriett (Leak) Terry, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. They were married in Tippah county, Mississippi, and became parents of eight sons and three daughters, of whom five sons are living. The father was owner of a plantation in Mississippi and was prominently identified in business and political affairs in that state. He gave his endorsement at all times to the democratic party and in 1876 was elected on its ticket to the state senate. Through the period of the Civil war he served in the Confederate army under General Beauregard and was a man ever loyal to any cause which he espoused. He died in Little Rock in 1881, while his widow died in Mississippi in 1882.

Reared under the parental roof Walter J. Terry largely devoted his youth to the acquirement of a country school education in his native county. He later attended high school in Little Rock, having become a resident of this city in January, 1880, when a youth of eighteen years. At a later period he was a student in the Arkansas Law school at Little Rock and in 1885 was admitted to the bar upon examination before the supreme court of the state. In 1886 he opened an office in this city and has here since remained actively engaged in the practice of his profession. From 1892 until 1896 he was assistant United States district attorney and in 1897 was elected attorney of Little Rock, occupying that position for four years, or until 1901, and since then he has concentrated his time and efforts upon the private practice of law and the ability which he has displayed in this connection has gained him recognition as a most able, thorough and conscientious lawyer.

It was on the 28th of October, 1891, in Washington, Arkansas, that Mr. Terry was married to Miss Kate Colburn Ware, who was born in Little Rock, April 27, 1874, and is a graduate of Galloway College at Searcy, Arkansas. She is a lady of liberal culture and innate refinement and presides with most gracious hospitality over their pleasant home. They have become parents of two sons and a daughter: Walter Ware, born August 7, 1892; John Colburn, who was born December 17, 1893, and died June 5, 1917; and Catherine, the wife of Charles C. Reid, Jr., and the mother of one daughter, Joyce Reid. The elder son, Walter Ware Terry entered the World war, going to the first Officers' Training Camp at Fort Logan H. Roots, near Little Rock, there receiving his commission as second lieutenant in the Infantry, August 15, 1917, and was advanced to first lieutenant, December 31, 1917. In July, 1918, he went overseas and was in France for a little more than a year. He became attached to the Three Hundred and Forty-eighth Infantry, American Expeditionary Forces. He was honorably discharged at Camp Pike, September 4, 1919. In 1916 in Benton, Arkansas, Walter W. Terry was married to Miss Margaret McEwing and they have one daughter, Katherine Rose.

During the World war the father, Walter J. Terry, served on the legal advisory board, also on the questionnaire board and on the defense board of Pulaski county. His political endorsement has ever been given to the democratic party and the elective offices which he has filled have been won as the nominee of that party. For six years he served as secretary of the democratic state central committee and for four years was chairman of the Pulaski county central committee. He has membership in the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, of Little Rock, and he belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Royal Arcanum. Mr. Terry possesses untiring energy, is quick of perception, forms his plans readily and is determined in their execution. These qualities are manifest not only in his professional career but in his connection with public relations, and at all times he stands for those interests which are of value and benefit to the community and the commonwealth.

W. P. McNAIR.

For many years W. P. McNair was active in railroad circles and he is now living retired in Fayetteville, a representative and highly respected citizen. He was born in Charleston, Talahatchie county, Mississippi, on the 21st of June, 1848, a son of Daniel Hugh and Elizabeth (Scallon) McNair. The paternal grandfather, Malcom McNair, came to the United States from Scotland in 1801 and his demise occurred a few years later. Jesse Scallon, the maternal grandfather, and a native of Ireland, came to America at an early day, and became a prominent and successful stockman. He lived in Alabama many years and was a large slave-owner. The father of our subject was born in Scotland, while his wife was a native of Tennessee. They were married in Mississippi and removed to West Tennessee in 1853. The father was a successful cotton grower and planter and both he and his wife died in Tennessee. Five children were born to their union, of whom W. P. is the only one living. Mrs. McNair was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church and took an active interest in all of its affairs. During the Civil war Mr. McNair was a stanch supporter of the Union and served gallantly in its defense.

W. P. McNair received a limited education in the public and private schools of Tennessee and Kentucky, and at the age of fifteen years he ran away from home and enlisted in a cavalry regiment in the Union army. His father overtook him at Memphis, and securing for him a discharge, sent him to school in Kentucky. He remained there but a short time, however, when he ran away again and rejoined the Union forces, serving with them until the close of the war. As a member of a cavalry troop he participated in the battles of Holly Springs and Fort Pillow. After the war he returned to his home in Tennessee and assisted his father in harvesting his first crops. He remained on the home farm until the second year, when he enrolled in a business college in Nashville. After graduating from that institution he returned home in 1867, remaining until 1868, in which year he left the parental roof for St. Louis and Kansas City. The years 1869 and 1870 he spent on the plains and subsequently in 1872 formed his first railroad connection, engaging in construction work for the Frisco. Two years later he became a telegraph operator for the Frisco and he remained in that connection until he was retired on a pension in 1919. He was telegraph operator and later was agent at various places in Missouri, Kansas, Indian Territory, and Arkansas, for a period of forty-three years. On the 23rd of September, 1882, he came to Fayetteville, remaining here until in October, 1885, when he was transferred to Pierce City, Missouri. The following year he was returned to Fayetteville and was active until his retirement. That Mr. McNair's services were most efficient and satisfactory is indicated by his long connection with the Frisco road, and he is numbered among their most faithful employes. On the 21st of June, 1868, occurred the marriage of Mr. McNair to Miss Nancy Ann Flippin, a native of Gibson county, Tennessee, and a daughter of James Allen Flippin, a pioneer farmer of that state. To their union four children were born: William Daniel, who, taking his father's place, is now agent for the Frisco at Fayetteville; Maude Elizabeth, the wife of M. W. McRoy, a printer of Fayetteville; Wiley P., Jr., who is engaged in the insurance business here; and May, who was the wife of John B. Brown of Little Rock, and who died at the age of twenty-three years.

In politics Mr. McNair has always been a stanch supporter of the republican party and although he has taken a prominent part in its activities he has never sought nor desired political preferment. Mrs. McNair is a consistent member of the Central Presbyterian church and fraternally Mr. McNair is identified with the Masons, being a Knight Templar and a member of the Mystic Shrine. He is likewise past master, high priest and past eminent commander of that order. Mr. McNair has ever discharged his duties with marked ability and fairness, for he is a most loyal, public-spirited citizen. His life has been one of continuous activity, in which has been accorded due recognition of labor, and today he is numbered among the retired and substantial citizens of his county. His interests are thoroughly identified with those of Fayetteville and at all times he is ready to lend his aid and cooperation to any movement calculated to benefit this section of the country or advance its wonderful development.

GEORGE W. MASON.

George W. Mason, one of the well known educators and newspaper men of Arkansas, who for the past two years has been identified with the oil industry, while for fifteen years previous he was connected with real estate interests and with newspaper publication, was born in Union county, about eighteen miles south of El Dorado, on the 26th of October, 1865. His parents, George and Lucinda (Post) Mason, were natives of North Carolina and of Alabama, respectively. They were married in the latter state and two children were born to them there ere they left Alabama for Arkansas in 1848. They settled in what was then known as Buck Snort, now the town of Strong, Union county. The father was a farmer and in following agricultural pursuits provided for the support of his family.

For several years following the Civil war there were no public schools in Arkansas and George W. Mason obtained his early educational training through instructions from a brother who was a physician. The father was an invalid and on this account George W. Mason became the main support of the family when but twelve years of age. When a youth of eighteen he left home to educate himself and then it was that he entered the Mount Lebanon College at Mount Lebanon, Louisiana, from which he received the Bachelor of Arts degree as a member of the class of 1894. Three years later, or in 1897, the Master of Arts degree was conferred upon him by his Alma Mater. For ten years he successfully engaged in teaching and became widely known in connection with educational work in Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. He also spent three years as a member of the faculty of Mount Lebanon College. It has often been said that it is under the pressure of adversity and through the stimulus of opposition that the best and strongest in man is brought out and developed and by reason of the hardship and privations which came upon him in early life, Mr. Mason evolved a spirit of self-reliance and independence that enabled him to fare forward to a great degree in the battle of life. It is said that he he pursued his course in Mount Lebanon College on less money than any other student who matriculated in that institution. When he entered college, his capital consisted of four hundred dollars and when he had completed the course he had the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars remaining. He had added to his funds from time to time through various means of employment, scorning no labor that would yield him an honest dollar. He then proved his capability and the thoroughness of his own educational acquirement by his work as a teacher. In 1904, after four years of superintendency in the public schools of Junction City, Arkansas, he retired from the profession of teaching, owing to a nervous breakdown. He greatly loved the calling and was a most efficient teacher, imparting readily and clearly to others the knowledge that he had acquired. Because of his health he removed to El Dorado and here purchased the El Dorado Times, after which he engaged in newspaper publication. He borrowed five hundred dollars with which to make his first payment on the plant, the balance to be paid in twenty-four payments, scattered over a period of three years. This he accomplished and also expended two thousand dollars besides on improvements on the plant. For fifteen years he edited and published the El Dorado Times, which was the smallest weekly paper in the state when he took charge. He built it up to a point where it probably had the largest circulation of any weekly publication in Arkansas. He made it a most interesting and readable journal, devoted to the welfare of the community and of the state, the paper being regarded at all times as the champion of those interests which make for public progress and improvement. In 1908 Mr. Mason campaigned throughout the state in support of the eighth amendment which provided for an increase in the school taxes and which was passed by the general assembly. For a number of years Mr. Mason has also been engaged in buying and selling real estate and during the past two years has been identified with the oil industry, buying and selling oil leases and otherwise handling oil properties. He was the first man in El Dorado to champion the oil industry. For many years he advocated the forming of a company and sinking a test well. He believed that oil was to be had in this locality and time has proved the wisdom of his opinion.

On the 24th of June, 1894, Mr. Mason was united in marriage to Miss Kate L. Pendleton, a descendant of the old Pendleton family of Virginia. Her father, Macon Pendleton, came from Virginia to Arkansas about 1844, settling in El Dorado, where he engaged in the drug business. Mr. and Mrs. Mason have become parents of four children, three of whom are living: Idelle, Mary Etta and George W., Jr., all at home. Fraternally Mr. Mason is connected with El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., and loyally adheres to the teachings and purposes of the craft. He and his family are consistent and faithful members of the Baptist church, in which he is serving as deacon and in the work of the church they take active and helpful part. His influence has ever been on the side of progress and improvement and he has achieved results highly beneficial to the communities in which he has lived and labored.

A. C. JORDAN, M. D.

Dr. A. C. Jordan, a physician and surgeon of Pine Bluff, was born in Carroll county, Mississippi, in 1860, and is a son of Dr. J. B. and Ella (Emmons) Jordan, the former a native of Huntsville, Alabama, while the latter was born in Oneonta, New York. The father was a son of Jason L. and Charity (Hobbs) Jordan. The former a native of North Carolina, lived for a number of years in Alabama and removed to Mississippi prior to the Civil war, taking his slaves with him to that state. Five of his sons served in the Confederate army during the Civil war: William H., Isom, Preston L., Jesse H. and Frank A. Isom was killed at the battle of Round Mountain. His father, Dr. J. B. Jordan, practiced medicine in Mississippi for many years and in that state married Ella Emmons. His death occurred in Mississippi, while his wife departed this life in Pine Bluff. In their family were three children: A. C.; John P., who is a banker of Pine Bluff; and Lena, the wife of Fred Foster, who is cashier of the Merchants' & Planters' Bank at Pine Bluff.

He began practice at Beebe, Arkansas, the following year and in 1888 came to Pine Bluff. He later pursued postgraduate work in the Bellevue Hospital at New York city, also in the New York Polyclinic and in the Mayo Brothers Hospital at Rochester, Minnesota. He likewise studied at different times in Philadelphia and Boston and through his various postgraduate courses he has kept in touch with the advanced thought and methods of the profession.

At the time of the World war Dr. Jordan volunteered for service in the Medical Corps. He had arranged for hospital service and had been appointed to have charge of a hospital in France when the armistice was signed. He had disposed of his business preparatory to going abroad and had made all arrangements to serve his country in a professional capacity on the other side.

Dr. Jordan was married in 1887 to Miss Florence Merrill, a daughter of B. M. Merrill, who resided near Detroit, Michigan. Dr. Jordan is a Mason, belonging to lodge, chapter and council and he has also attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, being now a consistory member. He is president of the board of trustees of the Methodist church and a faithful follower of the teachings of that church. He has served as mayor of Pine Bluff, giving to the city a businesslike and progressive administration, but has not been ambitious in the matter of holding political office. He belongs to the Jefferson County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and is a fellow of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of America. The first two have honored him with election to the presidency and he has done much to stimulate professional progress and to uphold the highest standards and ethics of the profession. Thorough and comprehensive study, close application, persistency of purpose and high ideals have brought him to the commendable place which he occupies in the front rank of physicians and surgeons of Pine Bluff.

JAMES RUDOLPH ISOM.

The legal profession in Arkansas is proud to number among its representative members, James Rudolph Isom, who has practiced in Marion since 1914. A native of this state, he was born at Jonesboro, on the 12th of August, 1889, a son of J. T. and Martha (Caldwell) Isom. He is of Scotch descent on the paternal side, although both the Isom and Caldwell families have lived in America for many generations. The father was born in Alabama and came to this state in 1880, when a young man. He immediately engaged in railroading and for many years he has been associated with the St. Louis & Southwestern Road at Jonesboro. He is sixty-five years of age and his wife is sixty-four. They are highly respected citizens of Jonesboro and have many friends in that community. Their marriage was celebrated at that place and to their union three boys and one girl were born. Two boys are living. James Rudolph, whose name initiates this review, was the second in order of birth.

In the acquirement of his early education, James Rudolph Isom attended the public schools of his birthplace and in due time became a student in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville. He was graduated from that institution in 1910, with the B. A. degree and four years later received his LL. B degree from the George Washington University at Washington, D. C. Mr. Isom worked his way through both institutions. While in Washington he had the patronage of Senator Caraway in the house of representatives. In 1914 he came to Marion, established offices for the practice of his chosen profession, and has been in active practice since. He has handled considerable chancery and civil practice and is attorney for the Crittenden County Bank and Trust Company. He enjoys an extensive and lurative clientage, for his keen power of analysis and his logical deductions have made him one of the representative and successful attorneys of the county and state.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Isom has given his political endorsement to the democratic party and for some time he has been chairman of the democrat central committee of Crittenden county and he was supervisor of the census for the first congressional district. Along the lines of his profession he holds membership in the Crittenden County Bar Association and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. During the World war, Mr. Isom was a member of the draft board for this county and he devoted a great part of his time to the duties devolving upon him in that connection. If one would find Mr. Isom he must seek him where the best interests of the individual and the community are being conserved. He is allied with those forces which work for progress and improvement and during the period of his residence in Marion his course has ever commanded the respect and high regard of his fellow citizens.

FRANK B. BUMGARDNER.

There are few men whose lives illustrate more clearly the possibilities for personal achievement and the attainment of success than does that of Frank B. Bumgardner, the president of the Fort Smith Metal Products Company. His educational and other opportunities in youth were comparatively limited and he has made his rise upon a laudable ambition and indefatigable energy. His record constitutes an example well worthy of emulation, proving the force of energy and perseverance as factors necessary in any degree of prosperity.

Mr. Bumgardner was born near Clarksburg, West Virginia, in 1872, and is a son of J. D. and Rachel (Robinson) Bumgardner. He obtained a limited education in the elementary schools near Clarksburg and in the great day school of hard experience, where he has learned many valuable lessons.

In early life Mr. Bumgardner became identified with the railroad service and after coming to Fort Smith in 1899, served as traveling freight agent of the traffic department of the Frisco Lines. Subsequently he engaged in the general insurance business, conducting an agency here for seven years. During the presidency of William Howard Taft, now chief justice of the supreme court, he was appointed postmaster of Fort Smith and occupied the office for four years, giving general satisfaction to both the public and the post office department, by the prompt and capable manner in which he discharged the duties of the office. On his retirement from this position he acquired an interest in the Fort Smith Metal Products Company, with which he has since been identified. This corporation was organized in 1917 to manufacture metal beds and the output is shipped throughout the territory extending from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean. The plant has a capacity of two hundred and fifty beds per day, which is sent out under the trade-mark of the Pioneer All Steel Bed Line. Normally this plant employs between fifty and seventy-five people. Mr. Bumgardner is the president of the company, with W. J. Kropp as vice president, and Ed Ballman, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Bumgardner also acts as general manager of the business, which is proving successful and growing steadily in favor since many revolutionary improvements have been made in the general construction of its products.

In 1895 Mr. Bumgardner was married to Miss Myrtle Davis, of Pittsburgh, Kansas, and they have one child, now Mrs. Roger Kendall, whose husband is connected with the Metal Products Company. Mr. Kendall was a soldier of the World war serving overseas, being attached to general headquarters of the Thirty-eighth Division.

Mr. Bumgardner was active as a public speaker in all the war drives and did everything possible for the support of the country and the promotion of the welfare of the soldiers in camp and field. He belongs to the Business Men's Club and is chairman of the Fort Smith Traffic Bureau. He is active in all movements for civic betterment and stands at all times for those interests which are a matter of civic virtue and of civic pride. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, being a past grand chancellor of this order, and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His ideals are high, his ideas are practical and in working for the benefit and improvement of the city, his labors are far-reaching and resultant.

FRANK B. DAKE, M. D.

Well meriting the high reputation which he enjoys by reason of his analytical and laboratory work, Dr. Frank B. Dake is most widely and favorably known as a leading physician of Hot Springs. He was born in Salem, Ohio, a son of Dr. Jabez P. Dake, and is one of five brothers who became physicians, while among his paternal and maternal ancestors were those who followed the medical profession.

Dr. Frank B. Dake was born September 10, 1864, and with the removal of the family to the south he was educated in the public schools of Nashville, Tennessee, and in the medical department of the University of Tennessee, from which he received his professional degree as a member of the class of 1887. Immediately following his graduation he went to New York city and spent the remainder of the year in the New York Postgraduate School, thus further qualifying for responsible duties in connection with his chosen calling. In December of that year he returned to Tennessee and for five or six months practiced in Memphis. He then came to Hot Springs and through the succeeding seven years was engaged in general practice, but the necessity for laboratory work in Hot Springs was recognized by him and in 1895 he opened his laboratory, since which time he has given his entire attention to this line of professional activity. Prior to that date all laboratory work from Hot Springs was sent to St. Louis. Dr. Dake is today at the head of an extensive practice of this character and success in notable measure is crowning his labors. He always keeps in close touch with the trend of modern scientific thought and investigation as bearing upon the laws of health and has membership in the American Institute of Homeopathy.

Dr. Dake is also well known in Masonic circles, belonging to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, A. F. &. A. M.; Hot Springs Chapter, No. 47, R. A. M.; Hot Springs Council, No. 23, R. & S. M.; and Hot Springs Commandery, No. 5, K. T. He has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R., and has crossed the sands of the desert with the Nobles of Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Pine Bluff. As an Elk he has membership connection with Hot Springs Lodge, No. 380, of which he was exalted ruler 1900-1901. He has ever been most loyal to the teachings of the orders with which he is identified but allows nothing to interfere with the faithful performance of his professional duties and his analytical and laboratory work establishes him as a most prominent representative of this branch of professional activity.

CHARLES COOLEY.

Charles Cooley, a well known attorney of Siloam Springs, who for forty-nine years has followed his profession, is also conducting a large insurance business and success has rewarded his efforts in both branches of activity. He has passed the Psalmist's alloted span of threescore years and ten, for his birth occurred at Havre de Grace, Maryland, on the 24th of November, 1848. He is a representative of an old southern family, his father, Daniel M. Cooley, having been born upon property in Maryland which has been in possession of the family since 1636. He became a prominent planter of that state and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party, while in religious faith he was an Episcopalian. He wedded Miss Harriet Wiles and they became the parents of nine sons, four of whom are living: Daniel M., who has no fixed place of residence, being fond of travel and change of scene; Charles of this review; Lawson, a resident of Aberdeen, Maryland, where he is serving as clerk of the court; and G. W., who makes his home at Mitchell, South Dakota, and is in the railway mail service. The paternal grandfather, James Cooley, was a large landholder and also owned many slaves.

In the acquirement of an education Charles Cooley attended the district schools of Maryland, Newark Academy of Newark, Delaware, and the Maryland Agricultural College, where he remained until 1871. He took up the study of law under H. W. Archer of Bel Air, Maryland, a brother of Colonel James Archer of the Confederate army. In December, 1872, he was admitted to the bar and going to Yankton, South Dakota, he entered upon the work of his profession, subsequently removing to Bon Homme, that territory, where he resided for three years. His next removal took him to Niobrara, Knox county, Nebraska, where he engaged in practice for nearly eight years, serving during four years of that period as county judge. He then went to Madelia, Minnesota, where for sixteen years he continued to follow his profession, and in January of 1899 he arrived in Siloam Springs, where he has since made his home. His clientage has constantly increased and his business is now of a most important character. His knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence is comprehensive and he has ever conformed his practice to the highest ethics of the profession. He purchased an insurance agency soon after locating here and has also built up a good business in that connection.

On the 18th of March, 1874, Mr. Cooley was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Goddard, a native of Monroe, Wisconsin, and a daughter of Alfred Goddard, who removed to that state in 1847, later going to Bon Homme, South Dakota, where he died. Mr. and Mrs. Cooley have become the parents of four children: May, the eldest, married Frank Holmes, who is connected with transportation interests and resides at Spokane, Washington; Charles R. makes his home at Joplin, Missouri, and for the past twenty years has been connected with the postoffice at that place; Julia married F. A. Davey of San Bernardino, California. During the World war he served as a lieutenant in the navy and also as assistant paymaster. Previous to the war he had been connected with that branch of the service for fourteen years but has now received his discharge. He is at present acting as secretary and treasurer of the California Automobile Company; Madge is the wife of Leon L. Brown, a railway mail clerk, and they reside in Siloam Springs.

The family are members of the Episcopal church and fraternally Mr. Cooley is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed through all of the chairs. He is a democrat in his political views and while residing in Dakota territory, he filled the office of sheriff, being there at the time General Custer was killed. He has attained high standing in his profession and his course has been characterized by integrity and honor in every relation, commanding for him the respect and goodwill of those with whom he has been associated.

C. M. WOFFORD.

A representative member of the legal profession in Arkansas is C. M. Wofford, who is engaged in active practice in Van Buren. He was born in Gainsville, Georgia, on the 3d of February, 1881, a son of B. F. and Iowa C. (Parks) Wofford. The father was both a farmer and a minister in the Baptist church and came to Crawford county, Arkansas, in 1892. He was a Baptist minister at Rudy for some time and was a well beloved citizen.

On reaching school age, C. M. Wofford entered the schools of Rudy and later the Uniontown high school in Crawford county. After graduating from that institution he enrolled in Ouachita College, Arkadelphia, completing the course there in the required time. He taught school at various times while receiving his education, but upon putting his textbooks aside he determined upon a legal career. In 1906 Mr. Wofford came to Van Buren and he was appointed deputy county clerk in 1906 and elected county clerk in 1910, serving for four years. In July, 1913, he was admitted to the bar and in the fall of the following year commenced practice. In 1916 he was elected prosecuting attorney, serving four years, his term of office having terminated in January, 1921, and he is now engaged in general practice. He is likewise city attorney for Van Buren and his force of character and natural qualifications have enabled him to overcome all obstacles and reach a creditable position as a representative of the legal fraternity in this city.

On October 20, 1910, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Wofford to Miss Leila J. Blair, a daughter of E. T. Blair and his wife, Mary E., of Van Buren. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wofford two children have been born: Leora Elizabeth, seven years of age; and Frances Blair, aged five years. During the World war Mr. Wofford worked incessantly for war campaigns and he was chairman of the township organization committee, making speeches throughout the country. He gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government and he is now chairman of the county democratic central committee. The members of the Arkansas bar entertain high consideration for the integrity, dignity, impartiality, love of justice and strong common sense of Mr. Wofford and he occupies a leading position in the ranks of the legal profession. In legal and political relations he is both faithful and honorable, his sterling personal worth has gained him warm friends, and he is well established in the respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens and business associates.

E. H. McCRAY, M. D.

Dr. E. H. McCray, successfully following his profession in Malvern, has been a lifelong resident of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Benton, this state, on the 12th of October, 1876. He is a son of D. S. McCray and was but four years of age when brought by his parents to Malvern. Here at the usual age he entered the public schools, pursuing his studies until he had completed a preliminary course, while later he entered the University of Arkansas and afterward became a student in the Beaumont Medical College of St. Louis. He was graduated with the class of 1901, on the completion of the full course, and afterward enjoyed excellent advantages for practice as an interne in the Alexian Brothers Hospital at St. Louis, Missouri, where he continued for six months. In this hospital he gained broad and valuable experience such as can be acquired so quickly in no other way as in hospital work. He first opened an office independently in March, 1902, at which time he returned to Malvern, where he has practiced through the intervening period, covering almost twenty years. He is now physician for the Arkansas Land and Lumber Company, and Wisconsin and Arkansas Lumber Company, also for the Acme Brick Company, and local surgeon for the Rock Island Railroad. In addition he has a large private practice and the public attests his professional skill and ability, which has been manifest in the successful handling of many important cases. His wide study and thoroughness enable him to find ready solution for many intricate and involved medical problems.

Dr. McCray was married to Miss Pearl Rhoden and they have become parents of three children: Elwood H., Raymond V., and Anna Felice. Dr. McCray belongs to the Masonic fraternity and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. Along strictly professional lines he has connection with the Hot Spring County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association, the American Medical Association and the Association of Railway Surgeons. He has displayed marked ability in surgical practice and is again and again called upon for work of this character.

BENJAMIN F. DOUGAN.

Dr. Benjamin F. Dougan, engaged in the practice of dentistry at Benton, Arkansas, his ability being attested in the large patronage accorded him, was born in Jefferson county, this state, October 17, 1853, and is a son of Joseph H. and Mary A. (Harvey) Dougan. The father was a native of Fayette county, Tennessee, while the mother's birth occurred in Arkansas, where they were married, Mr. Dougan having come to this state in his boyhood days with his parents, who settled near Pine Bluff. With the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army in 1861 and was killed at the battle of Atlanta.

Dr. Dougan was reared in Little Rock, the public schools affording him his educational opportunities. In 1872 he took up the study of dentistry under his uncle, J. R. Harvey, of Monticello, Arkansas, who was a graduate of the Baltimore Dental College, the first dental college of the new world. Mr. Dougan continued to assist his uncle for four years and in the latter part of 1874 entered upon active practice independently. In 1883 he removed to Benton, where he has since followed his profession, covering a period of thirty-eight years. He is the dean of his calling in this section of the state. While he has been in practice through a most extended period, he has always kept in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress and is familiar with the latest investigations and researches. Marked indeed have been the changes in the methods of dental practice during this period and Dr. Dougan has advanced step by step, his capability and professional power increasing as the years have gone by. He is a member of the Central District Dental Society, the Arkansas State Dental Society and the American Dental Association and was the first president of the Central District Dental Society.

On the 5th of July, 1885, Dr. Dougan was married to Miss Anna Laura Henderson, a daughter of the late Colonel M. J. Henderson of Benton. They have become parents of one son, Roy J. Dougan, who is now cashier of the Merchants & Planters Bank & Trust Company at Arkadelphia, Arkansas. He is a graduate of the Henderson-Brown College of Arkadelphia and he married Miss Lena Key, a daughter of R. B. F. Key, a capitalist of that city. Mrs. Roy J. Dougan is likewise a graduate of the Henderson-Brown College and by her marriage she has become the mother of one child, a daughter, Dorothy Lucille. Roy J. Dougan belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and also to the Masonic fraternity.

In the latter regard he has followed in the footsteps of his father, who is identified with Benton Lodge, No. 34, A. F. & A. M. Dr. Dougan also has membership in Robert E. Lee Lodge, No. 70, K. P., of Benton. He owns a farm near Benton and he finds his greatest interest outside of his profession in the cultivation of his land and the breeding of thoroughbred Jersey cattle. He was recently elected president of the Saline County Jersey Cattle Club and he is regarded as an authority upon Jerseys and upon many questions relating to stock raising. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal denomination and he is serving on the board of stewards of his church. He manifests keen interest in all that pertains to the material, intellectual, social and moral progress of his city and state. His life has been characterized by no spectacular phases but is the expression of persistent effort wisely directed. Step by step he has advanced and his course indicates what may be accomplished when individual effort is guided by laudable ambition. He is today one of the best known and most highly esteemed dentists of his section of the state.

GEORGE M. ZELLER.

George M. Zeller, proprietor of one of the largest general mercantile establishments in Paris, established business in this city in 1880 and is today the oldest merchant here in years of continuous connection with commercial pursuits. There is much in his life record that should speak encouragement to the youth of the present day who must start out in the business world as Mr. Zeller did—empty-handed. The story of his progress is an interesting one. He was born October 18, 1852, in Alsace-Lorraine on the borderland between Germany and France, his parents being Antone and Elizabeth (Munich) Zeller. The father was born in that part of Austria which afterward became Bavaria and was a revenue officer in his native country. His wife was born in Alsace-Lorraine and they became the parents of six children, of whom only two are living: George M.; and Margaret, who is connected with the Catholic church at Little Rock, the parents having been members of the Catholic church and reared their children in that faith. Both the father and mother were buried in French soil.

George M. Zeller was educated in Germany, having liberal training, and while still in his native country he acquired a good knowledge of the English language. He came to the United States alone in 1870, making his way first to Detroit, Michigan, where he was employed in different ways, scorning no occupation that would yield him an honest living. He worked for a time on the wharf and later took a job on a steamer on Lake Erie. He was thus employed until 1872, when he went to Saginaw, Michigan, and began work at loading lumber, receiving forty cents per hour. After a short time, however, he took a crew and went to Flint, Michigan, where he aided in building a railroad grade, Mr. Zeller taking a contract in connection with that work. He made some money in that way and in 1875 he removed to Arkansas, settling at Little Rock. Before coming to this state, however, he had purchased a sailboat and for a time was engaged in fishing on Lake Huron, this also being a profitable venture.

Mr. Zeller's first position in Little Rock was that of hotel clerk, in which capacity he was employed for a few months, after which he worked in a saloon and restaurant. While thus engaged he became acquainted with C. F. Penzel, who gave him a position in his wholesale grocery house. Mr. Zeller remaining with Mr. Penzel until 1880, when he came to Paris. It was in that year that he established his store and he is today the oldest merchant in the city. He opened a general line of goods and as the years have passed has increased his stock, having now one of the largest general stores in Logan county. He occupies a two-story building, which he erected in 1899, which is fifty by eighty feet. He also has another building twenty-five by ninety feet, which is used in connection with the business. Enterprise and diligence have always characterized him in the conduct of his commercial interests and with the growth and development of Paris his trade has kept pace, owing to the fact that he has always carried an attractive stock and has maintained the highest standards in the personnel of the house and in the treatment rendered patrons.

In 1888 Mr. Zeller was married to Miss Elizabeth Wahl, who was born in Saginaw, Michigan, a daughter of Martin Wahl, who came to Logan county, Arkansas, in 1878 and here followed farming. Six children have been born of this marriage: Antone, now engaged in the automobile business in Paris; Agnes, who is a trained nurse and was in war work at Camp Pike; Mary, the wife of Forrest Hill, who is employed by Mr. Zeller at the Paris store; George, who is in the employ of the Ford Auto Company in St. Louis and who served in the navy during the World war; Martin, who has been in the regular army for more than a year and is now stationed in the Philippines; and Hermina, who is studying in St. Edward's Infirmary to become a nurse. The eldest son was also in the service during the World war for a year, spending eleven months of the time in France.

Mr. Zeller and his family are communicants of the Catholic church and he belongs to the Knights of Columbus. He, too, has a military record, for he was a member of the Miller Rifles while in Little Rock in 1878, and took charge of the ballot box at the general state election to see that the votes were counted right. He now devotes his entire attention to his mercantile interests and the progressiveness and diligence which he has displayed throughout the forty-two years of his connection with commercial interests in Paris has well entitled him to his high standing in business and his gratifying success.

HON. ELIAS WILLIAM RECTOR.

Hon. Elias William Rector, a man of unsullied character and of unimpeachable reputation, was at the time of his demise the nestor of the bar of Hot Springs. He was closely associated with the work of the legal profession from 1873 until the time of his death in 1917 and, more than that, he was numbered among the lawmakers of the state, having for several terms represented his district in the general assembly. The story of his career is a most interesting one and should serve as a source of inspiration to all.

Mr. Rector was born at Little Rock, Arkansas, on the 11th of June, 1849, his parents being Henry Massey and Jane Elizabeth (Field) Rector. The father was one of the eminent statesmen of Arkansas and served as war governor, so that the family name has long been prominently associated with the history of the commonwealth.

In the public schools of his native city Elias W. Rector pursued his preliminary education and afterward became a student in the University of Virginia, where liberal training well qualified him for life's practical and responsible duties. He became a member of one of the college fraternities during his student days and he commanded the highest respect and esteem of his fellow students, just as in later life he enjoyed the warmest regard of his professional brethren. Admitted to the bar in 1873, he entered upon active practice, and though advancement in the law is proverbially slow, no dreary novitiate awaited him. He soon won recognition of his ability in a large private practice and as the years passed his clientage became extensive and of a very important character. For a quarter of a century prior to his demise he was the attorney for the Hot Springs Street Railway Company and was regarded as one of the foremost corporation lawyers in the state. In the memorial prepared by the Garland County Bar Association at the time of his death it was said: "Colonel Rector always stood with the leading lawyers of the state. He was peculiarly an elementary lawyer and had little sympathy for the modern system of practice known as 'case law.' He always deported himself as a dignified professional man of the type of the old school. When quite a young man, in the days of reconstruction, he lent his assistance, with the other young men of the state, to the task of ousting the 'carpetbag regime' and restoring the state government to the people. In 1874, at the time of the Brooks-Baxter war in Arkansas, he was commissioned by Governor Baxter a lieutenant colonel and hence came by the title by which he was always known. Colonel Rector was three times a member of the state legislature and during one term was speaker of the house of representatives. The bar of the state has lost one of its ablest members, the county a high-minded citizen and his family a kind husband and father." It was while serving as a member of the general assembly that Colonel Rector was active in securing the passage of much valuable legislation. He was the author of the act providing for a geological survey of the state and was also the author of the first anti-trust bill passed by the Arkansas legislature. Through the legislative enactment which he promoted it became unlawful for state and county officials to ride on railroad passes in Arkansas and he was also largely instrumental in passing the railroad commission bill. Perhaps as promoter of the bill for a geological survey of the state his greatest legislative work was accomplished. The casual thinker scarcely realizes how far-reaching in extent and importance was this bill, the adoption of which was attributable entirely to Colonel Rector's efforts, being passed after a hard fight. He selected and recommended Mr. Branner to act as state geologist, and through the efforts of Colonel Rector the appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars was made for the work, while through the passage of this bill Arkansas' resources were made known to the world and resulted in bringing large capital to the state, thereby aiding in its development. All this was the direct outcome of the labors of Colonel Rector, who was inspired to his work in this connection by a keen intellect and a lofty patriotism. This work alone entitles him to the highest honor as one of the most important factors in the state's growth and progress. Colonel Rector served as speaker of the house in 1891 and his rulings were always fair and impartial, being based upon a thorough familiarity with parliamentary procedure.

HON. ELIAS W. RECTOR

It was on the 11th of November, 1875, soon after he entered upon law practice, that Colonel Rector was married at Friar Point, Coahoma county, Mississippi, to Miss Rosebud Alcorn, a daughter of James Lusk and Amelia Walton (Glover) Alcorn, the former at one time governor and also at one time United States senator from Mississippi. Colonel and Mrs. Rector became the parents of nine children: Alcorn, now deceased; Amelia Walton; Henry Field, who married Miss Mary Dye of Mississippi; Lila and Wharton, both deceased; James Alcorn, who is a prominent lawyer of St. Louis and who married Miss Viola Meesh of Missouri; Jane Elizabeth, the wife of Middleton Lane Wootten of Texas; Rosebud Alcorn, who has also departed this life; and Rose Angeline Sally Phillips, the wife of Veit Aull Hain of Chicago.

Colonel Rector was a member of the Royal Arcanum but was not active in fraternal societies. His political allegiance was ever unfalteringly given to the democratic party and he was a recognized leader in its ranks in this state. He supported churches of all denominations and was a liberal donor thereto, having great reverence for the Christian religion. He was not denominational in any restricted sense but looked upon the world from the broad standpoint of Christianity and of Christian service, finding his greatest happiness in doing for others and in promoting those activities which make for the benefit of the individual and the betterment of mankind in general. One who knew him well wrote of him: "He was always candid in his views and expressions about private or public affairs. He detested hypocrisy in private life and demagoguery in politics. He was open, frank and knightly in his bearing, brave and chivalrous by nature, a loyal, devoted friend, and he embodied all the qualities to be hoped for in the very highest type of the real gentleman." He was regarded as a man of great power and influence and these he exercised at all times for the public weal. In personal appearance he was remarkably handsome. He was tall, erect and of perfect proportions. His bearing was graceful and majestic, so much so, that when a candidate for governor of his state the Commercial Appeal of Memphis made this comment: "E. W. Rector is a gentleman and an aristocrat, and wears a broadcloth coat, and what the red-necks and hill-billies of Arkansas will do to him will be aplenty." The circuit and chancery courts adjourned out of respect to Colonel Rector at the time of his demise. While a political leader, he was a man of the most unsullied character—a rare gem among politicians. On the pages of the supreme court records is a tribute to his unimpeachable integrity. Bribery charges were being brought against some of the members of the legislature, and to the question, "Of the members to whom bribes were offered, was E. W. Rector of Garland county listed among the number?" The prompt and decided answer came "No." To the further query of "Why?" answer was made: "Because I valued my life." This in substance is found upon the files of the supreme court. Another instance of Colonel Rector's unimpeachable integrity of character is shown in the fact that after Jeff Davis made his first campaign for governor of Arkansas, he told Colonel Rector that he had diligently searched his record, private and public, from his boyhood to manhood, with the hope of finding some stain —and could find none. The Hon. James K. Jones wrote to Colonel Rector from the United States senate under date of November 27, 1899: "I can say with all sincerity, and without any danger of being misunderstood by you, that you are one man in the state that I feel it an honor to call my friend. I have had an opinion of you for years past, which I think is justified by your course in public and private life, that your own modesty perhaps would not allow me to express in full to you." Elias William Rector was a patriot of the highest order. He loved Arkansas, and had he been honored by his state by a majority of votes when his services were solicited as governor he would have made Arkansas a garden among the gods and Hot Springs a glittering diamond among the Ozarks. It is recorded that Queen Mary of England said: "Look within my heart when I am dead and you will see engraven there—'Calais.'" One might have said: "Look within the heart of E. W. Rector and you will see engraven there—'Arkansas.'"

A most beautiful tribute was paid to Colonel Rector by James E. Hogue of Little Rock in the following poem:

"But like the brightest lustered star
Sometimes eclipsed by one that's dead;
He was never called to public view
Nor placed at his state or nation's head.

He then retired to private life
And spurned distinction's worthless fame;
No plaudits did he seek or ask,
He sought no laurels for his name.

In death there is a loss sustained
By a nation wide and the world of men;
A loss to his state and local bar
Seen throughout the lawyer's ken.

In the minds of those who knew him best
His life will remain a beacon light;
Remembered as a man upright and just
With courage to always do the right.

Colonel Rector has passed away,
Life's fierce battles for him are done;
But he leaves behind an illustrious name
Like the golden splendor of a setting sun.

A loyal son to his native state,
An honor to the land that gave him birth;
With a moral grandeur pure and just,
He was a peer of all the ranks of earth.

To the erring he was a guiding mark,
To the poor and distressed a faithful friend;
A companion to the wise and great,
With a will that none could break or bend.

In the legislature he served his state
More from duty than from desire;
Twice called into the governor's race,
A place once filled by his worthy sire.

He was fearless in his acts and deeds,
Just in judgment of foe or friend;
Fair and honest in his business life
And wise in counsel with prudent men.

His manly bearing was nature's gift,
His home was a temple of faith and love;
His sympathies reached to unknown depths,
His thoughts winged up to the stars above.

His life was as pure as a crystal stream,
His soul was as white as Shasta's snow;
His name still shines on memory's cloud,
Like the rich-hued arch of a radiant bow.

The cloud-creped heavens weep his loss,
Raining their tears upon a mourning town;
Less worthy men have adorned a throne,
Inferior men have graced a crown."

From one of the Arkansas papers is quoted the following: "Colonel E. W. Rector was one of the most conscientious lawyers in the public life of Arkansas. He enjoyed a wide acquaintanceship and numbered personal friends by the thousands. He had filled many offices, and always with honor to himself and credit to the people. He was always fair to the people; he was just to the corporation. He never cringed to capital; he never curried the favor of the mob. He was a student; he burned midnight oil; he mastered difficult and vexatious problems. He had none of the ignoble traits of the professional politician. He wasn't a demogogue; he believed in the rule of the people and not the domination of the almighty dollar. . . . . He was a lawyer because he loved the law. He was a lover of books and a writer of splendid ability. He was a man of fine qualities and broad, sympathetic attainments, open to all influences of the nobler and higher living. People had confidence in him—in his ability and sincerity. The tribute paid at his funeral by his pastor was as true as it was strong and beautiful. . . . . He was strong in individual character, unswerving for the right, but was gentle, genial, because he found life a joy in living for others, and in doing for them. . . . . Colonel Rector was a friend to man. He loved men; he believed in them; he lived and strove to touch within them those hidden springs that lie just beneath, ready to gush forth in living fountains of best efforts whenever the masterhand breaks the crust. And he was a masterhand, guided by love. Arkansas lost a valuable citizen when Colonel Rector answered the call of the Master and his soul crossed the Divide which marks the world invisible from the world visible."

One of the most fitting and beautiful tributes to Colonel E. W. Rector was written in an editorial in the Sentinel Record of Hot Springs, January 30, 1917, as follows: "Perhaps the greatest reserve force Hot Springs has ever had on which to call in hour of trial has passed away. Colonel Rector is dead. During his earlier life he was not a reserve force but he was a leader and in all things for upbuilding and progress. In later years, when the hand of time had wrinkled his brow and had slowed down the step of his activity, he was still a great reserve force behind others who had stepped into leadership. There has never been a crisis in Hot Springs (and as we reflect we review many of them) but what Colonel E. W. Rector has been the one turned to when the hour was darkest. The impulsiveness of others was counterbalanced by the quiet dignity of Colonel Rector. The prejudice of others was evened up by the impartiality of a man above bias, and embitterments which others held were leavened in the balance before him, who was always above personal prejudice. A gentleman to the manner born, whose gentility was recognized by all with whom he came in contact; a scholar of the old school whose attainments he made useful to others as well as himself; a man born to be useful among men and filling that obligation in every respect; a citizen whose example will live always behind him; a friend whose fidelity was never in question—Colonel Rector will be missed in Hot Springs. We will have other dark periods in the history of our city just as we have had before, and there will be other times when sober-faced men will be gathered together pondering over a solution, and there will be other times when into the minds of such men the suggestion will arise, 'Let's call in Colonel Rector;' but the call will not again be answered, for the tongue that has spoken words of wisdom and good counsel has been stilled in death."

EARL N. WARD.

Earl N. Ward is the manager of the Fort Smith Ice Cream Company and therefore one of the most active and energetic business men of the city, for in this connection has been developed one of the large business concerns with a patronage that is constantly increasing. Mr. Ward is a native of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Lavaca, Sebastian county, in 1883. He is a son of J. N. and F. L. (Barnes) Ward. The father was also born and reared in Lavaca and is a representative of one of the old pioneer families of the state, long associated with its development and upbuilding. The grandfather in the paternal line was Francis M. Ward, who was a captain of the Union army. The family was also represented in the World war by Harry J. and William K. Ward, brothers of Earl N. Ward, who served their country in the sanguinary struggle against Germany. The family of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Ward numbered the following children: Earl N.; Claud C.; Harry J.; William K.; and Eva, the wife of Roy A. Drum.

J. N. Ward devoted his life to farming and stock raising for a number of years, but about thirty years ago turned his attention to the ice industry and today the family manages the largest ice house in the country. As the sons have attained sufficient age they have been taken into the business and have been valuable contributing factors to its success and growth. One after another branches have been established in various parts of the state, until the company now controls a trade in excess of that of all others in Arkansas. The various branches are distributed as follows: The Border City Ice & Cold Storage Company of which J. N. Ward, the father, is the president and manager, is located at Fort Smith; the Fort Smith Ice & Cold Storage Company, also of this city, is managed by R. A. Drum, the son-in-law of J. N. Ward; the Van Buren Ice & Cold Storage Company is operating at Van Buren, Arkansas, with W. K. Ward as manager; the Rogers Ice & Cold Storage Company at Rogers, Arkansas, of which J. N. Ward is the president, is managed by John Pennington; another branch is the Clarksville (Ark.) Ice & Cold Storage Company; the Mansfield Ice & Cold Storage Company is managed by Harry J. Ward; the Heavener Ice & Cold Storage Company is another of the plants of this firm, situated at Heavener, Oklahoma, for the company has extended its operations into an adjoining state; at Poteau, Oklahoma, is found still another branch, known as the Poteau Ice & Cold Storage Company, of which R. A. Drum acts as manager, as he does also of the Heavener branch. There are two other ice companies in Oklahoma, one at Quinton, operating under the name of the Quinton Ice & Cold Storage Company; and one at Stigler, conducted under the style of the Stigler Ice & Cold Storage Company. Also at Stigler the Ward family owns the Stigler Electric Light & Power Company, with C. C. Ward as manager. A twelfth branch of the business is situated at Hugo, Oklahoma, and is conducted under the name of the Hugo Ice Cream Company. This is a branch of the Fort Smith Ice Cream Company, although operated independently.

Earl N. Ward spent his youthful days under the parental roof, enjoying the educational advantages offered by the public school system of Arkansas, and under his father's direction he received his business training, his powers developing as the years have passed until he most successfully manages and controls not only the business of the Fort Smith Ice Cream Company but also that of the Hugo Ice Cream Company of Oklahoma. The Fort Smith Ice Cream Company was organized January 1, 1917, and its product commonly known as Ward's Ice Cream is considered the best to be had in the city. This is the largest establishment of the kind in Fort Smith and the product is shipped over a radius of two hundred and fifty miles.

Earl N. Ward has a son, Earl, Jr.

JOHN HARRISON GIPSON, M. D.

Dr. John Harrison Gipson, physician and surgeon of Des Arc, was born in Simpson county, Mississippi, in 1878, and is a representative of one of the old southern families, his ancestors having come from North Carolina. His father, Dr. W. M. Gipson, was born in North Carolina, prepared for his profession at New Orleans and engaged in practice in Mississippi for many years. He served with the Confederate forces in the Civil war and then returned to become a physician of Simpson county, where he labored successfully in professional circles, continuing a resident of that state to the time of his demise. In young manhood he wedded Mollie Ross, who was born in Rankin county, Mississippi, where her parents had settled in pioneer times. She, too, continued a resident of the state until called to her final rest. To Dr. and Mrs. W. M. Gipson nine children were born: Lula, who became the wife of Charles Calhoun; Mattie, the wife of John Franklin; Thomas; Rosa, the wife of Silas Calhoun; William, a physician at Lytle, Texas; John Harrison, of this review; James; Anna, the wife of Luther Daniels; and Mary, the wife of Ernest Howell. One of the family, William Gipson, has a son, Cary, who served in the World war.

Spending his youthful days under the parental roof Dr. John Harrison Gipson, whose name introduces this review, pursued his studies in the schools of Poplarville, Mississippi, and of Memphis, Tennessee. At the latter place he prepared for his professional career and was graduated from the Memphis Hospital Medical College with the class of 1907. Immediately afterward he located at Harrisonville, Mississippi, for the practice of his profession and later removed to Georgetown, Mississippi, where he continued until 1913, when he came to Des Arc. Here he has remained through the intervening period of nine years and his course has been marked by a steady progress that indicates his ability in coping with the intricate and involved problems which continually confront the physician in his efforts to check the ravages of disease and restore health. His labors have been attended with excellent results and his practice is now extensive.

Dr. Gipson was united in marriage to Miss Cora Purvis, a daughter of J. B. and Sallie (Terry) Purvis. They have become parents of three children: Vesta, John and Sallie. Dr. Gipson is a Baptist in religious faith, as is also his wife, loyally following the teachings of the church and taking a deep interest in the moral progress of the community. He is also a champion of the cause of public education and is serving on the school board.

THOMAS W. FREEMAN.

Various business interests in different sections of the country have felt the stimulus and profited by the exertions and the enterprise of Thomas W. Freeman, a man of marked forcefulness and resourcefulness, whose sound judgment in business affairs is constantly manifest in the success which is attending his operations. He now resides at Little Rock, where he is conducting an extensive Ford agency and where he has other important business interests. He was born on a farm in Morgan county, Georgia, May 2, 1880, and is a representative of an old family of that state, his parents being Joseph F. and Emma G. (Snow) Freeman, who were married in Monroe, Georgia, in November, 1876. The father was born in Broughton, that state, in 1852, and the mother's birth occurred in August, 1856, in Monroe, where their marriage was celebrated. They now reside at Atlanta, where they are widely and prominently known. Mr. Freeman has for many years been identified with banking interests but is now living retired. He votes with the democratic party. To him and his wife were born four sons and six daughters, of whom two daughters died in infancy, while the other members of the family are living.

Thomas W. Freeman enjoyed excellent educational opportunities. He attended the Palmyra Institute at Newborn, Georgia, and also the Southern University at Atlanta, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1899. The following year he entered the Neal Bank of Atlanta, with which he remained until 1904, rising to the position of teller. On the expiration of that period he and his father organized two private banks, the first being the Bank of Mansfield, at Mansfield, Georgia, of which Thomas W. Freeman became cashier. In 1905 they founded the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Rutledge, Georgia, of which the son became vice president. Both of these banks are still in existence and he retains stocks therein, but is not an officer. In October, 1917, Mr. Freeman came to Little Rock and the firm of Freeman & Freeman was formed for the conduct of a Ford motor car agency, the partner in the enterprise being his brother, Charles E. Freeman. This association was maintained for about four years or until June, 1921, when Thomas W. Freeman purchased his brother's interest and is now sole proprietor of the business, which is one of extensive proportions. This does not cover the entire scope of his activities, however. He became one of the organizers and is one of the large stockholders of the Pritchard Lumber Company of Little Rock, is also a stockholder in the firm of Galloway, Martin & Dillard, wholesale produce dealers of Little Rock, is half owner of the Rawlings & Freeman Warehouse Company of Little Rock and has large real estate interests in the city. His investments have been most judiciously made, his judgment being at all times sound and reliable and his sagacity keen. He readily discriminates between the essential and the non-essential in all business affairs and his enterprise has brought him prominently to the front as a splendid representative of that type of business men who in promoting their individual success also contribute largely to public prosperity.

Mr. Freeman was married January 18, 1916, to Miss Ruby Gartman, who was born at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, July 22, 1891, and was there graduated from the high school. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman have membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his political endorsement is given to the democratic party. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and he is identified with the Board of Commerce of Little Rock cooperating in all of its projects for the city's upbuilding and development. The social side of his nature finds expression in his membership in the Lakeside and in the Old River Clubs.

DONALD KENT HAWTHORNE.

Donald Kent Hawthorne was born at Corning, Clay county, Arkansas, on the 25th of April, 1877, a descendant of one of the old American families, the ancestral line being traced back to his great-grandfather, Joseph Hawthorne, who was born in Virginia in Colonial days and served as a soldier with the American forces in the Revolutionary war. The paternal grandfather, Robert H. Hawthorne, was an officer of the Confederate army during the Civil war, remaining at the front throughout the period of hostilities. In days of peace he devoted his life to surveying. He was born in Virginia and died in Camden, Tennessee, in 1866. His son, John Clarke Hawthorne, father of Donald Kent Hawthorne, was born near Camden in Benton county, Tennessee, February 22, 1851, and was therefore a youth of but fifteen years at the time of his father's demise. He made wise use of his time, talents and opportunities and became an honored and representative resident of Arkansas, residing for many years in Jonesboro, Craighead county, where he engaged in the practice of law. He was numbered among the lawmakers as well as the lawyers of the state, for from 1881 until 1883 he served in the upper house of the general assembly. He had removed from Tennessee to Arkansas in 1871 and from that date until his death continued a valued resident of this state. His political allegiance was at all times given to the democratic party. In 1876, in early manhood, he was married at Corning, Arkansas, to Miss Elizabeth Beloate, who was born in Kentucky, in 1853, a daughter of William D. Beloate. To Hon. John C. Hawthorne and his wife were born three children: Donald K.; John H., born in 1879; and Blanche, the wife of Virgil C. Pettie. The death of Mr. Hawthorne occurred in Waukesha, Wisconsin, August 25, 1920.

Donald K. Hawthorne was educated in the public schools of Jonesboro, Arkansas, the University of Arkansas and the St. Louis Law School. Stimulated by the example of his father, he engaged in the practice of law in 1900. Admitted to the bar he at once entered upon active practice and from the beginning has made steady progress, his success being due to his own efforts and merit. He is faithful to every interest committed to his charge and in his arguments, which are ever based upon the facts in the case and the law applicable to them, he has displayed a profound knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence.

On the 12th of December, 1899, in St. Louis, Mr. Hawthorne was united in marriage to Miss Rowena Davies, who was born in Montrose, Missouri, July 1, 1877, a daughter of Elza Z. Davies, who was an officer of the Union army in the Civil war and afterwards became a resident of Fayetteville, Arkansas, where he died in 1919. His daughter, Mrs. Hawthorne, completed her education as a pupil in the State University of Arkansas at Fayetteville. She died September 14, 1910, survived by a daughter, Rowena Elizabeth, while an elder child, Donald K., Jr., died in infancy. On the 11th day of August, 1914, Mr. Hawthorne was again married, his second union being with Miss Mary Mast, daughter of the late John W. Mast, a native of Bavaria, Germany, and a soldier of the Civil war, serving with the Confederate army throughout the period of hostilities.

In his political views Mr. Hawthorne has been an earnest democrat since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and while he has never aspired to public office he has done effective work for the party as a member of the state central committee. He belongs to the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, of Little Rock, and he is well known in Masonic circles, having taken the York Rite degrees, being now a past eminent commander of Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 18, K. T., at Jonesboro, Arkansas. He also belongs to the Mystic Shrine and has ever been a faithful follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. In all the relations of life he has fully measured up to the demands laid upon him as a progressive citizen, maintaining at all times high standards in his relations, not only with his clients but with the general public as well.

JOSEPH PALMER SHEPPARD, M. D.

Dr. Joseph Palmer Sheppard, division surgeon for the Rock Island Railroad and a well known representative of the medical profession in Little Rock, whose experience and study are constantly making for greater efficiency in his chosen calling, was born in Columbia, Maury county, Tennessee, April 6, 1875, and is descended from one of the old families of that county that traces its ancestry back to the pioneer and patriot stock of Virginia. His father, William Clinton Sheppard, was born in Columbia, Tennessee, in 1838, and the mother, who bore the maiden name of Idell E. Johns, was born in Rutherford county, Tennessee, in 1848. It was in that county that their marriage was celebrated and for many years they resided at Columbia, Tennessee, where Dr. William C. Sheppard engaged in the practice of dentistry. Toward the close of the Civil war he served for a few weeks as a private in Forrest's command of the Confederate army and his political endorsement was always given to the democratic party. He died at the place of his nativity in the year 1901 and is survived by Mrs. Sheppard, who still makes her home in Columbia. They had a family of six sons and four daughters and all reached adult age, with the exception of one daughter. The others are still living.

In the attainment of his education Dr. Sheppard attended the public schools of his native city until graduated from the high school with the class of 1892, after which he spent several years as a pupil in Kelly's private school. He next entered the medical department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and completed his course by graduation with the class of 1900. The same year he came to Little Rock and entered upon the active practice of medicine and surgery. In September, 1906, he was appointed superintendent and physician in charge of the Pulaski County Hospital and filled that office with credit and distinction to himself and to the benefit of the county for a considerable period. While the hospital is maintained for those who cannot pay, it has hospital and surgical facilities more modern and complete than those of any other institution in the state and these features have afforded clinical opportunities to the students of the two medical colleges of Little Rock. Under Dr. Sheppard's administration much improvement was made in the care of the patients and also in beautifying the building and grounds. The sanitary arrangements of the place were perfected and Dr. Sheppard was accorded great credit for making this charitable institution a model of its kind, unsurpassed in Arkansas and scarcely equalled throughout the rest of the country.

On the 28th of July, 1905, Dr. Sheppard was married to Elizabeth Rutherford Denison, who was born at Sacket Harbor, New York, July 11, 1882, and was graduated from the Stuart School at Staunton, Virginia. She is a daughter of George W. and Olivia

DR. JOSEPH P. SHEPPARD

(Vandergriff) Denison and the mother is now living at Little Rock, where the father died. Since his retirement from the office of superintendent of the Pulaski County Hospital, in which position he served from 1906 until 1916, Dr. Sheppard has given his attention to the private practice of medicine and surgery and in 1916 was appointed to the position of division surgeon for the Rock Island & Pacific Railroad. He is identified with a number of medical societies, including the Pulaski County, Arkansas State and American Medical Associations and the American Association of Railway Surgeons. Politically he is a democrat, fraternally an Elk and socially a member of the Country Club, which he joined on its organization. He attends the Presbyterian church and his life has ever been guided by those principles which make for honorable manhood and progressive citizenship. He has rendered signal service to his fellowmen in his professional capacity and at the same time he has ever stood for those forces which make for the intellectual and moral progress of city and state. He has become known in the educational field through his occupancy of the chair of genito-urinary diseases in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Little Rock and he has also been chairman of the Pulaski county board of health and secretary of the Arkansas state board of health.

JEFFERSON DAVIS COTTON

In the year 1886 Jefferson Davis Cotton became identified with the commercial development of Hope and was closely associated with the business interests of the city from that time until his death, which occurred more than a quarter of a century later. He naturally became widely known and he possessed many substantial traits that gained for him the high esteem of those with whom he came in contact. A native of Mississippi, he was born June 28, 1861, and was reared upon a farm in that state, early becoming familiar with the best methods of tilling the soil from the time that early crops were planted until the harvests were gathered in the late autumn. He acquired a good education in the public schools of the neighborhood and in young manhood engaged in teaching school in Mississippi. He was but fourteen years of age when his father died and from that time forward was largely dependent upon his own resources. After teaching school for a time he clerked in a store in Mississippi and in 1886 came to Hope, Arkansas, where he again secured a clerkship. He was thus engaged until 1893, when he established business on his own account, opening a general store which he conducted in company with his father-in-law, J. M. Hanegan. Following the latter's death he became sole owner of the business and conducted it alone until his own demise, which occurred on the 12th of February, 1914. Mrs. Cotton afterward carried on the store for a year and a half and then sold. Mr. Cotton was regarded as one of the progressive and representative merchants of the city. He carried a large and well selected line of goods and was ever earnest in his purpose to please his customers and render to them the best possible service.

On the 21st of January, 1890, Mr. Cotton was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Hanegan and they became parents of one son, Roy H., who was on the Mexican border during the trouble which preceded the World war.

Mr. Cotton was for twenty-five years a very active member of the Baptist church and served as deacon. He was greatly interested in the public welfare and gave his support to all projects which he deemed of value to the community in connection with material, intellectual, social and moral progress. The cause of education found in him a stalwart supporter and he served as president of the school board for fifteen years. He was also a member of the city council and exercised his official prerogatives in support of many plans and projects for civic betterment and the public good. Mrs. Cotton survives her husband and is well known here. She also belongs to the Baptist church and is interested in all good work. Mr. Cotton made for himself an enviable place in the affection of his friends and his memory is yet cherished by many who new him.

J. C. ROGERS.

J. C. Rogers, actively and busily engaged in farming at Prairie Grove, was born December 10, 1864, on a farm east of Prairie Grove, his parents being Dr. S. E. and Julia (West) Rogers, the former a native of Georgia, while the latter was born in Tennessee. They were married in Washington county, Arkansas, Dr. Rogers having become one of the pioneer settlers of this part of the state. He obtained his education here and in the Indian Territory, working in the Indian mission at an early day. He received his professional training in Georgia and then entered upon the practice of medicine in Washington county, devoting a number of years to that pursuit. He was a son of Hugh Rogers, a native of Alabama, who spent his last days, however, in Washington county, Arkansas. At the time of the Civil war Dr. Rogers responded to the call of the Confederacy for aid and was wounded in battle, being shot through the lungs. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and was also a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of Masonry. He married Julia West, a daughter of Robert West, a native of Tennessee, in which state he spent his entire life. To Dr. and Mrs. Rogers were born four children: Hugh, who is now a farmer of Prairie Grove; Annie, the wife of Tom Neal, also farming in the vicinity of Prairie Grove; J. C., of this review; and John, a ranchman living at Texaline, Oklahoma.

J. C. Rogers acquired his education in the schools of Prairie Grove and started in life as a farmer, having been thoroughly trained to the work of the fields. From early boyhood he assisted in the cultivation and care of the crops and throughout his entire life he has continued to devote his attention to the occupation in which he was reared.

In 1888 Mr. Rogers was married to Miss Jane Elizabeth Wilson, who was born in Madison county, Arkansas, a daughter of Abraham Wilson, who was one of the early farmers of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have become parents of two children: Clyde, who married John M. Borders, who is in the government employ in Washington, D. C.; and Julian, who is located in St. Joseph, Missouri. She was educated at the University of Arkansas and is widely known as a vocalist.

Mrs. Rogers belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, while fraternally Mr. Rogers is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, becoming a charter member of both local lodges. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and he keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day, but the major part of his time and attention is given to his farming interests. He is today the owner of one hundred and seventy acres of rich land in the home place and has one hundred and ninety-three acres east of Fayetteville and two hundred and sixty-three acres ten miles south of Prairie Grove. He carries on general agricultural pursuits and has become prominently known as a stock raiser. He was the first breeder of shorthorn cattle in Washington county and at one time had a large amount of fine stock. On his place now are found nothing but full-blooded shorthorns. He has won a substantial measure of success through capable management and from the rental of his farms he now derives a most gratifying annual income.

HUGH W. GOODWIN.

Hugh W. Goodwin, a member of one of El Dorado's most prominent pioneer families, is a farmer, residing a mile and a half northeast of the city. He was born in Union county, in the outskirts of El Dorado, April 13, 1851, and is a son of Peter D. and Melinda L. (Brown) Goodwin, the latter a daughter of Warner Brown and a sister of Colonel Paul Brown of St. Louis. Mrs. Goodwin was born in South Carolina. Peter D. Goodwin was a native of Virginia and during his boyhood accompanied his parents to Alabama, where he was reared. On the 5th of March, 1831, he came to Arkansas and erected the first house in El Dorado, about the year '41. He was a mechanic and a ginright and built cotton gins throughout this section of the state.

Hugh W. Goodwin was educated in the district schools of the county, attended school in El Dorado in 1866, and attended Gordon Institute at Lisbon, Arkansas in 1869. Following the completion of his studies he worked for four years in El Dorado, after which he was married, in 1874, and purchased a farm which he still owns. During the succeeding fourteen years he was actively engaged in agricultural pursuits but in 1888 again entered the mercantile field and for sixteen years engaged in selling goods for different firms in El Dorado. He continued to reside on the farm, however, and cultivated it throughout this period. In the spring of 1906, he severed his connection with commercial interests in El Dorado and has since given his undivided attention to his farm activities. He has brought his place under a high state of cultivation and annually gathers good crops as a reward for the care and labor which he bestows upon his fields.

In December, 1874, Mr. Goodwin was married to Miss Ida Langford of El Dorado, and they have become parents of nine children and also have twenty-two grandchildren. Theirs is a notable record, inasmuch as there has never been a death in the family. The children are: Walter L., a farmer, residing at Parkdale, Arkansas; Rose G., at home; Martha M., the wife of Dr. J. B. Wharton, a prominent physician and surgeon of El Dorado; James A., manager of the farm of ex-Governor Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, the property being located in Lincoln county, Arkansas; Julia A., the wife of H. M. Geren of Lancaster, Texas; William J., an attorney of El Dorado, Arkansas; Alta, at home; Ida H., the wife of B. H. Galbraith, of the firm of Sample & Company of El Dorado; and Ruth at home.

The family are members of the Baptist church and Mr. Goodwin belongs to the Knights of Pythias fraternity. His entire life has been passed in this locality and he is a worthy representative of a well known and highly respected pioneer family. He has lived a life of industry and usefulness and is now closely associated with the agricultural development of the district in which he makes his home.

B. D. LUCK, M. D.

Dr. B. D. Luck, a physician and surgeon engaged in the active practice of his profession in Pine Bluff since 1903, was born in Columbia county, Arkansas, December 21, 1879, and is a son of J. J. and Llewelyn (Newcomb) Luck. The grandfather in the paternal line was the Rev. John O. Luck, a well known minister of the Baptist church, who preached for a long period in Nevada county, Arkansas. He was a chaplain in the Civil war. The Newcomb family is of French lineage and Dr. Luck's maternal grandfather was killed in the Civil war while serving with the Confederate forces. He was a well known pioneer of Nevada county and had contributed in substanial measure to the early development and upbuilding of that section of the state.

B. D. Luck pursued his advanced education in Ouachita College and in broad literary learning laid the foundation on which to build the superstructure of professional knowledge. He at length matriculated in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, where he completed his course and won his degree. For a year thereafter he served as interne in St. Vincent's Hospital at Birmingham, Alabama, and gained that broad and valuable knowledge and experience which is never acquired as quickly in any other way as in hospital practice. In 1904 he removed to Pine Bluff, where he has remained and as a physician and surgeon has gained a most creditable place, having now an extensive practice, to which he gives the most conscientious care and attention. His ability is recognized and his powers have grown through the exercise of effort and by reason of his constant study of the principles of medicine and surgery, including all the latest scientific researches and discoveries. In addition to his local practice at Pine Bluff he is surgeon for the Iron Mountain Railway.

Dr. Luck has been married twice. He first wedded Miss Josephine Custer and they became parents of two children: Benjamin and Josephine. For his second wife Dr. Luck chose Miss Wordna Clements of Little Rock. In his religious faith he is a Baptist, while fraternally he is connected with the Masons and with the Elks. In the former he has attained high rank and is now a 32nd degree Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He belongs to various medical societies and has been honored with the vice presidency of the Arkansas State Medical Society. He is also identified with the Association of Southern Railway Surgeons. During the World war he served as a member of the advisory council of the local board. He has the high regard of his colleagues and contemporaries in the profession, for he holds to the most advanced ethical standards and withal is prompted by a broad humanitarian spirit in the performance of his professional duties.

HERBERT J. BOSLER.

Herbert J. Bosler, owner of the Hub Manufacturing Company and mayor of Jonesboro, was born in Huron, Indiana, on the 19th of January, 1880, a son of Fred J. and Anna (Gibson) Bosler. On the paternal side he is of Holland Dutch and Irish extraction and one branch of the Bosler family settled in Pennsylvania prior to the Revolutionary war. One of the members of that branch built the first stone house in that state. On the maternal side he is of Scotch-Irish and English extraction. Members of the Gibson family came to American before the Revolutionary war and located in North Carolina. Ancestors on both sides of the house served gallantly throughout the Revolution. The paternal grandfather, Joseph Bosler, upon the outbreak of the Civil war, enlisted as a private in the Federal army from Indiana. He was later promoted to a captaincy, with which rank he received his honorable discharge. John Gibson, the maternal grandfather, likewise enlisted in an Indiana regiment, and served as a private in the infantry. Having engaged in farming until 1922, Fred J. Bosler is now living at Greenfield, Indiana, and is one of the highly respected citizens of that community. He is in his sixty-fifth year. Near Huron, Indiana, in 1879, was celebrated his marriage to Miss Anna Gibson, who was born and reared in that state. Her demise occurred in 1913, at the age of fifty-one years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Bosler four children were born, two boys and two girls, all of whom are living. Herbert J. Bosler, whose name initiates this review, is the eldest member of the family.

Herbert J. Bosler attended the grade and high schools of Indianapolis, Indiana, and then started in business with his father at Seymour, that state. They engaged in the manufacture of hub blocks and Mr. Bosler remained active in that connection for ten or twelve years. During that time they resided at various points in Indiana and Illinois. At the age of eighteen years he was manager of his father's plant and in the manufacture of hub blocks for wagon wheels and vehicles of similar nature, he became more and more progressive. In 1907 he came to Arkansas, located in Jonesboro and laid the foundations for the present business. He was associated with his father and brother for some time, but subsequently bought out their interests and is now sole owner. During the World war the plant was turned over to the manufacture of food-box materials, such as flat veneer. The need of this material for the shipment of food to the American Expeditionary Forces was urgent and, following a conference at Memphis, in which government officials participated, the plant was given over to the above purpose exclusively.

In 1921 Herbert J. Bosler was elected mayor of Jonesboro, by an overwhelming majority, and he is giving to this community a progressive and prosperous administration. For two years, 1919-1920, he was a member of the city council. He is now a director in the First National Bank here. Mr. Bosler is identified with many organizations, which have for their purpose the development and improvement of the community. He has the distinction of being the second president of the Lion's Club and he was one of the organizers of the Chamber of Commerce, was treasurer for the first year and now is a member of the board of directors. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Masons, in the latter body holding membership in Jonesboro Lodge, No. 127, A. F. &. A. M.; Jonesboro Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; and Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 18, of Jonesboro. He has served as recorder of the commandery for several years. Mr. Bosler is a man of good business capacity, acknowledged integrity of character, and also possesses an energy and progressiveness which are prominent attributes of leaders in all lines of endeavor. He has won a gratifying measure of prosperity and is recognized as a reliable and substantial citizen, whom to know is to honor.

J. R. WOODS.

J. R. Woods, known as one of the "live wires" of Fort Smith, or in other words a dynamic force in the business life of the community, is now the general manager of the Woods Manufacturing Company, engaged in the manufacture of pants. This is one of the extensive and thriving business concerns of the city and its trade is steadily developing along substantial lines. The officers of the company are: Z. A. Woods, president; Phillip Blass, vice president; C. R. Woods, secretary and treasurer; and J. R. Woods, manager. The company was organized in Fort Smith in 1908 and plans were immediately carried out for the establishment and operation of the plant. Prior to this time Z. A. Woods, father of J. R. Woods, was interested in the Jackson Woolen Mills of Jackson, Tennessee, a very old concern and devoted to pants manufacturing. The father is a native of Virginia and prior to engaging in manufacturing interests was a merchant at Clarksville, Arkansas. He made steady advancement in that connection and then turned his attention to manufacturing interests, in which he has made steady progress. His activity along this line at Jackson, Tennessee, brought him wide experience and comprehensive knowledge of the business and well qualified him to head a concern of this character, when in 1908 he became the founder of the Woods Manufacturing Company of Fort Smith. This concern normally employs about one hundred and twenty-five people and manufactures from twelve to fifteen hundred pairs of pants per day. Pants are made in three hundred styles and the output is widely distributed throughout the south and the southwest. The company utilizes a large brick building of modern construction and supplied with the latest improved machinery to facilitate the work.

Z. A. Woods, founder and promoter of the business, was united in marriage to Miss Rose Harris and to them were born two sons: C. R. and J. R. Woods, both natives of Clarksville and both associated with the business.

J. R. Woods is the active manager of the enterprise. His youthful days were spent under the parental roof, his education was acquired in the public schools and his training has always been along the line of work in which he is now engaged.

He also operates extensively and successfully in the real estate field and is the owner of much valuable property.

Mr. Woods belongs to the Business Men's Club of Fort Smith and is interested in all organized efforts for the development and extension of trade relations in Fort Smith and in the upbuilding of the city along the lines of civic progress and improvement. During the World war he took an active part in managing various campaigns and otherwise promoting the interests of the government by strongly holding the home lines for the support of the soldiers upon the firing line.

THOMAS A. COCKBURN.

Thomas A. Cockburn, proprietor of the Ostrich Farm of Hot Springs and director of the Arkansas Trust Company, was born in Inverness, Scotland, on the 17th of September, 1855. Liberally educated, he attended the Aberdeen University at Aberdeen, Scotland, and as a youth he went to New Zealand with the intention of taking up the banking business there, but on account of his health he abandoned that plan and tarried but a brief period in that section of the world. Continuing his journey, he went to the island of Ceylon, where he became connected with the business of tea, coffee and spice growing, remaining an active representative of that field of industry for a period of fourteen years. In 1893 he was made a member of the Ceylon Commission to represent the Ceylon Planters Association at the World's Columbian Exposition, held in Chicago. The attractive Ceylon building and the hospitality there extended to all visitors will be well remembered by those who attended the exposition. When the Chicago fair closed, Mr. Cockburn went with the Ceylon exhibit to the midwinter fair held in San Francisco. While there he met Mr. Cawston, who a short time before had established an ostrich farm at Norwalk, twenty miles out of Los Angeles, California, on a little branch railroad, difficult of access, being out of the beaten path of the tourist. When Mr. Cockburn was taken to the farm and his opinion was asked, he replied by telling Mr. Cawston that he would go broke in that location—that business conditions were not favorable to the development of his enterprise. After carefully canvassing the situation, the two entered into a partnership and established the South Pasadena Ostrich Farm, which is today known to tourists throughout the world. Success attended the undertaking, which soon became recognized as a most prosperous business enterprise. Later they established a branch farm at San Antonio, Texas, of which Mr. Cockburn took charge, there remaining until the partnership was dissolved. On the 28th of January, 1901, Mr. Cockburn established his present ostrich farm in Hot Springs, Arkansas, known as the Hot Springs National Park. Here he has met with gratifying success, having an establishment of this character unsurpassed in any part of the country. He is the owner of Black Diamond and Whirlwind, two ostriches that made an international reputation on the race track following the grand circuit trotting races in this country and in Canada, being driven to sulky against the fastest horses of the country and rarely being defeated. Black Diamond has a trotting record of 1:05 for the half mile. Mr. Cockburn has made a most comprehensive study of the ostrich, its habits and its habitat. The bird is not full grown until its fourth year, after which the female begins laying. The first eggs are laid in the late spring or early summer and an egg is laid every second evening until there are from twelve to twenty eggs in the nest. The keepers usually leave a setting of sixteen eggs at one time and it requires six weeks for hatching. The female covers the eggs during the day, while the male bird sits upon the nest through the night. Previous to this period of incubation the male bird prepares the nest by digging a hole in the ground large enough to keep the eggs from rolling out of the nest, and when six weeks have passed the little birds break the shell. The commercial feathers are the wing and tail, which are harvested every nine months by clipping, from twenty to tweny-four feathers being gathered from each wing and from fifty to sixty-five from the tail. The average life of the ostrich is seventy years, but the birds sometimes live to be from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and thirty years. The male mates with the female for life, and if the female bird dies, the male bird is seldom known to mate again; but the female will take another mate. The ostrich farm owned by Mr. Cockburn is a matter of great interest to the traveling public and is annually visited by thousands of tourists who go to Hot Springs.

In 1897, Mr. Cockburn was married to Miss Anna Schildknecht. About two years after her death he married the niece of the late Rt. Honorable Sir J. J. Grinlinton, Kt. U. L. C. Mr. Cockburn has one son, Edwin Barry, who is now bookkeeper with the Arkansas Trust Company of Hot Springs, National Park. Of this company Mr. Thomas A. Cockburn is one of the directors and he is also a director of the Maurice Bath House, of which he was one of the builders. In all business affairs he displays keen sagacity and sound judgment, readily discriminating between the essential and non-essential in the management of all enterprises and business interests with which he has become associated.

Mr. Cockburn has traveled extensively and has developed his linguistic powers to a considerable degree. He has gathered a valuable collection of the handiwork of the natives of India and Ceylon in brasses and wood carving and also has many other most interesting curios. He belongs to the Rotary Club and in religious faith is an Episcopalian, serving as junior warden of St. Luke's parish.

HON. WILLIAM O. YOUNG.

Hon. William O. Young, a native son of Arkansas and an able representative of the Bentonville bar, with which he has been identified for a period of twenty years, has also taken a prominent part in public affairs, representing his district in the state legislature. He was born in Benton county, Arkansas, September 14, 1861, a son of D. M. and Sarah (Darnall) Young, the former a native of Montgomery county, Tennessee, while the latter was born in Greene county, Missouri. The father came to Benton county when a lad of ten years, the mother being fourteen years of age at the time of her arrival, and in this county their marriage occurred. The father devoted his life to the occupation of farming, save for the period which he spent as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, enlisting in March, 1862, as a member of Pickens' Company, Brooks' Regiment, which was disbanded in April, 1865. He participated in the engagements at Pea Ridge and Prairie Grove, Arkansas, and returned to his home in August, 1865. During his absence at the front his wife supervised the operation of the farm and after selling the negro slaves she purchased additional land with the proceeds, ably looking after their business interests. They were members of the Missionary Baptist church and he was also a member of the Grange, while his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. He died on the 18th of March, 1901, and Mrs. Young's demise occurred on the 6th of November, 1916. They became the parents of ten children, of whom eight reached mature years, and five of the family are living, namely: William O., of this review; Edward, who is living retired in Bentonville; Mrs. Fannie Britten, a widow residing in Pope county, Arkansas; Clinton, who is a well known farmer of Grove, Oklahoma; and Ethel, who is connected with a laundry at Muskogee, Oklahoma. The paternal grandfather, Alexander C. Young, was a native of Tennessee and in 1838 removed to Washington county, Arkansas, while four years later he arrived in Benton county, casting in his lot with the pioneer settlers of this section and becoming the owner of the land on which the eastern part of Bentonville is now located. During the Civil war he went to Texas and his death occurred in that state. The maternal grandparents were natives of Kentucky.

In the district schools of Benton county, William O. Young acquired his education, later attending high school at Ralley Hill and at Pea Ridge, Arkansas. In 1887 he began reading law, borrowing books, which he studied at home, while at the same time he engaged in teaching school, devoting twelve years to that profession and proving very successful as an educator. In 1896 he was called to public office, being elected clerk of the circuit court and continuing to fill that position for a period of four years. He was admitted to the bar in 1901 and has since followed his profession, conducting his interests independently during the greater portion of the time. He has made steady advancement in his profession as he has proven his ability to cope with the intricate problems of the law and to arrive at clear deductions from the facts at hand. His mind is analytical and logical in its trend and in his presentation of a case he is always fortified by a comprehensive understanding of the legal principles applicable thereto. His list of clients is an extensive one and he has been connected with much important litigation tried in the courts of the district. He is the owner of the home farm in Benton county but his time and attention are concentrated upon his professional interests.

Mr. Young was married on the 31st of December, 1899, to Miss Lena Hinman, a native of Missouri and a daughter of George Hinman, who came to this state about 1894, taking up his residence on a farm in Benton county, where he died in 1906. Mr. and Mrs. John Young have become the parents of two children: William Owen, who graduates from Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee in 1922; and Marjorie, a pupil in the eighth grade of the public schools.

Mr. Young is a stanch democrat in his political views and in 1915 was chosen to represent his district in the state legislature, where he made a most creditable record, carefully studying the questions which came up for settlement and being instrumental in securing the passage of much beneficial legislation. He has always been an ardent advocate of the cause of temperance and was one of fifty-three members of the house who signed the prohibition bill. He has never sought nor desired the honors and emoluments of office and was elected without his consent. Mr. Young's services have been employed to assist in defeating the plans of the supporters of the good roads movement and owing to his stand in this connection he has as his opponents many of the leading law firms in this part of the state. His sympathies have at all times been with the common people and he has ever been fearless in defense of what his conscience and judgment sanction as the right. He is an earnest member of the Baptist church and fraternally is identified with the Knights of Pythias. Early recognizing the fact that industry and perseverance must constitute elements in success, along those lines he has labored for advancement and his talents, natural and acquired, have brought him to a creditable position as a representative of the Benton county bar.

R. L. HOPKINS, M. D.

Dr. R. L. Hopkins, a prominent physician and surgeon of De Queen, where he has practiced continuously during the past fifteen years, is a native son of Sevier county, his birth having occurred near Lebanon, this state, on the 12th of March, 1881. He was reared to manhood on the home farm and following the completion of his high school course prepared for a professional career as a student in the medical department of the University of Nashville at Nashville, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1906. Three years later he pursued postgraduate work in the Cook County Hospital of Chicago. Since first taking up the active work of the medical profession he has remained continuously at De Queen and has been accorded an extensive and lucrative practice, for he is thoroughly conversant with the most advanced principles of the medical science and his efforts have been attended with most gratifying results. In April, 1920, he and Dr. Archer established and opened the De Queen Hospital, which is equipped throughout along modern lines and where the most scientific treatment and care is given the sick and suffering. He belongs to both the Sevier County Medical Society and the Arkansas State Medical Society. Aside from his professional interests, Dr. Hopkins owns farm lands which return to him a good annual income.

In early manhood Dr. Hopkins was united in marriage to Miss Ollie Louise Carver and they enjoy an enviable social position in the community in which they make their home. At the time of the World war the Doctor was stationed at Camp Taylor, having been commissioned a first lieutenant on the 1st of September, 1918. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and exemplifies in his life the beneficent teachings and purposes of the craft. He has always resided in Sevier county, where the circle of his friends is almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintance.

EDWARD LEE WATSON, D. D. S.

Dr. Edward Lee Watson, engaged in the practice of dentistry in Camden, was born in New London, Union county, Arkansas, October 21, 1870. His father, John B. Watson, who departed this life in 1903, at the age of sixty years, was a native of Mississippi and by occupation was a merchant at Morobay. He served for four years through the Civil war, enlisting when a youth of but sixteen years and going to the front as a private in the Sixth Arkansas Infantry. In that way he rendered active aid to the cause through the four years of conflict. He came of Irish ancestry. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Bella Gill, was born in Union county, Arkansas, and is now living at the age of seventy-four years. Her father was one of the pioneer settlers of Union county, her people coming to this state from Alabama, while the ancestral line can be traced back through several generations in America. Mr. and Mrs. Watson, however, were married in Union county, Arkansas, and they became parents of a family of eight children.

Dr. Edward Lee Watson, the second in order of birth in the family, acquired a high school education in this state and afterward began preparation for a professional career by entering the Marion Sims Dental College, now the St. Louis Dental College, from which he was graduated in 1900 with the D. D. S. degree. He then located for the practice of his profession at Fordyce, Arkansas, where he remained for two years. In August, 1902, he came to Camden to practice and has here remained continuously to the present time. He is a stockholder in the Edgar Lumber Company at Wesson, Arkansas, also a stockholder in the Camden Ice & Coal Company and is the secretary and treasurer of the Camden Foundry & Machine Shop. Thus he has extended his connections to various business enterprises which are important factors in the commercial and industrial growth and development of the city.

In Camden, on the 16th of March, 1916, Dr. Watson was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Blake, a daughter of John M. Blake of Camden. Dr. Watson is the father of a daughter, Nancy Elizabeth, now ten years of age, who was born of his first marriage to Edith Octavia Rainwater, whom he wedded September 4, 1904, and who died January 27, 1912.

In his political views Dr. Watson is a democrat but has never been an office seeker. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and his religious faith is manifest in his membership in the Methodist church, in which he is serving on the board of stewards. His interests and activities have been directed along those lines which have to do with the welfare, progress and upbuilding of the community.

ROBERT R. RICE.

One of the conspicuous figures in connection with progressive thought and action in the state of Arkansas is Robert R. Rice of Varner, who has been one of the leaders in the movement that has resulted in the building of the Arkansas-Louisiana highway, a thoroughfare one hundred and fifty-three miles in length, with hard surface road and recognized as one of the finest boulevards in the state. He was equally active in the completion of the levees on the Mississippi that insures the delta district from overflow and in the building of a vast drainage system for the five counties comprising the delta district of southeastern Arkansas, thereby reclaiming the swamp lands and making the district a rival to the famous fertile valley of the Nile. The labors of Mr. Rice in this connection well entitle him to the lasting gratitude and honor of his fellow citizens. Actuated by a most progressive spirit he has always employed the most practical methods in the attainment of high ideals and his labors have indeed been far-reaching and resultant.

Robert R. Rice was born in the town of Varner, Lincoln county, Arkansas, May 30, 1886, and is a son of Robert R. and Medora S. (Varner) Rice, both of whom were also natives of Lincoln county. The father was born at what was known in those days as Auburn on the Arkansas river, while the mother's birth occurred in Varner, the town founded by her father, William Felix Varner, who came to this state from Georgia about 1846. The grandfather in the paternal line was Robert R. Rice, who arrived in Lincoln county, Arkansas, from Nashville, Tennessee, in the year 1844. The Rice, the Varner and the Douglas families were among the earliest of the pioneer families who settled in this section of the state, casting in their lot here when Indians were still numerous and when deer and bears and other wild animals were to be found in considerable number. They began the task of redeeming the country from the wilderness and their influence was a potent element in the progress and upbuilding of this section of the state. Robert R. Rice, the grandfather, at one time conducted the only store between Pine Bluff and Old Napoleon on the Arkansas river. Both he and William Felix Varner acquired large plantations and wielded a wide influence throughout the district, their opinions and activities constituting contributing features in the development, progress and politics of the state. Robert R. Rice (II), the father of him whose name introduces this review, served in young manhood as secretary to Captain Paul Sherley, a fleet captain with the Pacific squadron of the United States navy. He acted in that capacity for three years and subsequently returned to Arkansas, establishing his home at Varner, where he remained to the time of his death. He was known throughout the countryside as a lover and advocate of clean sport and maintained a pack of hounds for hunting bears and deer. His pack numbered one hundred or more and he was one of the best known hunters of the country. He also followed racing for many years, owning a splendid string of race horses, including some of the most noted racing stock on the American turf—Wax Taper, Chimes, W. B. Gates, Revenue, Ritful and Francis Pape. The last mentioned horse won a Mexican derby and W. B. Gates won more races than any other horse ever won on the American turf, coming out first in one hundred and five different races. Moreover, Wax Taper was considered the greatest horse on the turf of his day. While Robert R. Rice (II) was a notable sportsman, he was also the foremost merchant and planter of Lincoln county for many years. He was a man of big caliber, his influence being due to the fact that men knew and trusted him and that his devotion to the public interests qualified him for leadership. He never sought nor desired public preferment, although he served for a short time as sheriff of Lincoln county, succeeding his brother, Clay Rice, accepting the position, however, only for the general good of the community. He was an intimate friend of Governor Jeff Davis and was always active in political matters. A man of broad vision, he fully met the responsibilities and opportunities of the state and was always accounted a man among men. When he expressed an opinion and felt that he was right he backed it to the limit. He was frequently heard to say that the greatest satisfaction his money gave him was in giving his friends pleasure and making his enemies miserable. No one ever questioned his position upon any vital problem, as his views were most fearlessly expressed. He died January 8, 1918, and thus passed from the scene of earthly activities one who had long been an outstanding figure in the state.

His son and namesake, Robert R. Rice (III), was educated in the public schools of Memphis and in the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee. He also pursued a business course in Memphis, Tennessee, and in 1904 he became identified with his father in the conduct of his extensive mercantile and agricultural interests. About 1912 the management of the business devolved upon him. More and more the responsibilities had been shifted to his shoulders and since that time he has had charge of large and important interests. He is today one of the most conspicuous figures in the delta district of Arkansas and in the last five years he has given at least half of his time to the promotion of the vast drainage, levee and public highway projects, which are now in course of building, have been completed, or are fast nearing completion. The three great projects will constitute a source of the greatest benefit to five counties when finished and will represent the expenditure of from twelve to fourteen million dollars. Mr. Rice owns and cultivates five thousand acres of land, raising about a thousand bales of cotton annually and handling through his mercantile agency an additional five thousand bales each year. He employs about one hundred and seventy-five negro families on his farm and through his department stores he conducts an extensive mercantile business.

Mr. Rice is a member of the board of commissioners of the southeastern Arkansas levee district and also a member of the board of commissioners of the Grady drainage district. He is serving on the board of the Cummings drainage district and the Arkansas-Louisiana highway and the Arkansas-Louisiana Tourist Way Association. It would be difficult to find a man who is more thoroughly, broadly, actively and helpfully interested in public progress in the state than Robert R. Rice, nor one whose labors have been more effective and helpful, meeting not only present-day conditions but future demands for larger public service of this character. Mr. Rice has also figured prominently in political circles. For several years he acted as chairman of the democratic county central committee and is also a member of the state central committee, doing much to shape the policy and promote the success of the party in the state.

On the 12th of October, 1909, Mr. Rice was married to Miss Mary M. Henderson of Cleveland, Ohio, and they have become parents of four children: Mary Sherley, Robert R. (IV), Dorothy V. and Margaret H. The palatial southern home, over which Mrs. Rice presides, is noted for its warm-hearted and characteristically southern hospitality and is the center of many delightful social functions. Mr. Rice has found his greatest happiness in providing for the welfare and comfort of his family and in entertaining his friends—who are legion—at his own fireside. Mr. Rice is a member of the Masonic order, being a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner. As a representative of one of the oldest of the pioneer families of the state his name deserves a place on the pages of Arkansas' history, but more from the fact that he has been intimately associated in many of those interests which have made for social, intellectual, civic and moral progress. He is a man of distinction in Arkansas, not by reason of any self-seeking but because the value of his service has been so evident and because of the recognition of his power in planning, projecting and accomplishing results, the value of which can scarcely be overestimated.

HENRY A. McCANTS.

Henry A. McCants, president of the First National Bank of Lewisville, has justly won the proud American title of a self-made man. His life record is the story of earnest endeavor intelligently directed. There have been no spectacular phases or chapters in his whole life history, but determination and energy have placed him in a creditable position among the prominent and prosperous business men of the city in which he makes his home. Mr. McCants was born in Cokesbury, South Carolina,

May 19, 1852. His father left that place about 1860 and removed to Lafayette county, Arkansas, where he settled on a farm. Henry A. McCants accordingly was reared on the home farm in the Red River valley. His educational opportunities were very limited, for the Civil war caused schools largely to be closed and it was through that period that Mr. McCants was of school age and ordinarily would have been pursuing his studies. He seems to have made excellent use of his opportunities, however, and is today a well informed man of sound judgment and wide practical knowledge. He remained with his father until eighteen years of age and raised one crop on his father's farm. He attended the schools of Lewisville when opportunity offered and at the age of nineteen years began clerking in a store, following that pursuit for seven years. Later he established a general store on the Red river at Sentells Landing and conducted it successfully for five years. He next went to Garland, where he conducted a store for a period of eleven years and then sold out, removing to Lewisville, where he engaged in merchandising for three years. At the end of that time he went to Louisiana, where he operated a sawmill for four years, after which he returned to Lewisville, although still owning an interest in the sawmill in Louisiana. It was about the year 1911 that he became the president of the First National Bank and has since remained at the head of this institution, which he has made one of the strong and thoroughly reliable moneyed concerns of the county. He follows progressive methods of banking and at the same time a safe conservatism that carefully guards the interests of depositors and makes for the stability and success of the bank. In addition to his other interests Mr. McCants owns two thousand acres of land on the Red river, of which six hundred acres is under cultivation and under his direct supervision. He has a number of tenants on his land but wisely supervises all the work of the farm. He is likewise interested in the Texarkana Cotton Oil & Fertilizer Company and his cooperation is always regarded as a valuable asset in the wise and successful management of business affairs.

Mr. McCants has never married but has reared his sister's four children. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and was secretary of the local lodge for ten years. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and for two terms he filled the office of mayor of Lewisville. He also served on the city council and as a member of the school board and is interested in all those projects which have to do with the city's development and steady improvement, heartily endorsing every plan to promote civic virtue and civic pride. He was one of the promoters of levee district, No. 2, and has been a director ever since its charter was issued. He was also president of the levee district good roads commission for Lafayette county.

CECIL L. THOMPSON

Cecil L. Thompson, mayor of Eudora, and since 1919 manager of the Eudora branch of the Dermott Grocery Company, was born in Avon, Illinois, on the 13th of February, 1883. His father, J. B. Thompson, was born and reared in Illinois and in later life removed to Newton, Kansas, where for many years he was successfully engaged in the livery and transfer business. He was one of the representative citizens of that community and his demise in 1912, at the age of fifty-six years, came as a severe shock to his many friends in Newton. In Stuart, Iowa, in 1876, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage to Miss Anna M. Thompson, a native of Pennsylvania. She survives her husband and is making her home in Newton, at the age of sixty-seven years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson one child was born, Cecil L., whose name initiates this review.

In the acquirement of an education, Cecil L. Thompson attended the public schools of Newton and graduated from the high school there in 1902, having acquired a literary education equivalent to a college course. Subsequently he became a student in the University of Toronto, Toronto, Canada, and was graduated from that institution with the V. S. degree in 1905. For the following year he engaged in practice as a veterinary surgeon in Newton, Kansas, and then finding that profession not entirely to his liking, he removed to Winfield, where he engaged in the milling business on his own account. He was active along that line until in 1908, when fire destroyed his property, and he subsequently became associated with the Corno Mills Company of St. Louis in the capacity of traveling salesman, his territory being Arkansas. In 1912 he severed his connection with that company and accepted a position with the Dermott Grocery Company of Dermott, having charge of the shipping office for a period of one and one-half years. He then went on the road as traveling salesman for that concern, covering Arkansas and Louisiana, being active in that connection until 1917, when he was made manager of the Eudora branch of the company. Mr. Thompson is well fitted for the duties devolving upon him in this capacity and since taking over the position has improved and developed this branch until it is now the largest of all branches of the company. This branch comprises the southeastern part of Arkansas and Louisiana and last year, the gross business amounted to over one million dollars. Mr. Thompson is a director in the Southern Motor Company of Dermott, Arkansas, and in 1921 was called to public office, being elected mayor of Eudora. He is giving to the city a businesslike administration and is lending his influence to every movement he deems essential in the upbuilding of the general welfare.

At Oak Grove, Louisiana, on the 28th of February, 1915, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Thompson to Miss Willie M. Duke, a daughter of W. M. Duke, a pioneer settler in that state. They have an adopted daughter, Dolores Thompson, who is eight years of age and is attending the public schools of Eudora.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Presbyterian church and fraternally Mr. Thompson is identified with the Elks, holding membership in Lodge No. 706, of Newton, Kansas. During the World war he put all person interests aside and gave generously of his time and money in serving the government. Throughout the period he was food administrator of Chicot county. In every relation of life—business, political, social and fraternal—he has made many friends who appreciate his true personal worth, and he is readily conceded one of Eudora's most representative and public-spirited citizens.

C. EARL LEININGER.

C. Earl Leininger is the president of the Fort Smith Garment Company and one of the most enterprising and progressive of the younger business men of the city. He is today in control of one of the important productive industries of Fort Smith and his careful management, sound judgment and unfaltering industry are making of the concern one of the most profitable interests in this part of the state. His business, too, is of a character that contributes to the commercial development and general prosperity of the city, as well as to individual success. Mr. Leininger was born in Jackson Center, Ohio, in 1883, a son of J. A. Leininger, who for many years resided in the Buckeye state. He there became the head of a hoop and stave factory and occupied that important and responsible position for fifteen years. In 1915 he turned his attention to the manufacture of overalls, conducting the business in Celina, Ohio, until 1911, when he removed to Fort Smith and here established a plant, organizing the Fort Smith Garment Company in the month of April. This partnership was absorbed in 1918 by the corporation of the same with the following officers: J. A. Leininger, president; Sam Harper, vice president; R. H. Clinehaus, secretary; and I. H. Nakdimen, treasurer. Mr. Leininger placed the business upon a substantial basis but lived to enjoy the success for only a brief period for he died in October, 1918.

C. Earl Leininger was reared and educated in Ohio and received his business training under his father's direction. He came to Fort Smith at the time of the establishment of the Fort Smith Garment Company and at his father's death succeeded to the presidency of the business, which is the manufacture and wholesale distribution of boys' and men's overalls and dress pants. The company occupies a three-story building, fifty by one hundred and thirty-seven feet, and their business in normal times necessitates the employment of one hundred people, while the annual production nets a sale from three hundred and fifty to four hundred thousand dollars. Since the establishment and incorporation of the business twenty-five extra machines have been installed in the pants factory, making a total of 90 machines. The pants factory and cutting rooms are located on the third floor, while the overall factory occupies the second floor and all manufactured stock and the offices are situated on the first floor, while the basement is used for the storage of piece goods and trimmings. While the business was established at Fort Smith under a partnership relation they soon decided to increase the capital stock and incorporate and for this reason took others into the firm. A thriving business has been carried on under normal times and the enterprise is regarded as one of the important productive interests of the city. At the death of his father, Mr. Leininger of this review became president as well as manager of the factory, while his brother-in-law, R. H. Clinehaus, is the secretary of the company and also acts as office manager. There were four children in the father's family, one of whom, Ray Leininger, financially interested in the business, served in the navy during the World war.

In 1907 C. Earl Leininger was united in marriage to Miss Mabelle Clinehaus, a sister of R. H. Clinehaus. Their children are: Roland, who was born in Ohio; and Martha, who was born in Arkansas. Mr. Leininger belongs to the Rotary Club, which establishes his position as one of the representative business men of the city. Fraternally he is a Mason and has taken the Scottish Rite degrees. Life is to him purposeful and its opportunities he has eagerly utilized, making for himself a prominent position in the manufacturing circles of the southwest. His entire course is marked by a steady progression that indicates a mastery over self and a thorough understanding of the situations which make up his environment and his life's contacts and experiences.

WILLIAM JESSE HERRING.

William Jesse Herring, conducting a stocks and bond brokerage business in Little Rock, was born August 3, 1884, in Dublin, Arkansas. He has always resided in this state and has been a factor in its steady development and progress, by reason of the support which he has given to all measures relative to the public good of the community in which he has made his home. He is a son of F. Clayton and Nannie (Hall) Herring, who are now residents of Paris, Arkansas. The father was born in Mississippi in 1856 and the mother was born in Alabama in 1860 and they were married in the former state in the year 1880. The father has devoted his life to farming and merchandising and has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party. He and his wife have a family of five sons and five daughters and theirs is a notable record, inasmuch as the family circle yet remains unbroken by the hand of death.

After attending the graded schools of his native town, William J. Herring became a student in a business college in Little Rock. He took up his abode in this city in 1904, when twenty years of age, and here entered the real estate and bond business, in which he has continued, covering a period of seventeen years, during which time he has made steady progress in the development of his business affairs. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with the real estate market, has wide knowledge of commercial paper and has been able wisely to direct the investments of his clients or promote their real estate transfers for them. His patronage is now extensive and he enjoys an enviable reputation for the reliability of his business and his progressiveness in all that he undertakes.

Mr. Herring was married at Springfield, Missouri, on the 3rd of September, 1910, Miss Mae Gladden becoming his wife. She was born in that city in 1890 and was graduated from the high school there. She has become the mother of two sons: Robert Wilbur, born June 15, 1912; and Eugene Melvin, born May 29, 1915. Both Mr. and Mrs. Herring are members of the Pulaski Heights Baptist church and his political endorsement is given to the democratic party. He has never been a club man, although appreciative of the social amenities of life. His leisure outside of business is devoted to his home and friends and the circle of his acquaintance is an extensive one. His success in business has been achieved largely through the fact that he has continued in the same line in which he embarked in young manhood, never dissipating his energies over a wide field. His thoroughness and persistency have won him advancement as the years have gone by and he is today one of the leading stocks and bond brokers of the capital city.

HENRY P. LYMAN.

Henry P. Lyman comes of an ancestry which is distinctively American in both the lineal and collateral lines and his entire career in every relation of life has marked him one hundred per cent American. Fort Smith numbers him among her native sons and his position in the regard of his fellow townsmen is a respected one by reason of worthy achievement. He was born March 25, 1890, a son of George H. Lyman, who is mentioned at length on another page of this work. The ancestry is traced back to Richard Lyman, who came to the new world on the good ship Lion in 1631, the Winthropes and the celebrated Indian apostle Eliot being also passengers on that little sailing vessel, which bore its precious cargo of colonists to the new world. Richard Lyman became one of the founders of Hartford, Connecticut, and his name is inscribed on a stone column erected to the pioneer settlers of the city in the Centre church there and his will was the first to be recorded. Successive generations of the family lived in New Hampshire and Vermont and finally a removal was made by the grandfather of Henry P. Lyman from Williston, Vermont, to Sangamon county, Illinois, where his father, George H. Lyman, was reared, eventually becoming a resident of Fort Smith and one of the most prominent business men of the city.

Henry P. Lyman obtained his education in the schools of Fort Smith, passing through consecutive grades to his graduation from the high school in 1907. He later attended the University of Illinois, where he studied economics, geology and law, specializing along those lines in preparation for his life work. He was a youth of nineteen years when he became actively identified with the business that had been established by his father. The latter's health began to fail and more and more largely the duties and responsibilities connected with the management of the business devolved upon the son. The father had first organized the Lyman Abstract Company and, seeing further possibilities for the expansion of his activities, he founded the Lyman Real Estate Company. A logical step was taken when he became one of the active directors of the Home Mutual Building & Loan Association and of all these companies he was the secretary and active manager; but increasing illness caused him to more and more largely put aside the work connected therewith and this was taken up by the son, who through these connections has been closely identified with the development of the city. The companies with which he is identified have been instrumental in the building of sixteen hundred homes in Fort Smith and have provided many others with the means whereby to purchase property, so that the name of Lyman figures prominently upon the pages of history in connection with Fort Smith's substantial growth and improvement. Henry P. Lyman was also one of the early organizers of the gas companies here and he is known to the general public through his contributed articles to financial weeklies in the east.

On the 4th of October, 1917, Mr. Lyman was married to Miss Ruth Corry of Montpelier, Vermont, a daughter of Frank M. Corry. Mr. Lyman is prominent in civic connections and there is no man who labors more effectively, earnestly and enthusiastically for the benefit and upbuilding of Fort Smith. He was one of the founders of the Noon Civics Club, belongs to the Business Men's Club and also to the Country Club. During the World war he volunteered his services on eleven occasions before he was finally accepted. On the 15th of May, 1917, he was first identified with the Sixth Infantry of the Illinois National Guard, enlisting at Springfield, Illinois. Later he was stationed at Headquarters, Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, Recruit Depot, in August, 1918. He was then on duty in the Adjutant General's Department of Washington, D. C., until his discharge December 15, 1918. He was also connected with the Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, Missouri, organizing and appraising Arkansas associations prior to his last enlistment. There is no field of activity which promises benefit for the community, the commonwealth or the country which does not receive his hearty endorsement and support and thus his record is in harmony with that of an honored ancestry which through many generations, from the earliest colonial period to the present, has contributed to the upbuilding, growth and greatness of the nation.

JOSEPH A. FALLIN.

Joseph A. Fallin, now living retired in Fayetteville, was born in the western part of Washington county, Arkansas, December 28, 1855, and is a representative of one of the old Virginia families. His grandfather was Holmes Fallin, who was born in Virginia, whence he removed to Tennessee and afterward to Arkansas. He followed farming, stock raising and the breeding of fast horses in this state, and here he died. His son, Robert R. Fallin, was born in Virginia and came to Arkansas in 1848. He walked from Van Buren to Washington county, where he took up government land, the title to his property being signed by Franklin Pierce, then president of the United States. Not a furrow had been turned nor any improvement made on his place but with charactertistic engery he began its development and converted it into a rich and productive field. He served with the First Arkansas Cavalry throughout the Civil war and was in the battle of Prairie Grove and in the engagement that occurred at Fayetteville. He had filled the office of deputy sheriff prior to the war. In politics he was an active republican, giving unfaltering support to the party but he could not be elected to public office, owing to the strong democratic majority in this state. He held membership in the Christian church and departed this life in that faith in Springfield, Missouri, on the 13th of September, 1890. His remains were interred in the national cemetery of that place. In early manhood he wedded Nancy D. Cabe, who was born in Middle Tennessee, and their marriage was celebrated in that state. Her father was also a native of Tennessee and there spent his life. Mrs. Fallin died February 20, 1906, having for sixteen years survived her husband. They were the parents of six children, five of whom are living: Mary Emily Jane, a resident of Fayetteville; H. L., who is living on a farm near Springfield, Missouri; Docia Virginia, the wife of S. H. Blackmer, who was a Union soldier in the Civil war and is a contractor of Fayetteville; Joseph A., of this review; and Cynthia Elizabeth, the wife of Frank Wolverton, a teacher of Prairie Grove.

Joseph A. Fallin received only such educational opportunties as the common schools of the neighborhood afforded, but he has always been a broad reader and deep thinker and has learned many valuable lessons in the school of experience. Indeed, he is today a better informed man than many who have had school advantages superior to those which he enjoyed. He started out in the business world as a helper in a store, in which he was employed for two years. He removed from Springfield, Missouri, to Fayetteville, Arkansas, in 1870, and here he obtained employment in a brickyard, working three summers. He next rented a farm which he cultivated from 1874 until 1890, at which time he opened a store at Hickory Barron, Missouri, where he continued in business for fifteen months. On selling out his store he made investment in land in Dallas county, Missouri, but continued on that farm for only a brief period, after which he located at Springfield, Missouri, and there bought and sold live stock. He also conducted a still house for three seasons near Fayetteville before going to Missouri and at one time was proprietor of a drug store at Powell during the building of the railroad. In the year 1892 he again took up his abode in the vicinity of Fayetteville and remained on his farm until 1904, when he established his home in the city. Here he engaged in the real estate business and secured a good clientage in that connection. He has owned much valuable property in Fayetteville but has sold most of it now. His business affairs have been wisely, carefully and successfully managed and he is now the possessor of a substantial competence, sufficient to supply him with all of the comforts and some of the luxuries of life.

On the 11th of November, 1880, Mr. Fallin was married to Miss Sophronia Combs, who was born five miles south of Fayetteville, a daughter of Joe and Permelia Combs, who were natives of North Carolina and of Izard county, Arkansas, respectively. They were parents of five children, of whom three are living, the first two being twins. These are Mrs. Fallin and Caldonia. They were born March 11, 1854, and the latter married Rutherford Wagner, who is a county sheriff in Oklahoma. M. M. Combs is a minister of the Christian church, preaching in western Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Fallin have become parents of the following children: Robert E., who is president of the Mid West Oil Company of Texas and also president of the Alma Leasing Company of Texas; W. C., engaged in the real estate business in Fayetteville; C. A., also a real estate dealer of Fayetteville; Emma C., who was the wife of William Algire, a contractor of Kansas City, Missouri, and who died February 7, 1910; Gertrude A., the wife of Stewart Cook of Fayetteville, now employed at Eason's mill; and Joel H., who is engaged in the oil business with his brother in Texas. He was a member of the Boy Scouts at twelve years of age and went to the Mexican border in military duty when a youth of eighteen. He has served as a member of the National Guard and entering the army upon America's advent into the World war, he was sent to Camp Pike and afterward to Camp Beauregard, while later he was transferred to Camp Mills and thence sailed for France, where he remained for ten months, being discharged from the army July 1, 1919.

Mr. Fallin is prominent in Masonic circles, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite. He belongs to the Anti-Horse-Thief Association, of which he is past master. In politics he has long been a republican and at one time was candidate for the office of sheriff, leading his ticket, but was not elected on account of the strong democratic majority here. Mr. Fallin's life record is most creditable. When he was married he had but fifteen dollars and had incurred an indebtedness of thirty-five dollars. He had but ten cents when he began housekeeping. The first one hundred dollars which he managed to earn served as the foundation on which he has built his later fortune. When he had managed to save that amount he quit working for others and began working for himself and as the years have passed he has won substantial success. For a number of years he has lived retired, enjoying the fruits of his former toil and his life record should serve to encourage and inspire others, constituting a splendid example which the young may follow and if they pursue the course that Mr. Fallin has they will, like him, reach the goal of prosperity.

JOE E. CHAMBERLAIN.

For a third of a century Joe E. Chamberlain has been engaged in the drug business at Malvern and has enjoyed a substantial measure of success throughout the period. He possesses those qualities which for want of a better term have been called commercial sense. In other words, he realizes the value of industry and perseverance and is quick to recognize his opportunity or any legitimate chance for advancement in business affairs. Mr. Chamberlain has spent his life in Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Hot Spring county, May 17, 1857. His father, William P. Chamberlain, was born in North Carolina in the year 1800 and removed to this state in 1849. His second wife, who bore the maiden name of Jennie Kinnick, was also a native of North Carolina, born in the year 1818, and she came to Arkansas in 1849. His first wife's maiden name was Ewell, and they became parents of ten children. William P. Chamberlain was a wheelwright by trade and he also followed the occupation of farming, cultivating his land in ante-bellum days with the aid of the slaves which he owned. He was killed in 1863 by the jayhawkers and Indians, who scalped him near his home, there being Indians with that division of military troops. The soldiers took everything the family had, including all provisions. There was one daughter in the family, Martha, who died in Hot Springs in the year 1914.

Joe E. Chamberlain was reared at Social Hill. He was only six years of age when his father died and he was taken into the family of Judge F. A. Ward, with whom he remained until the death of his friend and foster father in 1879. He had the advantages offered by the Social Hill school and was for a time under the instruction of Professor J. C. Shipp. In early manhood Mr. Chamberlain engaged in teaching school for two years and in 1884 was elected to the office of circuit clerk, in which position he served so creditably during his first term that he was reelected, retiring from the office as he had entered it—with the confidence and good will of all concerned. He afterward purchased the Roberson & Stone drug store at Malvern, of which he became owner in November, 1888. He has since been proprietor of this establishment and has long been accounted one of the foremost merchants of the city. His store is well appointed and tasteful in its arrangements and the energy and enterprise which Mr. Chamberlain has displayed in the management of his business has secured for him a liberal patronage. Connected with the mercantile interests of the city for a third of a century, no history of Malvern would be complete without extended reference to him.

On the 12th of October, 1886, was celebrated the marriage of Joe E. Chamberlain and Miss Nannie Strong and they have become parents of five sons: Roy, now thirty-two years of age, is with the C. J. Lincoln Company of Little Rock; Joseph E., died at the age of twenty-two years; Maurice S., twenty-six years of age, is engaged in the oil business in Louisiana. Warren W., twenty-one years of age, is studying medicine in the medical department of the University of Arkansas; James M., nineteen years of age, is attending Henderson-Brown College at Arkadelphia.

Mr. Chamberlain is a public-spirited citizen who has done faithful service for his community along many lines of general progress and improvement. For eighteen years he served as a member of the school board and did everything in his power to advance the cause of education and promote the standard of the schools. He has served as a member of the city council and as city treasurer and his official record is an irreproachable one, characterized ever by the utmost fidelity to duty. His life has been cast in harmony with his profession as a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and his contribution to the material, intellectual and moral welfare of the community has been of substantial worth.

WILLIAM CHRISTIAN REITZAMMER.

William Christian Reitzammer, circuit clerk of Desha county, was born in Louisville, Kentucky, on the 9th of October, 1880. His father, John George Reitzammer, is now living in Arkansas City. He came to Arkansas from Louisville in 1880 and for many years engaged in the grocery and bakery business, achieving more than substantial success. He is now living retired in Arkansas City, where he has many friends who appreciate his true personal worth and many sterling characteristics. For many generations the Reitzammer family have lived in America. John G. Reitzammer married Miss Anna Reinhardt of Louisville, Kentucky, the ceremony being performed in that city. To their union six boys and two girls were born. One girl is deceased. William Christian, whose name introduces this review, was the third in order of birth.

In the acquirements of an education William Christian Reitzammer attended the common schools of Arkansas City, receiving the equivalent of a grammer school education. At the age of seventeen years he became deputy postmaster at Arkansas City and previous to accepting that position he had clerked one year in a dry goods store. For thirteen years he was in the post office, practically acting as postmaster but in the early part of the year 1910, he became associated with the Kimball Lacy Lumber Company, in the capacity of bookkeeper. He remained in the employ of that concern until November of that year, and in 1911 was elected to his present office of circuit clerk of Desha county, taking over the duties of that office in 1912. He has since been active in that official capacity, discharging the duties of that office to the best of his ability. Mr. Reitzammer has never run against opposition in a political way except in 1912, when he defeated his opponent by a substantial majority.

On the 13th of November, 1905, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Reitzammer to Miss Beulah Lee, the ceremony being performed at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. McNeely, in Memphis, Tennessee. To their union one daughter has been born, Beulah Lee, who is thirteen years of age, and a student in the public schools of Arkansas City.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Episcopal church, to the support of which they are generous contributors. Fraternally Mr. Reitzammer is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Riverton Lodge, No. 296, A. F. & A. M. of Arkansas City, Arkansas; Albert Pike Consistory of Little Rock; Valley Chapter, No. 128, Royal Arch Masons of McGehee; and Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Pine Bluff. He is a Scottish Rite Mason. Mr. Reitzammer is now serving as secretary of the local blue lodge, which office he has held previously, and he is past worshipful master of the A. F. & A. M. lodge. He is a stanch advocate of education and for the past two years has been president of the school board, of which body he has been a member since 1900. During the World war Mr. Reitzammer was on the publicity committee in behalf of Liberty Loans and Thrift Stamp sales and he gave generously of his time and money in promoting the government's interests. Mr. Reitzammer is rightly entitled to the proud American title of self-made man, for the success he is now enjoying is the result of his own intelligently directed efforts, laudable ambition and stanch determination. He is one of Arkansas City's most representative and public-spirited citizens and has won the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen.

ALBERT GALLATIN McGILL, M. D.

Dr. Albert Gallatin McGill, physician and surgeon of Little Rock, is a representative of one of the old southern families of Scotch lineage. The immigrant ancestor came from Scotland about 1735, seeking religious liberty in the new world. He made the voyage with a company who sought in the freedom of the western continent the opportunity to worship according to the dictates of their consciences. The great-grandfather of Dr. McGill in the paternal line was born in South Carolina, where he continued to reside until called from this life. He served as a soldier of the colonial forces in the Revolutionary war, joining the army when but fifteen years of age and participating in a number of the hotly contested engagements which led up to the final victory that crowned the American arms. His son, Minto W. McGill, grandfather of Dr. McGill, was born in the Williamsburg district of South Carolina in 1827 and he came to Arkansas about 1856, settling in Hempstead county. He was a planter and he, too, had a military record, having served with the Confederate army throughout the Civil war. His death occurred in Camden, Arkansas, in 1899.

Dr. McGill was born at Tate's Bluff, Ouachita county, Arkansas, January 2, 1881, a son of Minto Witherspoon and Eliza Ann Josephine (Tate) McGill. The father was born in Williamsburg county, South Carolina, in 1853 and now resides at Tate's Bluff, Arkansas. He has devoted his life to farming and merchandising and he has always been a stalwart advocate of democratic principles. On the 5th of December, 1878, at Camden, Arkansas, he married Eliza Ann Josephine Tate, who was born at Tate's Bluff, June 2, 1861. They became parents of eleven sons and five daughters and of this large family eight sons and three daughters are living. Five sons and two daughters have graduated from the Arkansas State University and another son and daughter are now students in that institution.

Dr. McGill pursued his early education in the public schools of Camden, Arkansas, and was there graduated from the high school with the class of 1902. Soon after the completion of his high school course he decided upon the practice of medicine as a life work and entered the Tulane Medical College at New Orleans, where he was graduated with the class of 1906. He afterward did postgraduate work in Baltimore, Maryland; Chicago, Illinois; Rochester, Minnesota; and at Battle Creek, Michigan; and thus has constantly broadened his knowledge and promoted his efficiency. He today specializes as a radium, X-ray and clinical pathologist and became an eminent physician in the profession along those lines. He belongs to the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Southern Medical Association and the American X-Ray Society.

At Chidester, Arkansas, on the 5th of May, 1909, Dr. McGill was married to Miss Margaret Pharr, who was born at Chidester and was educated in the Cumberland College at Clarksville, Arkansas. She is a daughter of Joseph S. and Matilda (Webb) Pharr, both natives of Arkansas and now residents of Little Rock. Dr. and Mrs. McGill have become parents of three children: Margaret Pharr, Bernice Elizabeth and Albert G. The last named was born March 20, 1918. Dr. McGill and his wife hold membership in the First Presbyterian church and are interested in all of those forces which make for the uplift of the individual and the benefit of the community at large. He is a Mason of high rank, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, the Knight Templar degree of the York Rite and he has also crossed the sands of the desert with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. His political support is given the democratic party, but he has never sought nor desired office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his constantly increasing professional duties and the character of his practice establishes him as one of the capable physicians of the city.

CHARLES W. McKAY.

The legal profession of Columbia county finds a worthy representative in Charles W. McKay, who was born six miles east of Magnolia on the 20th of February, 1872. He is of Scotch ancestry and a son of William O. and Adeline (Shaddock) McKay. For some forty years the father was engaged in educational work, teaching in the Columbia county schools and he was active in that connection at the time of his demise in 1898, at the age of sixty-two years. He was at that time a resident of Magnolia. Mr. McKay was born in South Carolina, while his wife was born in Dallas county, this state, on the 31st of October, 1842. Their marriage was celebrated at Honduras in 1868 and to their union two boys and one girl were born, all of whom are living. Mrs. McKay survives her husband and she is residing in the old home at Magnolia, a beloved and highly respected citizen.

Charles W. McKay, the oldest member of the family, received his education in the public schools of Magnolia and subsequently took up the study of law at home. As the result of his close application and laudable ambition, he was admitted to the bar in 1897, and the following year began practice in Magnolia, where he has remained. He is one of the leading attorneys of the county and has an extensive general practice, handling much important litigation before the courts. Although the greater part of his time is devoted to his professional interests, he is a director in the Farmers & Bankers Trust Company and a director in the Columbia Compress Company.

In Columbia county, on the 11th of February, 1897, occurred the marriage of Mr. McKay to Miss Mary Futch, a native of this county and a daughter of Dave Futch, now deceased. To their union two children have been born: Ora, who is residing at home; and William D., a freshman in Hendrix College at Conway. Both Mr. and Mrs. McKay are consistent members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. McKay has been very successful in his practice and he is held in high regard in Magnolia, both by reason of his professional ability and because of his high standard of citizenship and constant effort to promote the best interests of the town, county and state on every possible occasion.

THOMAS A. HIGHTOWER, M. D.

Dr. Thomas A. Hightower, physician and surgeon of Hot Springs, was born on the state line between Tennessee and Alabama, in the town of Bethel, June 20, 1850, and is a son of James and Lucy (Westmoreland) Hightower, the former a native of Albemarle, Virginia, while the latter was born in Giles county, Tennessee. In young manhood the father made his way down through Kentucky to Tennessee, where he was married and took up his abode, locating just across the line in Limestone county, Alabama. There he engaged in farming.

The son, Dr. Thomas A. Hightower, was educated in the rural schools of Alabama and subsequently took up the study of medicine in the medical department of the University of Tennessee, from which he received his professional degree in the year 1873. He began practice near Courtland, Alabama, and in 1879 came to Arkansas, locating in the village of De View, where he remained in active practice for a quarter of a century. He next removed to the town of McCrory, building the first house in the town following the advent of the railroad there. His practice at that point grew beyond his ability to take care of it individually and he was forced to leave in order to preserve his health, so great were the demands made upon his time and energy. In 1905 he came to Hot Springs, where he has since been located, and here he has followed the practice of his chosen profession with excellent success.

In 1875 Dr. Hightower was married to Miss Emma K. Simpson of Courtland, Alabama, and to them were born six children: Isaac R. residing in El Paso, Texas; James B., a resident of Jonesboro, Arkansas; Katie, who is the wife of Tine Coppage of Jonesboro, this state; Thomas W., living in El Paso, Texas; Gladys, the wife of H. W. Schleicher of Jacksonville, Florida; and Linnie, the wife of Lieutenant C. B.

Quinn of the United States army, now stationed at Atlanta, Georgia. All three of the sons are railroad men. The wife and mother died in 1905, and later the Doctor was married to Mrs. Ella Hollingshead of East Liverpool, Ohio.

Dr. Hightower is a member of Augusta Lodge, No. 45, A. F. & A. M., of Augusta, Arkansas; Augusta Chapter, R. A. M.; and Hudepayne Commandery, No. 1, K. T., of Little Rock, and at all times is found a loyal and faithful follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. He likewise belongs to the First Methodist church and his life in all of its relations is guided by his religious belief. Thus it is that he holds to the highest standards of conduct and is regarded as a most conscientious physician, as a faithful friend and as a loyal and progressive citizen.

HON. LEE SEAMSTER.

Hon. Lee Seamster, a native son of Arkansas, is mayor of Bentonville, and a prominent representative of the Bentonville bar, his ability being attested by the large practice accorded him. He has also taken part in framing the laws of the state and at all times has been actuated by a public-spirited devotion to the general good. He was born in Benton county, September 14, 1888, a son of M. L. and Nancy Jane (Cole) Seamster, both of whom are natives of Missouri, the former born in Schuyler country and the latter in Barry county. They were married in Barry county on the 2d of March, 1871, and in the following year removed to Arkansas, the father purchasing a farm in Benton county, on which he and his wife still reside. They are members of the Missionary Baptist church and in politics he is a stanch democrat. He has been called to public office, serving for a number of years as justice of the peace. To their union nine children were born, namely: John W., who is conducting a bakery at Fayetteville, Arkansas; Marion N., a well known farmer residing at Miami, Oklahoma; Etta, who married A. M. Crouse, a successful agriculturist of Benton county; R. A., who is the proprietor of a leading cafe of Breckenridge, Texas; J. R., a prominent restaurateur of Bentonville; A. S., who is successfully operating a farm at Wareagle, Arkansas; Lee, of this review; Alvin, who acts as a rural mail carrier, making his home on a farm; and Jesse, who is connected with the Ferguson Lumber Company of Bentonville. The paternal grandfather, the Rev. Williamson Seamster, was a well known minister of the Baptist church, devoting his life to missionary work. The maternal grandfather, Isaac Newton Cole, at one time resided in North Carolina, going from that state to Missouri with Cherokee Indians, and there he continued to make his home during the remainder of his life.

In the public schools of Benton county Mr. Seamster acquired his education and when nineteen years of age he became a rural mail carrier, engaging in that work for a period of six years. He had previously taught school for two years and while occupied with his duties as mail carrier he took up the study of law under the tutelage of W. D. Mauck, being admitted to the bar in July, 1912. BERTRUM LAZARUS WARE, M. D.

Numbered among the alumni of the University of Arkansas, in which he completed his medical course, Dr. Bertrum Lazarus Ware is engaged in practice as a physician and surgeon at Greenwood. He was born in 1883, in the vicinity of the city in which he makes his home, and is a representative of one of the old pioneer families of the state. His parents are George L. and Piety (Woodham) Ware. The paternal grandfather, Lazarus Ware, married a Miss Dickson and removed from North Carolina to Georgia. It was in the latter state that George L. Ware was born and reared. In early life he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed in his native state before coming to Arkansas. While there residing he was united in marriage to Miss Piety Woodham, who was a daughter of Aaron Woodham. The maternal grandfather of Dr. Ware, Aaron Woodham, removed from Tennessee to Alabama and married a Miss Wilson. He fought with the Confederate forces in the Civil war. Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. George L. Ware began their domestic life in Georgia and on coming to Arkansas settled three miles east of Greenwood, where Mr. Ware opened a blacksmith shop and also followed shoemaking. He later established a general store at Fidelity and subsequently opened a general store in Greenwood, which he still conducts in partnership with his son, M. N. Ware, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. From early pioneer times, therefore, the family has taken active and helpful part in the material development and substantial upbuilding of their section of the state.

Dr. Ware was educated in the schools of Greenwood, passing through consecutive grades to his graduation from the high school, and in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville, while later he became a student in the medical department of that institution, and when he had completed his course there he put his theoretical knowledge to the practical test by doing hospital work for two years in Little Rock at Logan H. Roots Memorial Hospital. In 1912 he opened an office in Greenwood, where he has remained through the intervening period of a decade, and as the years have passed his practice has steadily expanded and has likewise grown in importance. During the late war he was the medical member of the local board of Sebastian county and, moreover, was the first member of the board, on which David Davis served as the original chairman, being later succeeded by John W. Bell. Olin Brewer was the secretary and Madge McNally the chief clerk. This board did important work during the progress of the war. Before and since that time Dr. Ware has enjoyed a successful practice and he is also connected with the business interests of Greenwood as a director of the Farmers State Bank.

Pleasantly situated in his home life, Dr. Ware was married in 1910 to Miss Bessie Chandler, a daughter of Frank Chandler, and they have become the parents of two sons and a daughter: Earl E., Prentiss E. and Ester Marie.

Fraternally Dr. Ware is well known, belonging to the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of the World. He is also a Free and Accepted Mason. He is a charter member of the Chi Zeta Chi, a medical college fraternity, and he was a delegate to the Baltimore convention of that society in 1909. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he is serving as a steward, and at all times he manifests keen and helpful interest in the work of the church, doing all in his power to promote its growth and extend its influence.

COLONEL EBENEZER LATTIMORE COMPERE.

One of the well known attorneys of Hamburg, Ashley county, and a veteran of the World war is Colonel Ebenezer Lattimore Compere. He was born in this state at Witcherville, on the 26th of February, 1880, a son of Ebenezer Lee and Josephine Isabella (Mullins) Compere. The paternal ancestors were Huguenots, who left their native country for England, thence removed to Jamaica and subsequently came to America, settling in Alabama. Ebenezer Lee Compere was a Baptist minister and came to Arkansas from Mississippi in 1860. He organized the first church of that denomination at Fort Smith, shortly after his arrival, and remained as pastor there for some years. The last thirty-five years of his life were spent preaching in western Arkansas and doing missionary work among the Indians in Indian Territory, in what is now the state of Oklahoma, then a vast and sparsely populated prairie. He likewise served in the Confederate army as chaplain. Rev. Mr. Compere died in 1895, when but sixty-two years of age, his demise occurring in Dallas, near Mena, this state. In 1863 in Mississippi was celebrated the marriage of Ebenezer Lee Compere to Miss Josephine Isabella Mullins, a native of that state. She is still living at the advanced age of seventy-seven years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Compere nine children were born, of whom four boys and two girls are living. Colonel E. L. Compere, whose name initiates this review, is the youngest child.

Colonel Ebenezer Lattimore Compere received his early education in the public schools of Mena, Arkansas, and later enrolled as a student in Ouachita College, graduating from that institution in 1906, with the degree of A. B. In order to pay his way through school he worked at various jobs in his spare time and, determining upon a legal career, attended the night law classes of the University of Arkansas, working during the day as assistant adjutant general of the Arkansas National Guard. He held that position from 1909 to 1911, inclusive, and in the latter year received his LL. B. degree. On the 1st of January of the following year he came to Hamburg and has since been in active practice here as a partner of his brother, the firm being known as Compere and Compere. In 1914 Colonel Compere was elected to the office of prosecuting attorney for the tenth judicial circuit and was finishing his second term in that office when he put all personal interests aside and enlisted for service in the World war. He was colonel, or commanding officer of the Third Arkansas Infantry, which later became the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Infantry, and he went overseas in August, 1918. He was in the Fifth Depot Division at Mehun-Sur-Yevre in central France and just before the armistice he was transferred to the First Depot Division at St. Aignan. After the signing of the armistice, however, he was sent to Langres, France, and remained there until December, when he was sent to Hyeres, on the Mediterranean and thence to Bordeaux, in January, 1919, and sailed from there to the United States, receiving his discharge at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Virginia, on the 5th of February, 1919. He then returned to Hamburg and resumed his law practice.

At McGehee, this state, on the 29th of December, 1914, occurred the marriage of Colonel Compere to Miss Emma Lucille Hawkins, a daughter of E. P. and Emma Hawkins, of that place. Three children have been born to their union: Edgar Lattimore, five years of age; Powell Butler, three years of age; and Lee Hawkins, one and one-half years of age.

Fraternally Colonel Compere is identified with the Masons and holds membership in Prairie Lodge, No. 465, A. F. & A. M. of Hamburg and in Olive Chapter, Royal Arch Masons here. He is a charter member of Roy Gardner Post, No. 75, American Legion and active in the local affairs of that organization. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church and he is moderator of Bartholomew Baptist Association for the district covering Ashley, Chicot, Bradley and Drew counties, and comprising about seventy churches. In every relation of life—political, professional, and social—Colonel Compere has won success, and he is known throughout the community as a self-made man, having attained his present prominent position as the result of his own intelligently directed efforts and laudable ambition.

L. D. ROGERS.

L. D. Rogers, of Lewisville, who is filling the office of sheriff of Lafayette county, is a native of Louisiana, his birth having occurred in the town of Plain Dealing, December 25, 1881. The period of his minority was spent in his native state and when he had reached the age of twenty-two years he came to Arkansas. He had pursued a public school education in Louisiana and also attended the Louisiana Industrial School. After coming to this state he settled at Canfield, where he engaged in clerking in a store, and in 1904 he removed to Lewisville, where he has since made his home. Here he was again employed as a clerk for a time and then turned his attention to farming, settling upon a tract of land in 1909. His energies were then concentrated upon the further cultivation and development of the fields until he was elected to the office of sheriff in 1917. He made so creditable a record in the position that he was reelected and is still discharging the duties of the position without fear or favor, his course winning him high commendation.

Mr. Rogers belongs to the Masonic fraternity and to the Baptist church and is a faithful exemplar of the teachings of both organizations. His well spent life commends him to the confidence and goodwill of all with whom he has been associated and he has many friends throughout Lafayette county.

Mr. Hampton is a native of Greenwood, Arkansas, born November 26, 1887. He represents one of the old families of North Carolina, his grandparents being James and Jane (McCormick) Hampton, who were natives of that state. The former served with the Confederate forces in the Civil war. His son, H. T. Hampton, was born in Logan county, Arkansas, February 5, 1855, and became a newspaper man, devoting thirty-seven years of his life to work of that character. He founded the Paris Express and also the Booneville Democrat and he also conducted papers at Altus and at Greenwood, spending his last days, however, in Booneville, where he departed this life in 1914. In young manhood he was married to Mattie V. Sipe, who was born in Graysville, Georgia, in February, 1855, and is a daughter of W. L. and Nancy Agnes (Douglas) Sipe, the former a native of Pennsylvania, while the latter was born in Charleston, South Carolina. They spent much of their lives near Chattanooga, Tennessee. H. T. Hampton was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, to which his widow also belongs. In his fraternal relations he was a Mason and a Woodman, while politically he was a stalwart democrat and served as mayor of Booneville for several terms, giving to the city a businesslike and progressive administration. He likewise filled the office of county assessor for one term. To him and his wife were born six children: Norma, the wife of R. A. McEachin, a grocer of Midland, Arkansas; Fay, the wife of A. W. McGee, a traveling man residing in Booneville; Ora, who married B. B. Bevins, engaged in the grocery business in Booneville; H. T., Jr., a dealer in cotton at Antlers, Oklahoma; Max, of this review; and Era, who married Louis Grau, a dry goods merchant of Booneville.

He had been employed in newspaper offices at intervals from the age of ten years and has been quite active along this line since reaching the age of fifteen. Step by step he has advanced as he has acquainted himself with the various departments and phases of the work and ultimately he became owner of the Booneville Democrat, acquiring the paper in 1910, since which time he has been its proprietor and editor. The paper has a circulation of eight hundred and in connection with its publication Mr. Hampton does a very considerable job printing business.

On the 15th of December, 1908, Mr. Hampton was married to Miss Louise Freemyer, who was born at Independence, Missouri, a daughter of D. M. and Elizabeth (Yeary) Freemyer. Her father, a native of Iowa, removed to Missouri when but five years of age and the mother was born in the latter state. They came to Arkansas in 1897 and Mr. Freemyer took up his abode on a farm in Garland county, but he and his wife now make their home in Pulaski county. Mr. and Mrs. Hampton have become parents of three children, Lester, Dorothy and Juanita Marie.

Mr. Hampton was for three years a member of the State Guards and entered the military service of the country at the time the troops were sent to the Mexican border, enlisting at Little Rock, but was not needed at the front, the difficulties being at length adjusted. He is a democrat in his political views and champions the cause of the party through the columns of his paper. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and they have many warm friends in Booneville, enjoying the esteem and goodwill of all who know them.

ROBERT SAMUEL WARNOCK.

Robert Samuel Warnock was born and reared on a farm in Columbia county, Arkansas. He is of Irish extraction, his paternal ancestors coming to this country some one hundred and fifty years ago and locating in South Carolina. The ancestors on the maternal side likewise came from Ireland, prior to the Revolutionary war. His father, Andrew Pickens Warnock, was born in the year 1825 in Autauga county, Alabama, and came to Arkansas with his father, locating in Ouachita county in 1840. In 1850 Andrew P. Warnock moved to Columbia county and there resided until his death in 1878. He was a Confederate soldier and was in the battle of Vicksburg, which lasted over forty days and nights. He was elected first tax assessor of Columbia county following the period of reconstruction at the close of the Civil war. In 1844, in Ouachita county, Andrew P. Warnock was married to Miss Margaret Ann Walker, who was born and reared to twelve years of age in Madison county, Alabama, and came to Arkansas with her parents in 1840. Her death occurred in 1861, at the age of thirty-three years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Warnock eight children were born, three boys and five girls, five of whom are now living. Robert Samuel Warnock, the subject of this sketch, was the seventh child in order of birth.

In the acquirement of an education, Robert S. Warnock attended only the common schools of Columbia county and at the early age of seventeen made his initial step into the business world. For some time he worked as a farm hand at ten dollars a month, going to school and working alternately. Subsequently he engaged in farming on his own account, and, buying land on credit, he followed agricultural pursuits until the fall of 1888, when he moved to Magnolia. Here he established a stock business, and in connection with his farming interest made quite a success. In 1892 he was one of the dominant factors in the organization of the Columbia County Bank, the first bank in the county, and was elected vice president of the institution, in which position he was active for many years. In 1907 the Farmers Bank & Trust Company was organized and Mr. Warnock was elected its president. He served in that capacity until 1916 and until the institution was the largest of eight banks of the county. Also he organized the Columbia County Cotton Oil Company and was its president for a number of years. Mr. Warnock is one among the largest taxpayers of Columbia county. At the present time he is engaged only in looking after his personal interests.

Aside from the success he has attained in a business way, Mr. Warnock has been prominent in political circles and has held several offices of public trust. For several years he served as a member of the city council, also a member of the board of trustees of the high school of Magnolia. In 1902 he was a candidate for state senator but was defeated by a small majority by Senator A. S. Kilgore. In 1908 he was elected to the state legislature by the largest majority any candidate had ever received running for a similar office, and elected again in 1911 by a still larger majority. He was the author of the first bank guaranty law ever introduced in the Arkansas legislature. Mr. Warnock is also the author of our present state depository law, which compels banks to pay competitive interest and give security for the state funds. It is estimated that this interest amounts to more than one hundred thousand dollars every two years paid into the state treasury. In 1908 he was presidential elector from the seventh congressional district on the Bryan and Kern ticket. In 1904 he was elected by the state convention a delegate to the democratic national convention at St. Louis. Mr. Parker of New York and Davis of Virginia were nominated for president and vice president at said convention. In 1914 Mr. Warnock was a candidate for congress from the seventh congressional district, also again he was a candidate in 1916, at both elections being defeated by narrow margins. In 1917 he was a member of the state constitutional convention, which convention concluded its work in 1918. In 1905 the county court selected Mr. Warnock as commissioner to build and superintend a new courthouse which stands today one of the most beautiful structures in the state. For nine years Mr. Warnock has been one of the trustees of the Third District Agricultural School.

In 1879 Mr. Warnock was married to Miss Frances R. Alexander, a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Bromfield) Alexander. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Warnock two children have been born, one son and a daughter. Robert Samuel, Jr., is twenty-five years of age and is now actively engaged in the sawmill business. He married Miss Nina Grayson of Magnolia. Ora, the daughter, is the wife of L. D. Kemmerer, a fertilizer manufacturer of Waldo.

WASHINGTON M. McRAE, M. D.

The ranks of the medical profession of Little Rock are constantly being recruited from among the ambitious and progressive young men who decide upon the practice of medicine and surgery as a life work. For fourteen years Dr. McRae has given his attention to work of this character and his power and ability have increased through his continued study and experience, making him one of the able physicians and surgeons of the capital. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred at Mount Holly, in Union county, July 12, 1881. His father, Washington M. McRae, was born in Anson county, North Carolina, in 1827, and in early life became a resident of Mount Holly, where he owned and conducted a plantation. He served for four years in the Confederate army in Cleburne's command and he always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He wedded Mary Eleanor Dews, who was born in Ouachita county, Arkansas, in 1841, their marriage being celebrated at Mount Holly, in 1866. They became parents of five sons and two daughters, of whom two sons and two daughters are living. The father died April 9, 1889, and was long survived by the mother, who died in March, 1912.

Dr. McRae is indebted to the public school system of Mount Holly for the early educational opportunities which he enjoyed. Later he took up the study of pharmacy, completing a course in St. Louis by graduation with the class of 1903. This constituted the initial step toward his preparation for medical practice and in 1907 he was graduated from the medical department of the University of Arkansas. Through the intervening period he has followed his profession, opening an office in Little Rock in 1911. He is a member of the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Southern Medical Association and through the proceedings and activities of these bodies he keeps in close touch with the trend of modern professional thought, research and investigation.

On the 14th of September, 1912, Dr. McRae was married to Miss Ruth Pemberton, who was born in Scott, Pulaski county, Arkansas, September 10, 1890, and they have become the parents of two children: John Pemberton and Jean Marilynn.

Dr. McRae and his wife hold membership in the First Presbyterian church and they are prominent socially, having many warm friends in Little Rock. The doctor gives his political endorsement to the democratic party.

L. M. GUTHRIE.

L. M. Guthrie, engaged in the real estate and insurance business at Ozark, was born in St. Charles county, Missouri, December 21, 1862, and is a son of Matthew F. and Helen Prince Belle (Logan) Guthrie, both of whom were also natives of St. Charles county. The father was a prominent stockman and farmer. He removed to Callaway county, Missouri, in 1876 and the town of Guthrie was named in his honor. He was born in 1827 and was a son of Robert Guthrie, a native of Westmoreland county, Virginia, who removed to Missouri in 1808, settling first in St. Louis, after which he traded his farm in St. Louis for three hundred and twenty acres of land in St. Charles county, where he devoted his remaining days to general agricultural pursuits. The maternal grandfather was Campbell Logan, who was born in Virginia and went to Missouri in 1808, spending his remaining days in that state. Both families were of the Presbyterian faith through many generations and the ancestral connection with Virginia dated back to 1637. The Logan family came to this country from Scotland. It was Helen Prince Belle Logan who became the wife of Matthew F. Guthrie. She was born in the year 1834. Mr. Guthrie was a farmer and stockman, who removed with his family to Callaway county, Missouri, in 1876. He took an active and prominent part in the public life of the community and was a most highly respected citizen. He died in the year 1893, while his wife survived until 1900. He was a democrat in his political views and his religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church. To Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie were born ten children, six of whom are living: L. M.; Cornelia, who is a teacher in the graded schools of Fulton, Missouri, having taught in one school for thirty years; Helen, also of Fulton, Missouri; M. L., who is engaged in the abstract loan business in Fulton; Harriett, who married Sam L. Carter of Cape Girardeau, Missouri, who is president of a trust company there; and Sarah Hill, the wife of Ludlow Maury, a civil engineer with the Rock Island Railroad, living at St. Louis.

L. M. Guthrie pursued a public school education in Callaway county, Missouri, and in 1881 went to Texas. He was a cow puncher on the plains of Texas for a number of years and became familiar with all the phases of frontier life. He also taught school in Texas and remained in that state for a quarter of a century. He built up a fine herd of cattle while there and won substantial success in his business affairs, continuing to raise stock and deal in cattle for many years. He likewise served as county surveyor of Blanco county, Texas. In 1900 he went to Montana, where he continued in the cattle business and also owned and conducted a hardware and furniture store at Malta, that state. But he lost all of his cattle in a storm in 1904, causing him heavy losses. He afterward worked for three years in order to get enough money to pay off his indebtedness and leave the state. He accepted a job as bookkeeper with a big mining company, acting in that capacity for three years and then again transferred his activities to the southwest. He bought eight hundred and forty acres of land in Franklin county, Arkansas, in 1907, and cultivated it in part and also ran cattle upon the place for a period of seven years. In 1914 he sold that property and removed to Ozark, where he has since engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business and has built up a large clientele through the intervening period. His success is due to his close application, his unfaltering energy and his determination. He is a man of resolute purpose, who carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes and as the years have gone by he has overcome obstacles and difficulties, working his way steadily upward until he now controls a large real estate business in the counties adjoining Franklin.

In 1887 Mr. Guthrie was married to Miss Kate Hardin, who was born in southwestern Texas, a daughter of Butler Hardin, a pioneer stockman of that state. They became parents of four children: Helen Ray, now the wife of W. H. Rust, a banker of Coweta, Oklahoma; Hardin, who is engaged in business as a special hardware merchant at Jamaica, Long Island, New York; Cornelia, the wife of Thomas C. Fleeman, postmaster of Ozark; and John, who is in business with his father. Hardin Guthrie married Flora Taft and has one child, Viola. Cornelia has a daughter, Mary Katherine, and Mrs. Helen R. Rust has one son, John Guthrie Rust, so that Mr. Guthrie proudly claims three interesting grandchildren. He is a member of the Presbyterian church and belongs also to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having served as Noble Grand in three different lodges. In politics he is a democrat but not an office seeker. Enterprise and diligence have characterized his entire career and step by step he has advanced as the years have gone by until he now occupies a most creditable position in business circles, enjoying the respect and confidence of all with whom he has dealings and the high regard of those whom he meets in social relations.

JOHN CLINTON FUTRALL.

John Clinton Futrall, ninth president of the University of Arkansas, was born near Jackson, Tennessee, March 9, 1873. His parents were Thomas A. and Emma (Headen) Futrall, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. On both sides of the family his ancestry dates back to pre-Revolutionary days. His father served four years in the Confederate army, surrendering with Lee at Appomattox. The elder Futrall removed to Tennessee almost immediately after the close of the Civil war, and in 1884 removed to Marianna, Arkansas, where he died in 1917, after being engaged for fifty-one years in school work, including many years as superintendent of city schools at Marianna, superintendent of the Arkansas State School for the Blind, and county superintendent of schools for Lee county, Arkansas.

John C. Futrall, after graduating from the Marianna high school, entered the University of Arkansas in 1888. Leaving there in 1890, he went to the University of Virginia, from which institution he received the degrees of Bachelor and Master of Arts in 1894. He was appointed to a professorship of ancient languages in the University of Arkansas before reaching the age of twenty-one, and served in that capacity for nineteen years. During this period he spent about two years studying in the University of Chicago, Johns Hopkins University and in Bonn and Halle, Germany.

In 1913 Mr. Futrall was elected acting president, and in 1914 president of the University of Arkansas. During his incumbency the activities of the university have been greatly enlarged and its efficiency much increased. The number of students, in spite of higher entrance requirements, has been practically doubled. The class work has been improved until credits from the University of Arkansas are now accepted by the standard universities of the United States. A College of Education for the training of teachers has been established. Two large farms for the College of Agriculture have been acquired. There has been created an extension service in agriculture, home economics and other subjects, reaching every county in the state and serving hundreds of thousands of people. The summer school has grown from about one hundred to about seven hundred. There has been brought to the university a faculty of such high quality as to elicit public commendation in a survey recently made by the United States Bureau of Education. The university has been relieved of its precarious dependence upon each succeeding legislature for such appropriations as that body might see fit to give, and has been granted a one mill direct tax on all the property of the state for its support.

Mr. Futrall is a member of numerous boards, learned societies, fraternal and other organizations. Among these are the Arkansas State Board of Education, the Arkansas State History Commission, the National Education Association, the Classical Association of the Middle West and South, the American Archaeological Society, the Kappa Sigma fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa, the Rotary Club and the Elks. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and a democrat. During the war he served as a member of the Arkansas State Council of Defense, and as special agent for vocational education for the United States government at a salary of a dollar a year. In 1920 Tulane University of Louisiana conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws on the occasion of his delivering the annual Phi Beta Kappa address at that institution.

In 1898 Mr. Futrall was married to Miss Annie Gaines Duke of Fayetteville, Arkansas. They have two daughters, Helen and Emily, both of whom are students in the University of Arkansas.

JOHN W. WHITE.

John W. White, a leading business man and prominent citizen of Russellville, is a member of a family whose name has been inseparably associated with the development and improvement of Pope county from pioneer times to the present and his activities have covered a wide scope, connecting him with large and important enterprises. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Logan county on the 4th of July, 1860, and his parents were J. M. and Florida (Miller) White, both natives of Spartanburg, South Carolina, the former born March 23, 1820, and the latter May 4, 1822. They were married in South Carolina and soon afterwards removed to Georgia, where the father became the owner of a plantation, continuing active in its cultivation until 1869, when he came to Arkansas. At Ellsworth, in Logan county, he opened a mercantile establishment, which he conducted until 1872, when he came to Russellville and engaged in general merchandising in association with his son, W. J. White, who is now successfully controlling the enterprise. He also had financial interests and made extensive investments in land but lived largely retired after establishing his home in Russellville, in the enjoyment of a comfortable competence. He was one of the leading citizens of his community and was one of the first postmasters of Russellville. In his political views he was a republican and his life was guided by the teachings of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Russellville, with which he was affiliated. He died on the 23d of March, 1892, and the demise of Mrs. White occurred in 1908. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom four survive: W. J., a retired capitalist and highly respected citizen of Russellville; Mary A., the widow of Freeman S. Casper and a resident of Denver, Colorado; J. W., of this review; and Ellen, the wife of Jesse Leonard, a leading hardware merchant of Russellville.

After completing his high school course John W. White became a student at Bethany College of Bethany, West Virginia, and was then associated with his father and brother, W. J. White, in merchandising until 1890. He then entered the Peoples Exchange Bank of Russellville as cashier, serving for fifteen years in that capacity, at the end of which time he resigned to take charge of the Southern Anthracite Coal Company, of which he became sole owner. He continued in that business until 1910, when he leased the mine for ten years on a royalty basis, but subsequently, in association with three others, he bought back the lease. Later the Bernice Investment Company took over the Southern Anthracite Coal Company, in which Mr. White still retains an interest, and he is now serving as vice president of the Dardanelle & Russellville Railway Company. He is a director of the Peoples Exchange Bank and auditor of the board and has acquired an interest in a large plantation, of which his brother, W. J. White, is also part owner. In addition he is sole proprietor of a large farm in this locality and was recently appointed receiver for the Southern Anthracite Coal Mining Company. He has never feared to venture where favoring opportunity has pointed out the way and is accounted one of the wealthiest men in Pope county. Throughout his business career he has been a persistent, resolute and energetic worker, keeping his hand steadily upon the helm of his affairs and manifesting at all times strong executive power.

On the 1st of February, 1892, Mr. White was united in marriage to Miss Laura Annette Popkess, who was born at Champaign, Illinois, a daughter of Alfred Popkess, who became a successful promoter of large business enterprises. He subsequently removed to Fort Scott, Kansas, and in association with his brother-in-law built the St. Louis & Fort Scott Railroad, which was later sold to the Gould interests. He also became interested in the manufacture of glass at that place and later operated in the coal mines of Pope county, Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. White have become the parents of six children, four sons and two daughters: John W., Jr., the eldest in the family, attended Northwestern University at Chicago and is now engaged in merchandising at Russellville; Lucile, who acquired her education in a woman's school at Jacksonville, Illinois, the Ward & Belmont College at Nashville, Tennessee, and the New England Conservatory of Music, is now the wife of James C. Winderotte, who is engaged in the grain business at Russellville; Will J., a graduate of the Culver Military Academy of Indiana and the State University of Wisconsin, is connected with mercantile interests of Russellville; Alfred P., who completed a course in a business college at Poughkeepsie, New York, also spent a year as a student in the State University of Arkansas and is now attending Northwestern University of Chicago, specializing in the study of commerce and finance; J. Madison is attending the Culver Military Academy; and Laura Bernyce is a junior in the Russellville high school.

The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. White gives his political allegiance to the republican party. He is a leader in its councils and is a member of the state central and state executive committees. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and has filled the office of exalted ruler. Progress has been the keynote of his career and what he has accomplished represents the fit utilization of his innate powers and talents. His initiative spirit has led him into prominent connections and he has been active in pushing forward the wheels of progress in Pope county, which numbers him among its foremost citizens.

Thomas E. May, president of the Bank of Clarksville and one of the city's most prominent business men, was here born September 20, 1858. He is a son of T. K. and Mary Jane (Cunningham) May, who were natives of Tennessee and of Fayetteville, Arkansas, respectively, and it was in the latter city that they were married. The grandfather, Thomas May, a native of Tennessee, settled at Knoxville on coming to Arkansas in pioneer times. He followed agricultural pursuits. William Cunningham, the grandfather in the maternal line, was an early resident of Fayetteville, Arkansas. He was a farmer and made a specialty of raising apples and live stock. The marriage of T. K. May and Mary Jane Cunningham was celebrated in Fayetteville. T. K. May attended college at Cane Hill, Arkansas, and about 1851 he came to Clarksville, opening a general store with a capital of about three hundred dollars. For sixty-four years he conducted his business interests here, winning a substantial measure of success. During the Civil war he served for four years in the Confederate army. He gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He was a Mason and in religious faith held membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. To him and his wife were born twelve children, three of whom are living: W. A., who for a number of years was a dry goods merchant and is now engaged in the brokerage business; T. E., of this review; and Ada May, living in Los Angeles.

T. E. May pursued his education in the State University of Arkansas after acquiring his preliminary training. After putting his textbooks aside he took up the occupation of farming, investing a cash capital of two thousand dollars. He followed farming for a number of years and then engaged in clerking in May Brothers store for a number of years, successfully carrying on the business for an extended period. About 1894 he became connected with the Bank of Clarksville and has been president of the institution since 1920. He had engaged in loaning money for a number of years before he became connected with the bank and has considerable experience in financial matters, his judgment being recognized as particularly sound as to loans and business valuations. He started out in the business world as a farmer with a cash capital of but two thousand dollars, to this sum he has constantly added until today he is recognized as one of the men of affluence in his section of the state. He acted as administrator in connection with his father's estate and it cost the heirs nothing to effect a settlement of the business. He was also administrator for the estate of his brother, L. C. May, a prominent financier. He now devotes his entire attention to the bank and its business is steadily developing under his careful management.

In 1884 Mr. May was married to Miss Edwina James, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of W. I. James, a practicing physician of that state, who came to Clarksville in 1879. Mr. and Mrs. May are parents of two sons: Raymond C., who served in the navy from New York in the World war, makes his home in the eastern metropolis and is connected with the musical theatrical attractions in that city; Frank C. is assistant cashier of the Bank of Clarksville. He entered the service in 1917, raising a volunteer company at Clarksville and became first lieutenant of Company L. He was on duty abroad and returned in February, 1919. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and recognized as one of the prominent and progressive young business men of the city.

T. E. May has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party but has never sought nor desired office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his business affairs. Sound judgment has characterized his entire career and he has ever found ready and correct solutions for intricate and involved business problems. Opportunities which others have passed heedlessly by he has recognized and utilized in the upbuilding of his fortunes and his course has ever been such as would win for him unqualified confidence, respect and goodwill.

Dr. Albert S. Buchanan, one of the able surgeons of southern Arkansas and senior member of the firm of Buchanan, Buchanan and Hirst of Prescott, operating the Park Sanitarium, one of the modern hospitals of the state, was born in Prescott on the 18th of January, 1881, a son of Chesley M. and Clara (Donnell) Buchanan. The father was born in Giles county, Tennessee, while the mother was a native of Lowndes county, Mississippi, in which latter state their marriage was celebrated. In 1859 they came to Arkansas, locating in what is now Clark county and Mr. Buchanan engaged in farming. He was one of the pioneer educators of the state and for some forty years taught school here. He is now making his home with his son, Dr. Buchanan, in Prescott. Mrs. Buchanan died in 1916.

He was graduated in the course in literature, and subsequently, having decided upon a professional career, he entered the medical department of the university and was graduated in 1905 with the M. D. degree, being the youngest man ever graduated from that institution. The year 1906 he spent in New York, attending the New York Polyclinic and in 1907 he attended the London Polyclinic in London, England. The following year he returned to the United States and entered upon a successful practice at Prescott, where he has since resided. In 1911 Dr. Buchanan, together with his brother, G. A. Buchanan, who had received his M. D. degree, formed the partnership of Drs. Buchanan & Buchanan, and in 1915 they built the structure now occupied by the New Park Hotel and founded the Greeson Sanitarium. Four years later they disposed of that building and removed to their present location, where they established the Park Sanitarium. This sanitarium has thirty-nine beds and is one of the best equipped institutions of its kind in the state. It is the only small hospital in Arkansas that conducts a training school for nurses and the most efficient and systematic training is given here. In 1919 Dr. Hirst was taken into the firm, which is now known as Buchanan, Buchanan & Hirst.

In 1908 was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Buchanan to Miss Ethel Tompkins, a daughter of William V. Tompkins, one of the leading attorneys in Nevada county

CORLEY GEE PRICE.

The unostentatious routine of private life, although of vast importance to the welfare of the community, has not figured to any great extent on the pages of history, but the names of those who have distinguished themselves by the possession of qualties of character which mainly contribute to the success of private life and to the public stability and who had enjoyed the respect and confidence of those around them, should not be permitted to perish. Their example is more valuable to the majority of readers than that of military leaders, statesmen and writers, as their life records indicate what can be accomplished by industry, perseverance and sound judgment, qualities which all must cultivate if success would be attained in the ordinary walks of life. Along the line of steady progression Corley Gee Price has steadily advanced until he today occupies a prominent position in the financial circles of Little Rock as the vice president of the Southern Trust Company. He has used his time and talents wisely and well and the enterprise which he has displayed has enabled him to overcome all difficulties and obstacles in his path and to work his way steadily upward.

Mr. Price is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Woodruff county, December 23, 1872. He is the eldest of a family of four sons and a daughter, who were born to David Flournoy and Anna Franklin (Corley) Price, the family circle remaining unbroken by the hand of death until 1901, when the husband and father departed this life. He was born at Farmville, Prince Edward county, Virginia, November 19, 1843, and on removing to Arkansas in 1871 he established his home at Augusta, where he continued to reside until his demise. He was the owner of a plantation and carefully developed his interests along that line. At the time of the Civil war he joined Company A of the Fourth Tennessee Infantry and served with the Confederate army for four years. About 1860 he had removed to Memphis, Tennessee, and there joined the army in 1861, remaining on active duty until wounded at the battles of Shiloh and Murfreesboro. He surrendered with Johnson's army on the 25th of April, 1865, at Greensboro, North Carolina. After the war he resided in Gibson county, Tennessee, until 1871, when he came to Arkansas, continuing a valued resident of this state until called to his final rest. His wife was born in Coahoma county, Mississippi, November 20, 1852, and they were married near Augusta, Arkansas, March 1, 1871. Mrs. Price still survives her husband and makes her home in Little Rock.

Corley Gee Price obtained his education in the country schools and in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1898, with the Bachelor of Arts degree. The following year he turned his attention to the life insurance business as a representative of the Union Central Life Insurance Company and has remained with this corporation to the present time. He has steadily advanced, winning promotion after promotion and is now state agent for the Union Central Life Insurance Company of Cincinnati. In this position he directs the efforts of many representatives of the company in this state and the business is steadily growing. He is also the vice president of the Thompson Brothers & Price Company, wholesale dealers in cigars and tobacco, a firm which enjoys an extensive trade. In financial circles, too, he has become a prominent figure, being elected to the vice presidency of the Southern Trust Company. He is a man of sound business judgment, who accomplishes what he undertakes and as the years have passed he has overcome all difficulties and obstacles in his path by persistent and earnest effort. He is today one of the prosperous and successful men of Little Rock, contributing much through his business activity to the material development of the city.

On the 16th of June, 1903, Mr. Price was married to Miss Mary Ethel Woods, who was born in LaCrosse, Izard county, Arkansas, October 7, 1877, and is a graduate of Arkansas College, in which she completed her course with the class of 1900, receiving at that time the Bachelor of Arts degree. Mrs. Price is a daughter of Thomas J. and Mary Frances (Kennard) Woods, the former a native of Tennessee. They now reside at Evening Shade, Sharp county, Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Price have become parents of five children: Mary Frances, born June 8, 1904; Flournoy Woods, born May 26, 1909; Margaret Lillian, born May 15, 1911; Virginia Ethel, born July 25, 1913; and Elizabeth Kennard, born March 1, 1916.

Politically Mr. Price is a democrat, having always stanchly supported the party and its principles. During the World war he took active part in supporting the interests behind the successful prosecution of hostility. He served on the Liberty Bond committee and was captain of the Flying Squadron. He belongs to the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, and for twenty years has been a member of its board of stewards. He is also well known in Masonic circles, was secretary of Magnolia Lodge, No. 60, F. & A. M., of Little Rock, for several years; and is a past master of Pulaski Heights Lodge, No. 673, F. & A. M. He has also taken the degrees of the Royal Arch Chapter and of the Scottish Rite and is a member of the Mystic Shrine. For one year he was president of the Chamber of Commerce of Little Rock and has always been a cooperant factor in the plans and projects of that organization for the city's upbuilding and development. He is likewise well known in club circles, having membership in the Quapaw, Country and Twelve Clubs. A resident of Arkansas for almost a half century—the entire period of his life—Mr. Price enjoys the respect and confidence of his fellowmen to an unusual degree. His has been an unblemished character and with him success in life has been reached by sterling qualities of mind and a heart true to every manly principle. He has never deviated from what his judgment would indicate to be right and honorable between his fellowmen and himself and thus it is that everywhere he is spoken of in terms of the highest regard.

CHARLES EDWARD SPIVEY, M. D.

One of the well known residents of Crossett is Dr. Charles Edward Spivey, who since 1920 has been in charge of the hospital of the Crossett Lumber Company. A native of Georgia, he was born near Thomaston, on the 19th of January, 1878, of English descent on the paternal side and of Scotch-Irish on the maternal side. The Spivey family came from England to this country at an early date and located in Virginia. The father of Dr. Spivey was Charles Henry Spivey, also a physician of note. He was born and reared in Thomaston, Georgia, and in early life took up the study of medicine. He became one of the well known physicians of his native state and wrote various articles for medical papers and other periodicals along that line. Dr. Charles Henry Spivey had two brothers who were captains in the Confederate army during the Civil war, Captain E. A. Spivey and Captain Jim Spivey. The first named brother lost his life while in active service. In Thomaston, Georgia, on the 15th of October, 1876, was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Spivey to Miss Mary Elizabeth Johnson, a native of Chattanooga, Tennessee. Her father, J. L. Johnson, served as a private in the Confederate army. To the union of Dr. and Mrs. Spivey one child was born, Charles Edward, whose name initiates this review. The father's death occurred at Thomaston on the 5th of June, 1886, when he was in his sixty-fifth year. The mother makes her home in Thomaston, and is now sixty-four years of age.

In the acquirement of an education, Charles Edward Spivey attended the public schools of Thomaston and later, determining upon a medical career, he entered the medical department of Baylor University at Dallas, Texas. He was graduated from that institution in 1910, with the M. D. degree. Dr. Spivey's professional education was attained at his own expense, his spare time being spent as a railway agent. Following his graduation he went to Dallas, Texas, and until 1911 he was engaged in general practice there, also acting as city health officer. In that year, however, he removed to Carson, Louisiana, as physician for the Central Coal & Coke Company there and he served in that capacity until October, 1917. Resigning his position he took charge of the hospital for the Gulf Lumber Company in Louisiana, and in October, 1920, he came to Crossett, Arkansas, in like capacity for the Crossett Lumber Company. The hospital is complete and modern in every way, containing thirty-five private rooms and wards, X-ray laboratories, sterilizing rooms and a major and minor operating room. The entire structure is steam-heated and boasts of good lighting facilities and ventilation. Although he has been a resident of Crossett but a short time, Dr. Spivey has made many friends in this community, and is recognized as one of the leading physicians and surgeons in Ashley county.

It was on the 26th of November, 1902, that Dr. Spivey was united in marriage to Miss Willie Florence Weakley, a daughter of Robert F. Weakley, a leading citizen of Dallas. Mrs. Spivey is a woman of much culture and refinement and is rapidly assuming a place in the club and social circles of Crossett.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church and Dr. Spivey has served as a steward for the past eleven years. Fraternally he is identified with

During the World war he gave generously of his time and money in promoting the government's interests and was one of three members on the examining board at Vernon Parish, Louisiana.

DE WITT POE.

The horizon of every man's achievements is fixed by his own powers and capabilities. De Witt Poe, who possesses the requisite ability and the equally necessary quality of industry, is steadily ascending the steep ladder of success and although he has been identified with the legal fraternity of Arkansas City for but a brief period, he has already demonstrated his ability successfully to handle important litigated interests. He is of English ancestry and the family was established in America about 1750, during the colonial epoch in the history of the nation. He was born in Independence, Virginia, July 9, 1893, and his parents, James Everett and Gillie (Andrews) Poe, are residents of Cabool, Missouri. For many years the father successfully engaged in teaching in the public schools of Virginia but is now living retired. The paternal grandfather, J. T. Poe, was a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting in Virginia as a member of a company of infantry. The mother was born and reared in Virginia. Her father, Alfred Andrews, also participated in the Civil war, joining the infantry forces in Grayson county, Virginia. The marriage of James E. Poe and Gillie Andrews occurred at Independence, Virginia, in 1887, and to their union were born three children, two sons and a daughter, all of whom survive.

De Witt Poe, the second in order of birth, was graduated from the Chattanooga College of Law in 1920, with the LL. B. degree. In the spring of 1920 he came to Arkansas City and joined Hon. F. M. Rogers, an able attorney, who for thirty years had resided here, and this association was continued until the death of the senior partner, when Mr. Poe took over the office, which he now maintains.

At Mountain Grove, Missouri, on the 22d of October, 1921, Mr. Poe was united in marriage to Miss Joyce Stone, a daughter of S. F. Stone, a prominent citizen of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Poe are members of the Baptist church at Arkansas City and Mr. Poe is also connected with Delta Theta Phi, a law fraternity, while fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, belonging to Riverton Lodge, No. 296, F. & A. M., at Arkansas City. During the World war he enlisted as a private and at Camp Sheridan, near Montgomery, Alabama, was commissioned a second lieutenant at the end of thirteen months' service. He was attached to the adjutant general's department and was stationed successively at Camp Sheridan, Alabama, Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, Camp Merritt, New Jersey, and Camp Mills, Long Island, receiving his discharge at Hoboken, New Jersey, on the 30th of April, 1919, on the expiration of twenty-three months of service. Although one of the younger representatives of the legal fraternity of Arkansas City, his years seem no bar to his progress and he has already gained an enviable reputation in a profession which calls for the highest ability and requires close application, good judgment and a constantly widening comprehension of the relations and responsibilities which go to make up civilized society.

HENRY BOLLINGER.

Henry Bollinger, piano merchant of Fort Smith with well appointed store, deserves great credit for what he has accomplished, being truly a self-made man, for from the age of thirteen years he has depended upon his own resources for a livelihood. Diligence and determination have been strong features in his advancement, for he early recognized the fact that industry wins. Fort Smith, by reason of what he has accomplished and by reason of his pronounced and commendable characteristics, is proud to number him among her native sons. His birth occurred in 1874, his parents being Samuel and Emily (Graber) Bollinger. The father came to the new world from Switzerland, his birth having occurred in the land of the Alps, and first located in Indiana, where he remained for about a year and then gradually drifted toward the southwest. He became one of the pioneer merchants of Fort Smith, and here conducted a general store for some time.

Henry Bollinger was educated in the schools of this city and early learned the mechanical end of the piano business with the Krell Piano Company of Cincinnati, Ohio. From the age of thirteen years he has been dependent upon his own resuroces, for at that time he started to work for his brother, K. C. Bollinger, also a piano merchant of Fort Smith and mentioned elsewhere in this work. He thus gained comprehensive knowledge of the business, remaining with his brother for seventeen years. About 1906 he decided to branch out for himself. Accordingly, he opened a small establishment for the sale of pianos and as the years have passed he has considerably enlarged his store and has won a gratifying measure of success. Today he carries an extensive stock of fine pianos of the best makes and also deals in the Brunswick phonograph and other musical merchandise.

Henry Bollinger was united in marriage to Miss Anna E. Williams, a daughter of Sam Williams, and they are well known in this city, where Mr. Bollinger has spent his life. Opportunity has ever been to him a call to action. When an employe he was never afraid that he would give his employer more service than was his due. He did not constantly look at the clock to see when the hours of labor would be over but made it his purpose thoroughly to learn the business and thoroughly to earn his salary. It has been said that success plays as the will-o'-the-wisp before the dreamer, slips away from the sluggard, but surrenders its reward to the man of determination and industry. Early recognizing this fact, Henry Bollinger has so directed his efforts that he is today one of the capable and successful men of Fort Smith.

JOE BERGER, SR.

Joe Berger, Sr., is the son of Marcus and Henrietta (Less) Berger and was born at Greenville, Illinois, in 1874. Seven years later, or in 1881, his parents removed with the family to Jonesboro, Arkansas, and he received his educational training in the schools of Jonesboro and at Searcy College, while later he became a student in the Christian Brothers College at St. Louis, Missouri.

Following his graduation he entered business life in connection with his father, with whom he remained until 1903 and under his father's guidance gained thorough and comprehensive knowledge of all branches of commercial and banking business. Marcus Berger was a remarkable man. When he established his home in Jonesboro the town was but a tiny village, boasting of a single store. He proved a most valuable contributing factor to the upbuilding and progress of the city. He erected seventy or more business houses in the town and established the first bank there, known as the American Trust Bank and rated as one of the foremost banking institutions of the country. It is now being conducted by two brothers of Joe Berger of this review and practically the entire stock is owned by the family. The institution has never experienced any financial trouble and has never lost a single loan. Its progressive policy has been tempered by a safe conservatism and the bank stands as a synonym for integrity as well as advancement, in the management of institutions of this character.

In 1903, severing his business association with his father, Joe Berger established in Jonesboro two commercial enterprises, a wholesale grocery and a wholesale and retail dry goods house. After conducting these two interests successfully for four years, Mr. Berger removed to Little Rock and established the wholesale shoe house conducted under the name of the Norton Berger Shoe Company, of which he is the vice president. In 1915 he financed the ready-to-wear establishment conducted under the name of the Pollack Company and became its president. On taking up his duties as president he assumed control of an enterprise that was then operating but one store in Little Rock. Mr. Berger soon demonstrated his business ability, his executive force and his sagacity and as the result of his labors, after a period of six years the company is now successfully operating ten stores, in the following cities: Little Rock, Pine Bluff and Fort Smith, Arkansas; Shreveport, Alexandria, Lake Charles, Monroe and Baton Rouge, Louisiana; and Vicksburg and Meridian, Mississippi. Mr. Berger is one of the busiest men in the south, full of vim and energy. In addition to being vice president of the Norton Berger Shoe Company and president-treasurer of the Pollack Company, he is president of the Arkansas Refining Company, which was the pioneer oil refinery of Little Rock, and president of the Union Packing Corporation of Little Rock. He is also one of the loan board of the Commercial Trust Company of the capital city and he owns a large amount of city real estate and operates extensively in the realty field. In association with his brothers he owns fifty thousand acres of land in Arkansas. He readily recognizes and utilizes opportunities that others pass heedlessly by.

In 1904 Mr. Berger married Elsie, the daughter of Gus Blass, one of the pioneer merchants of Little Rock, whose life record has been synonymous with the commercial development of Arkansas. Mrs. Berger is a leader in the club and social life of the city and is far-famed as a charming hostess. Mr. and Mrs. Berger have one child, Sylvia, who is now a senior in the National Cathedral School. She is a talented young woman who expects to continue her education as a student in Smith's Academy in 1922, there to specialize in literature and journalism. She gives promise of possessing marked literary ability.

While Mr. Berger is a thoroughly competent, resourceful and capable business man, he is also known as a good fellow and a most entertaining companion. He belongs to the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce, to the Travelers Protective Association and to the Arkansas Travelers Association. He is widely known in Masonic circles and occupied the chair of master of his lodge when but twenty-two years of age. He has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He is also an Elk. It would be impossible for Joe Berger to maintain a place in the background. He possesses the qualities of leadership and his indomitable energy and progressiveness have brought him steadily to the front in all the relations of life in which he has figured. His potency in managing commercial interests, his ready solution for intricate business problems and his resourcefulness in meeting every situation, have made him an outstanding figure in the mercantile life of the capital city.

Q. LAMAR PORTER.

Q. Lamar Porter, president of the Robinson Roders Company, was born in Georgia in 1878, a son of William C. and Susan E. (Cox) Porter. His father was a successful merchant and from him the son evidently inherited the business abliity that has made him, at the early age of forty-three years, one of the outstanding figures in the commercial circles of Arkansas. The Porters were of an old Alabama family, while the Cox's were of North Carolina ancestry. On both sides the ancestral line is traced back to early colonial days.

Q. Lamar Porter was educated in private and public grammar schools and at the Mountville Military Academy at Lagrange, Georgia. In his twentieth year he came to Arkansas to visit an uncle and being pleased with the state he decided to remain. After clerking for a period of two years in the town of Fulton he was appointed purchasing agent of the Chicot Lumber Company at Blissville, Arkansas, occupying that position through the next two and a half years. Later he took up his residence in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, becoming the vice president of the Puddephatt Furniture Company. After nearly three years with that corporation, he traveled through the southern states in the interests of a group of furniture manufacturing firms, devoting his attention to that work until 1908, when he became president of the Joppa Mattress Company at Little Rock. During the succeeding nine years of his business career he was engaged in building up the interests of the company, developing its plant from a small concern to one of the largest in the state. In 1918 the Joppa Company was consolidated with the Robinson Roders Company, one of the largest mattress and pillow manufacturing concerns in America. Mr. Porter was elected vice president of the company with headquarters in Little Rock. In January, 1922, Mr. Porter was elected president of the parent organization. The plant in this city is known to the trade as the Joppa branch of the Robinson Roders Company. The corporation operates factories at Newark, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City and Little Rock and the Arkansas plant ranks second in importance in the chain. It is the only one in which the famous cotton felt Restwell mattresses are manufactured. The company also maintains a plant on the Island of Java for the preparation of Kopok, or silk floss, used in high-grade mattresses and pillows. They also have an agency in Shantung, China, whence comes a high grade of down feathers. Employment in the Little Rock factory is given to one hundred and sixty-five operatives, while thirty traveling salesmen represent the business on the road, taking orders that are most promptly filled, while the reliability of the house, combined with the excellence of the product, insures a continuance of a most liberal patronage. Mr. Porter is a man of very wide interests and aside from his connection with the Robinson Roders Company, he is the vice president of the Southern Trust Bank, vice president of the Terminal Warehouse Company, a director of the Kidd Bossinger Hardware Company, a director of the Little Rock Tent & Awning Company, a director and treasurer of the Travelers Building & Loan Association and a director of the A. A. Karcher Candy Manufacturing Company. He is likewise interested in a number of smaller enterprises. His cooperation is counted as a most valuable asset in the management and control of business enterprises, by reason of his notably sound judgment and keen sagacity and his ready discrimination between the essential and the non-essential in all business affairs.

In 1910 Mr. Porter was united in marriage to Miss Louise Skillern, a daughter of James E. Skillern, a well know merchant of Searcy, Arkansas. They now have two sons: James Skillern and Q. Lamar, Jr. Mr. Porter and his family attend the Episcopal church and he is serving as a member of the vestry. He belongs to the Rotary Club and to the Lakeside Country Club. He is a lover of the out-of-doors, though his many interests give him but little time for vacation pleasures. As a representative business man of the state he stands very high.

G. L. WARE.

G. L. Ware, a well known, enterprising and prosperous merchant of Greenwood, is senior partner in the firm of G. L. Ware & Son. He is a native of Georgia, his birth having there occurred in the year 1861, and is a son of Lazarus Ware. While residing in his native state he learned the blacksmith trade, which he followed there for a time and then, thinking to promote his opportunities and advance his financial interests by a removal to a less thickly settled district, he came to Arkansas and established a blacksmith shop three miles east of Greenwood. For some time he carried on the business and later he and his son, M. N. Ware, opened a general store at Fidelity. The enterprise prospered as the years passed and for some time they conducted a well appointed general store at that place. Seeking a still broader field of labor they removed to Greenwood in 1911 and here opened a large general store, carrying a carefully selected line of goods.

G. L. Ware was united in marriage in 1879 to Miss Piety Woodham and they have become the parents of the following named: B. L., who is a practicing physician of Greenwood, mentioned elsewhere in this work; M. N.; Pearl, who is the wife of Jack McMurtry; Artie; Lothie, deceased; and Blanche. The son, M. N. Ware, who is associated with his father in general merchandising, married Miss Louie Bryan and they have become parents of six children. Like his father M. N. Ware is a capable business man, energetic and alert to the opportunities which come to them and has been of much assistance to his father in carrying on the business. He finds his recreation in fishing and about once a year enjoys a vacation period in that way. G. L. Ware is an active and prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he is serving as steward. The family is well known, its members occupying an enviable social position, while the partners in the firm of Ware & Son rank high as capable, reliable and successful business men.

JOHN F. HUTT.

With the management of a plantation and later with the grocery business, John F. Hutt was connected through many years of an active life that brought to him a substantial measure of success and enabled him to leave his family in comfortable financial circumstances when in October, 1915, he departed this life. He was a native of Iowa, his birth having occurred on the 10th of September, 1849. His mother's maiden name was Sarah Finley. The father was a prosperous merchant, devoting his entire life to business of that character.

John F. Hutt, one of a family of four children, pursued a public school education and when quite young became a resident of Little Rock, where he completed his preliminary studies before entering the Louisville Academy, in which he finished his education. He started out in the business world as a clerk in a store in Little Rock and thus gained the early experience which constituted the foundation upon which he built his later success. He became acquainted with business methods and there he learned that industry, determination and indefatigable energy are the basic principles of success. Later he became identified with a plantation and for a number of years gave his attention to agricultural interests. Eventually, however, he came to Pine Bluff and joined his father-in-law in the grocery business, which he developed into one of the large commercial enterprises of the city. He always carried a well selected line of staple and fancy groceries, giving to his patrons the advantage of the best that the markets afforded, and his reasonable prices and fair dealings were salient factors in the attainment of his prosperity. After the death of his father-in-law he established the firm of Hutt & Sons. As the years passed he built up a business of very gratifying proportions and remained active in its management and control until his demise.

In 1876 Mr. Hutt was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Lee Talbot, a daughter of John H. Talbot, well known in Missouri and Arkansas, where he engaged in the grocery business. To Mr. and Mrs. Hutt were born four children, three of whom are living: John T., whose birth occurred March 17, 1877, and who is now one of the prominent business men of Pine Bluff; William V., who was born October 7, 1878, and is actively connected with the good roads movement; J. B., who died in 1918; and L. F., who is cashier of the Simmons National Bank at Pine Bluff. Mr. Hutt was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, to which his widow and children still belong. She makes her home at No. 118 West Fifth street, in an attractive residence, and derives a substantial income from valuable property holdings. She occupies an enviable position in the social circles of the city and her friends are almost as numerous as her acquaintances. Fraternally Mr. Hutt was connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Royal Arcanum, the Knights of Pythias and the Travelers Protective Association. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party, of which he was a stanch advocate, and in all matters of citizenship he was actuated by a most progressive spirit that took cognizance of everything pertaining to the public welfare and prompted his generous support of any project or plan for the welfare of the community and the state. His ideals of life were high and found expression in his daily relations with his fellowmen.

JUDGE JOSEPH TRIBBLE COSTON.

Judge Joseph Tribbie Coston, one of the foremost attorneys of eastern Arkansas, is a highly respected citizen of Osceola. He was born on a farm near Elora, Lincoln county, Tennessee, on the 14th of March, 1869, a son of James Joseph and Mary Marinda (Smith) Coston, both natives of North Carolina, who during childhood removed to Georgia with their parents, and in that state they were reared to young manhood and womanhood and subsequently married. After marriage they removed to Alabama and subsequently to Tennessee, where they resided for many years. At the time of his demise, in his eighty-second year, the father was a resident of Kline, Franklin county, Tennessee. The mother was past ninety years of age at the time of her demise and retained all her faculties to a remarkable degree up to the last. At the time of Mr. Coston's death on the 11th of June, 1913, they had lived together for sixty-three years lacking two and one-half months.

In the acquirement of his early education Joseph Tribble Coston attended the public schools of Mulberry, Tennessee, and in October, 1890, entered the law department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee. He took the two years course in one and received his LL. B. degree with the class of 1891. The following autumn he began practice in Fayetteville, Tennessee, and he remained there for some nine years, achieving more than substantial success. He was prominent in the public life of the state and was a member of the Tennessee state legislature one term, 1899, serving with a most creditable record. While a resident of Tennessee Judge Coston was connected with much important litigation, and a contemporary writer has said of him: "The most important case with which he was connected in Tennessee was his association in the successful defense of Colonel Holman when George L. Diemer sued him for ten thousand dollars for alleged breach of trust. However, Mr. Coston with characteristic modesty says that he thinks his employment in this case was intentionally more beneficial to himself than to the Colonel."

In 1900 Judge Coston came to Osceola and he has since been in active practice here, becoming a leading member of the profession in the state. He has an extensive and lucrative clientage and handles much important litigation before the courts. In connection with the important work he has done here another authority has written: "Probably the most important litigation that he has handled there in so far as its effect upon the community at large is concerned was in connection with the drainage systems. Northeast Arkansas was a pioneer in the south in the matter of drainage. Many progressive strong men realized its necessity and ultimate value to all. Others preferred to hold their lands for future advances in prices and could not afford to do so and pay the heavy taxes which drainage would necessitate. This meant an inevitable clash. Mr. Coston represented the progressive element in the original litigation in which the constitutionality of the drainage laws was at issue and secured from the supreme court a sweeping decision upholding the act of 1909 and giving a broad interpretation under which it has been possible to install the magnificent system of drainage in Mississippi county and later in the other counties of the St. Francis Basin. Now you cannot put your foot down in Mississippi county without stepping on soil that has been benefited by drainage districts which Mr. Coston has organized as attorney for property owners."

In 1920 Judge Coston was candidate for the office of chief justice of the supreme court of Arkansas, but he was actively in the race only eight weeks and was defeated by Judge McCulloch, who had been before the public sixteen years and is conceded to be one of the ablest jurists in the south. Although when admitted to the bar Judge Coston was well grounded in his profession, he has remained a constant student of it and has one of the most complete and largest law libraries in the entire south, numbering some forty-five hundred volumes. He is exceptionally proud of his collection of books and erected his own office building so that he would have room enough to accommodate his library.

On the 10th of October, 1894, was celebrated the marriage of Judge Coston and Miss Cora Goodrich of Fayetteville, Tennessee, and to their union four children have been born: James Goodrich, who is a graduate of the University of Michigan and a member of the legal firm of Coston & Coston of Blytheville; Sarah Clark, who is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and is now teaching in the Osceola high school; Mary Hale and Anna Lee, both of whom are graduates of the Osceola high school.

Fraternally Judge Coston is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Royal Arcanum. He is an exemplary member of the Masonic order, belonging to Monroe Lodge, No. 27, F. & A. M. The Judge has always been active in educational affairs and for some six years was a member of the school board. He is likewise active in civic affairs and although the greater part of his time and attention is devoted to his profession, he is never too busy to give his aid in the furtherance of any movement he deems essential to the general welfare. During the World war Judge Coston was active in every Liberty Loan and Red Cross drive and was chairman for the lower portion of his county for the sale of War Savings Stamps. He gave two days a week, from March to October, to the latter work, averaging two speeches a day. A man of high ideals and lofty aims Judge Coston is well calculated to inspire all with his splendid character and manly qualities. Every man who knows him is his friend and no man stands higher in this community for integrity and sterling worth. He is readily conceded by his professional brethren one of the ablest attorneys in the south, and Osceola is indeed fortunate in having him for a citizen.

CHARLES BOOKER THWEATT.

Charles Booker Thweatt, attorney at law, who has engaged in the active practice of his profession for fourteen years and who is also numbered among the lawmakers of Arkansas, having served as a member of the general assembly of this state, was born in Camden, Ouachita county, Arkansas, July 22, 1885, and is descended from one of the old and prominent southern families. His grandfather, Nicholas Booker Thweatt, was born in Tennessee and in early manhood removed to Mississippi, where he was residing at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, when he joined the Confederate army. Early in his service he was incapacitated for active field duty by illness, but became a noted spy for the Confederate army, and in that connection had many narrow escapes. His son, Joseph Gustavus Thweatt, was born on a plantation in Tallahatchie county, Mississippi, in 1852, and in young manhood took up the study of law, qualifying for the bar. He became a resident of Arkansas in 1865 and now makes his home at DeValls Bluff, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession, having devoted his entire life to the work of the courts. He enjoys an enviable reputation as an able advocate and safe counselor and his clientage is large and gratifying. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he has served as a member of the state legislature. In Des Arc, this state, Mr. Thweatt was united in marriage to Miss Maggie McLauchlan, who was born in Kentucky in 1860. Her father was a soldier of the Confederate army, serving as a captain with Forrest's cavalry troops. To Mr. and Mrs. Joseph G. Thweatt have been born seven sons and two daughters, of whom one daughter and three sons died in infancy, while four sons and one daughter are yet living.

Charles B. Thweatt, the third in order of birth in this family, pursued his education in the public schools of DeValls Bluff, his parents removing to that place during his early boyhood. In 1900 he matriculated in Hendrix College at Conway, Arkansas, where he pursued his studies until 1903 and then entered Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, where he was graduated in 1905 with the Bachelor of Arts degree. Desiring to become a member of the bar, he then took up the study of law and won his LL. B. degree upon graduation from Vanderbilt University with the class of 1907. Through the intervening period of fourteen years he has given his attention to law practice and has made steady progress, his constantly increasing ability bringing him to the front in this connection. He is always loyal to the interests of his clients yet never forgets that he owes a still higher allegiance to the majesty of the law. His ability and devotion to the public welfare led to his election for legislative honors, for in 1911 he was chosen to represent Prairie county in the general assembly, of which he remained a member for two years, during which period he gave most thoughtful and earnest consideration to all the vital questions which came up for settlement. In politics he has always been a democrat and several times has served as a member of the democratic central committee of Prairie county.

In 1917 Mr. Thweatt responded to the country's call for troops and enlisted for service in the World war, his connection with the army covering a year and a half. He was made a first lieutenant but was not assigned to duty in that connection. During his college days he became a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon, a college fraternity. He belongs to the Masonic lodge and he is well known as a member of the Quapaw and Boathouse Clubs. He is a representative of one of the old and well known southern families and has held high an untarnished family name, his life record at all times measuring up to advanced standards of manhood and citizenship.

R. L. McCOY.

R. L. McCoy of Prairie Grove, who for a quarter of a century has been engaged in the produce business, his thoroughness and close application in all that he undertakes bringing him a substantial measure of success, was born on a farm north of the city in which he still resides, his natal year being 1870. Through several generations the family has lived in the south. William McCoy, the grandfather, was a native of Tennessee and at an early day came to Washington county, Arkansas. His son, J. M. McCoy, was born in Tennessee and for many years followed farming in northwestern Arkansas. At the time of the Civil war, however, he put aside all business interests and personal consideration and joined the army, serving for four years with the Confederate forces. He participated in the battle of Prairie Grove and on one occasion he was captured and held for some time as a prisoner of war. His political support was always given to the democratic party and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal church. In early manhood he wedded Mary Pettegrew, a native of Washington county, Arkansas, and a daughter of Charles Pettegrew, who was one of the pioneer settlers of this county. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy became the parents of seven children, of whom three are living: Ed, who follows farming; R. L.; and Mathews M., who is engaged in the produce business in Westville, Arkansas.

In the attainment of his education R. L. McCoy attended the public schools of Prairie Grove and then started out in the business world as a farmer. He had been reared to the work of the fields, early assisting in the tasks of plowing, planting and harvesting. For some time he continued to engage in the tilling of the soil and then about twenty-five years ago turned his attention to the produce business, in which he has since been engaged. He buys all kinds of produce and deals to a large degree in apples. He has made a success of his business and is widely known among the farmers and fruit raisers of this section by reason of the large purchases which he makes. In all business transactions he is thoroughly reliable, as well as progressive, and upon these qualities he has built his success. He also has an interest in the Farmers State Bank at Prairie Grove, in which he is a director and he is likewise identified with drug stores in Prairie Grove and in Springdale. He owns an interest in the Southern Mercantile Company and also in the mill at Prairie Grove. His business thus covers a wide scope, indicating his resourcefulness and initiative and constituting an important source of commercial progress.

In 1901 Mr. McCoy was married to Miss Pearl Rich, who was born in Washington county, Arkansas, a daughter of A. B. Rich, a farmer, stock raiser and merchant, who is now living retired, making his home in Prairie Grove. Mr. McCoy and his wife have three children, two of whom are living: Eva and R. L., both in school. The parents belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. McCoy is identified with the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a democrat and has served as treasurer of his town. He is never remiss in the duties of citizenship, yet prefers not to hold office but to concentrate his efforts upon his business affairs and his wise management, keen sagacity and unfaltering diligence have been dominant elements in the attainment of his present-day prosperity.

Arbuckle was born in Scott county, Indiana, while his wife was a native of Hamilton county, that state. Their marriage was celebrated at Tipton and they continued to reside in Indiana for some years. He was in the public health service during the period of the World war.

Dr. Cunning is widely known in Masonic circles. He has taken the York Rite degrees, becoming a member of the chapter, council and Knights Templar Commandery and he is also a Mystic Shriner, having crossed the sands of the desert to Al-Amin Temple. He is a most loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft and he is always a consistent supporter of any cause which he espouses.

C. ELBERT GARRETT.

For nearly a century members of the Garrett family have contributed to the development and upbuilding of Arkansas, being numbered among its earliest pioneer settlers, and as head of one of the leading manufacturing enterprises of Russellville, C. Elbert Garrett has become widely and favorably known throughout the state. He was born in Clarksville, Arkansas, July 4, 1888, and is a son of Felix and Mattie (Mann) Garrett, both natives of Johnson county, this state. The father first engaged in merchandising, later turning his attention to farming, and is now interested in stock raising, while he is also connected with the bottling works at Clarksville, where he resides, having won a substantial competence through unceasing industry and capable management. He is a Presbyterian in religious faith and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias, while his political support is given to the democratic party. His father, William Garrett, was a native of Virginia, whence he removed to Tennessee, and in 1826 he came to Arkansas, casting in his lot with its earliest settlers. He took up a homestead at Morrison Bluff and then went to the western part of Johnson county, where he also homesteaded, in addition to which he purchased land, and one of his sons is still residing on the property. He reared a family of twenty-two children, consisting of eighteen sons and four daughters. The maternal grandfather was also a pioneer of Johnson county and served as one of its first sheriffs. To Mr. and Mrs. Felix Garrett were born eleven children, of whom ten survive, six sons and four daughters, namely: Edward, who is connected with the bottling works at Paris, Arkansas; Mrs. Carl Laster, a resident of Corona, California; Lucy and Bessie, at home; Roy, who is identified with the McKennon House Furnishing Company at Clarksville; C. Elbert, of this review; Joel, who is engaged in the motion picture business at Clarksville; Eugene and Pauline, twins, who are residing at home; and Felix, who is employed in the Palace Drug Store at Clarksville.

After completing a course in the high school at Clarksville, C. Elbert Garrett became a student in Cumberland College of that place and his initial business experience was obtained in the local railroad office, where he remained for one and a half years. He then secured a position in an ice cream and bottling plant at Clarksville and was also identified with a similar enterprise in Kansas. In February, 1917, he came to Russellville and with a borrowed capital of seventeen hundred dollars started to manufacture ice cream and also engaged in the butter business. In February, 1920, he organized a stock company with a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars, all of which is paid up. They make both ice cream and butter of the highest grade, their business being conducted in a modern brick building, and in their manufacturing operations they employ the most advanced and progressive methods, their plant being a model of cleanliness and neatness. Their products are known as the Purity brand and have enjoyed a wide sale, a large quantity of ice cream finding a market in Russellville and between the points of Conway and Mulberry, while their butter is shipped all over the state. Broad experience has given Mr. Garrett a comprehensive knowledge of the business and the success of the enterprise is due in large measure to his initiative spirit, administrative ability and unwearied efforts.

In January, 1917, Mr. Garrett was united in marriage to Miss Anna Jones, a native of Dardanelle, Arkansas, and a daughter of A. L. Jones, a well known farmer and stock raiser of Yell county, Arkansas. They are members of the Presbyterian church and fraternally Mr. Garrett is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of which he is now an esteemed leading knight, and with the Masons, belonging to the lodge, chapter, council, commandery, consistory and Shrine. He is an energetic and progressive young business man whose present success is the result of intense application, ceaseless watchfulness of opportunity and a readiness to assume responsibility, and in the attainment of individual prosperity he has also materially advanced the welfare of Russellville, which has greatly benefited through his progressive spirit.

VIRGIL W. ST. JOHN.

Virgil W. St. John, editor and owner of the Mena Star and a prominent figure in the journalistic circles of Arkansas, was born at Albert Lea, Minnesota, October 24, 1865, and is a son of Andrew W. and Nellie (Hunt) St. John. The father was born in Chautauqua, New York, February 29, 1840, and died January 23, 1907. He went to Albert Lea, Minnesota, when a youth of seventeen years and later he engaged in newspaper publication in Carthage, Missouri, in 1880, publishing the Carthage Press from that year until 1896. At this time he came to Mena, Arkansas, and here founded The Star in association with his sons, Virgil W. and R. R. St. John. With this paper he was connected to the time of his death and he was also largely interested in horticultural pursuits. He was vice president of the State Horticultural Society at the time of his demise and died while presiding over the convention of the society at Clarksville in the absence of the president. A decade and a half later The Star presenting a picture of A. W. St. John, the founder of the paper said: "Fifteen years ago today the founder of The Star laid down the work that he loved—his heart ceased to beat. Those who knew him best know that the end came as he desired, while with the strength of his manhood and mind he was doing his best to serve humanity—the greatest impulse of his life." His record was, indeed, one that constituted a valuable contribution to the progress and upbuilding of community and commonwealth. In 1897 he organized the Polk County Fair Association and was its president from the time of its organization until his death in 1907. He organized the Commercial Club of Mena and was its president from its organization until his death. He manifested a deep and helpful interest in everything that had to do with the progress and improvement of the city and of Polk county. He was greatly loved and respected, enjoying the high esteem, confidence and goodwill of all who knew him. He had served his country as a soldier in the Civil war, joining the Boys in Blue of Company C, Fifth Regiment of Minnesota Volunteers, in 1861. He was with his command until invalided home because of illness, in 1863. Later he participated in the warfare against the Sioux Indians, who had perpetrated horrible massacres on the frontier of Minnesota. Andrew W. St. John was married twice. He wedded Nellie Hunt at Albert Lea, Minnesota, and they became the parents of two children: Virgil W. and Nellie Grace. Having lost his first wife he married again and his widow now resides in Los Angeles, California. There were two children of that marriage, one of whom is living, Roy R., who is now engaged in the insurance business in Mena. The father was an exemplary follower of the Masonic fraternity and he also belonged to the Grand Army of the Republic, serving at one time as commander of John C. Black Post at Carthage, Missouri.

Virgil W. St. John was educated in the schools of Carthage, where he lived to the age of twenty-four years. When a lad of fifteen he became identified with a newspaper at that place, known as the Carthage Press, and worked in the office most of the time until he left Carthage, after which he was employed on the Kansas City Journal and on the Kansas City Star, most of the time until 1907. He had an interest in the Mena Star from its founding and took up his abode in this city at the death of his father. In 1910 he purchased his brother's interest in the paper, of which he is now sole owner and editor. He has a large brick building, in which he publishes The Star and he is now building an addition thereto. His plant is first class in every particular, being supplied with the latest modern machinery of a printing office and he has a splendidly equipped job printing department, which draws business from several adjoining states. The State Press Association gave his paper the position of leadership among the county papers of Arkansas, while the Oregon State Press Association proclaims The Mena Star to be one of the nineteen best county papers in the United States. Recently the department of Journalism of the University of Arkansas, placed The Star at the head as the best county paper in Arkansas. The St. Johns, A. W. St. John & Sons and now V. W. St. John, have issued the daily Star for twenty-three consecutive years without missing an issue, a record probably very rare in cities under five thousand population.

In 1883 Mr. St. John was married to Miss Mary Belle Bowman, who was born in Carthage, Missouri, and they have become parents of three children: Loraine, now in Joplin, Missouri, is teaching music and conducts a musical kindergarten; Ernest W., who is in business with his father, is master of the Masonic lodge and eminent commander of the Knights Templar Commandery; and Henry B., engaged in the automobile business in Carthage, Missouri, has made notable success for one of his years, being now but twenty-eight years of age. In 1908 Virgil W. St. John was married to Etta McN. Payne, at Mena, who was well known in the city. She departed this life, and he later married Leila Nichols, a young woman born and reared in Polk county and related to many of the best known families of that section.

In his religious faith Mr. St. John is a Presbyterian and fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. In politics he is a democrat and has always published his paper as an independent journal. He has served as chairman of the executive committee of the Commercial Club for several years and he is keenly interested in all things that pertain to the advancement and welfare of town and county. He was chairman of the county council of defense during the World war and there is no plan or project instituted for the benefit and upbuilding of this section of the state that does not receive his hearty endorsement and active support.

RT. REV. IGNATIUS CONRAD, C. G. B.

Rt. Rev. Ignatius Conrad, who became the first abbot upon call of the community of New Subiaco and has since labored untiringly for his abbey and his college, was born on the 15th of November, 1846, in the town of Auw, in the Cranton Aargau, Switzerland. His father, Johann Conrad, was a native of the same locality, born in March, 1805, and there he made his home, devoting his life to the occupation of farming. He rendered military service to his country as a private in the Swiss Guard from his twenty-first year to the age of forty and he was a follower of the conservative party in his native land. On the 7th of January, 1832, in the town of Auw, he married Gertrude Kueng, who was born there February 16, 1810. They became the parents of fifteen children, twelve sons and three daughters, of whom three of the children died in infancy, while four of the sons followed in the father's business footsteps, becoming farmers, while one was a statesman and five entered the priesthood. The mother died January 14, 1881, while the father's death occurred May 22, 1891. Their first born child, Placidus Conrad, entered the Abbey of Engelberg after his college studies at Schwytz and Engelberg and received the name Frowin. He finished his philosophical and theological studies at Einsiedeln and was ordained a priest in 1856. He then served as professor and prefect at Engelberg, where he built a new college. From 1868 until May, 1873, he was pastor of the Engelberg parish and at the request of Bishop J. J. Hogan of St. Joseph, Missouri, he was sent to the United States and founded the Abbey of Conception, Missouri, being named its first abbot by Pope Leo XIII in 1882. This office he still holds, although eighty-nine years of age. The thirteenth child of the family was Peter Conrad, who pursued his studies as jurist at the Universities of Heidelberg, and Munich, Germany, and at Paris, France. He served his Canton Aargau after a very successful examination before the state authorities, so continuing until his death in 1914. He was chosen seven times for the office of landammann, or governor of his canton. Burkard Conrad entered the O. F. M. (Cap.) Switzerland and Aloys and Fridolin the O. S. B. at Conception, Missouri, as P. Pius and P. John Ev., respectively.

The eleventh child of the family, Nicolaus Conrad, entered the Abbey O. S. B. of M. Einsiedeln in 1868 and was ordained to the priesthood on the 17th of September, 1871. He served as professor and missionary until 1875 and was then sent to his brother at Conception, Missouri, where he assisted in the mission. In May, 1878, he was called by Bishop J. J. Hogan to St. Joseph, as pastor of the Cathedral parish and there labored until he was called by the community of New Subiaco to serve as its first abbot. In May, 1898, he blessed the ground where the abbey stands and drove the first spade into the ground for the excavation for its fundament. In the year 1921 he had the pleasure of celebrating his golden jubilee as priest, with feelings of gratitude to God for the prosperity of his abbey and college and ever mindful of the noble and untiring cooperation of his faithful confreres. He is now in his seventy-sixth year, devoting his entire time, as he has for more than a half century, to the work of the church and the firm establishment of the Catholic faith in the district in which he labors.

CONSTANT P. WILSON, JR. M. D.

Dr. Constant P. Wilson, Jr., who for eight years has been engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Fort Smith following thorough college training and broad hospital experience in Pennsylvania, was born June 17, 1882, in the city which is still his home, and is a son of Constant P. and Nellie (Collins) Wilson. The father is also a native of Fort Smith and a son of Thomas E. Wilson, who came to this city in 1835. He was then connected with the U. S. A. troops and drove through from Russellville, Logan county, Kentucky. His father had been a soldier of the Revolutionary war and Thomas E. Wilson became a representative of the commissary department of the regular army, while later he was a sutler with the troops and was usually known as Colonel Wilson. He was associated with Major Rector in the operation of a line of boats on the Mississippi and mention of them is found in Featherstone Hough's "Travels Through the Southern States," published by Murray & Company of Albemarle street, London, England, in 1842. In this volume Featherstone Hough ridiculed Colonel Wilson and Major Rector, who, displeased with the account written, bought up all the copies of the book and destroyed them. However, Senator Clark had a copy in Washington, D. C., containing the humorous account of the two men. In the maternal line, too, the ancestry was represented in connection with the military history of the country as a representative of the commissary, for Mr. Collins, grandfather of Dr. Wilson of this review, furnished the Confederate troops west of the Mississippi with their beef cattle. His father, Constant P. Wilson, Sr., was a soldier in the Baxter and Brooks skirmish. He is still very active at the age of seventy-one years and is engaged in the cultivation of one thousand acres of land.

Dr. Wilson and three sisters are the survivors of a family of six children. In the attainment of his education he was graduated from the high school of Fort Smith with the class of 1902 and from the University of Arkansas with the Bachelor of Science degree in 1906. He then entered the University of Pennsylvania, in which he pursued the regular course, winning his M. D. degree in 1910. The value of his professional training was tested by his service as interne in the Philadelphia General Hospital and afterward as interne at Phoenixville, Pennsylvania. He was also senior resident physician at the Philadelphia Hospital for Contagious Diseases, having charge of the diphtheria department. His early professional experience was thus of a broad, varied and valuable character and constituted an excellent foundation on which to build success following his return to his native city. He opened an office in Fort Smith in 1913 and his record was contrary to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for through the succeeding four years he was accorded a large private practice and also served as city physician, as city bacteriologist and as police surgeon.

In April, 1917, Dr. Wilson volunteered for service in the World war, reporting at Fort Riley on the 27th of August. He was ordered to Jefferson Barracks on the 26th of October, 1917, for duty in the Laboratory Post Hospital and there remained until September, 1918, when he was ordered overseas in charge of the laboratory for Base Hospital No. 131, being commissioned a first lieutenant. Later he was advanced to the rank of captain and following his discharge received a commission as major in the Reserve Corps. He did not get to cross to France, for just at the time that he was to sail his wife died—a victim of the influenza epidemic—and he secured a leave of absence to return home. Later, instead of being allowed to join his hospital in France, he was kept on the coast, where he had manifold duties, receiving his discharge November 30, 1919. He then returned to Fort Smith, where he has since practiced. He is an expert bacteriologist and in connection with his scientific work of that character he engages in the general practice of medicine and surgery. He has recently been engaged in recruiting citizens of Fort Smith between the ages of sixteen and thirty-five years for a month's military training at Camp Pike, Arkansas.

Dr. Wilson's wife was in her maidenhood Miss Lucy Lewis, a daughter of an Episcopal minister of Philadelphia. She died leaving three children: Lucy Lewis, Constant Penn (III) and Jane Collins. Dr. Wilson is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a past president of the University of Pennsylvania Southern Club and he belongs to the Alpha Kappa Kappa, a medical fraternity, and the Sigma Alpha Epsilon, a college fraternity, also to the Theta Nu Epsilon, an inter fraternity. He is identified with the Sons of Confederate Veterans and also with the Sons of the American Revolution. Dr. Wilson took the examination before the state board and holds a license to practice in the states of Arkansas, Maryland, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. He is a past vice president of the James Tyson Medical Society, a member of the Sebastian County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. A laudable ambition has prompted him to attain the highest degree of efficiency possible in his chosen calling and a broad spirit of humanitarianism also actuates him in his chosen life work.

WILEY D. PLANT.

For many years Wiley D. Plant was actively engaged in merchandising but is now living retired in Bradford, enjoying in well earned rest the fruits of his former toil. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in what was then Conway but is now Faulkner county, January 19, 1847. From pioneer times the family has been associated with the history of Arkansas and at a more remote period with the history of South Carolina. The grandfather, William Plant, was born in the latter state and on coming to Arkansas settled near Quitman, where he followed farming. He died at the age of about ninety years. His son, Hiller Plant, was born in Kentucky and in Mississippi was united in marriage to Miss Mercy Tatum, who was a native of Mississippi and a daughter of Daniel Tatum, a large landowner of that state, in which he spent his entire life. Mr. and Mrs. Hiller Plant removed from Kentucky to what was then Conway county, Arkansas, in 1847, making the trip overland with ox team. Mr. Plant entered a claim from the government and began to clear away the forest in order to carry on the active work of the farm. He was among the first settlers of that section. The trail to Little Rock was marked on the trees and thither he went to purchase supplies, also trading at times at Jacksonport and at Batesville. At night they had to drive their calves home in order to protect them from the wolves. There were also many bears in the section in which they lived and deer were plentiful. They experienced all of the hardships and privations of pioneer life, and it required an entire week to make the trip to Little Rock and return, for they had no well marked road, following only the trail. Mr. Plant often hauled a load of cotton and deer skins to Little Rock, where he made a sale and then returned with supplies for his family. He had to take his corn to the Red river in order to have it ground in the grist mill there. This was a distance of thirty-five miles and he had to carry a bushel at a time on horseback. In 1857 he removed to Jackson county, Arkansas, settling in Barren township near Denmark, where he purchased a quarter section of land, on which was a log cabain, while a small portion of the land on Glaze creek had been cleared. He at once resolutely set to work to clear and develop the remainder and devoted his entire life to the task of cultivating that farm. He was born in 1812 and died at the age of sixty-eight years, while his widow died in 1901 at the advanced age of ninety years. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Plant belonged to the Masonic Lodge, while his political support was given to the democratic party. His family numbered ten children: Andrew W., who died prior to the Civil war; Robert L., Mary Ann, Nancy Reed, Sarah F. and Charles F., all deceased; Wiley D., of this review; Harriett E. and Susan, also deceased; and Green Lee, a farmer of Bradford.

Wiley D. Plant mastered the early branches of learning while pursuing his studies at one of the old-time subscription schools which met in a log building. His educational opportunities were limited, however, but in the school of experience he has learned many valuable lessons. He attempted to enlist for service in the Confederate army although only fourteen years of age at the outbreak of the war. He rode a mule and was endeavoring to reach the Confederate line but ran onto the Federal picket and returned home. It was after this that he attended school under his brother-in-law, George M. Smith, and aided in splitting the logs which were used for benches. Turning his attention to farming he was thus engaged for a year or two, and in 1870 he took up his abode in Bradford, at which time the Iron Mountain Railroad was planning to extend its line through the town. Here he opened a little store and in 1872 established a general merchandise business. In the intervening period he has built three store buildings and developed his business until it became one of large and substantial proportions. He has also dealt in real estate and at one time he owned eight hundred acres of land on the river bottom, purchasing three hundred acres for three dollars and fifty cents per acre. He still owns this property and from it derives a substantial annual income, but in 1903 he disposed of his mercantile interests due to his health. He now raises hogs for the market and also handles a good grade of live stock. In business affairs his judgment has ever been sound, his enterprise unfaltering and his reliability unquestioned.

In 1882 Mr. Plant was married to Miss Sarah E. Moore, a native of Arkansas, and they have become parents of four children: Bessie, the wife of C. N. Finn, of Little Rock; William D., deceased; Clifton, of Fort Bayard, New Mexico, who was in the army during the World war; and Lelia, the wife of Herbert Whitley, of Bradford. The mother, who was a consistent member of the Missionary Baptist church, died in July, 1900.

Mr. Plant belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his political endorsement is given to the democratic party. He has ever commanded the respect and confidence of his fellowmen, and his life has constituted a valuable contribution to the steady growth and development of the community in which he lives. He is therefore numbered among its valued and representative citizens and well deserves mention in the history of Arkansas.

VAL LUTEN EASON, M. D.

Though young in years, Dr. Val Luten Eason has had wide experience in his chosen profession and ranks today among the most capable of the young physicians and surgeons of North Little Rock. He was born in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, in 1894 and is a son of Isaac N. and Mary (Luten) Eason. His father was for many years a merchant but is now engaged in the transportation business in Little Rock. He was born in Pine Bluff, his people, however, having been among the earliest settlers of Illinois. The Lutens are of an old pioneer family of Kentucky whose members were mostly physicians, Dr. Val L. Eason being of the seventh generation of the family to engage in the practice of medicine.

Dr. Eason was educated in the graded and high schools of Little Rock and also attended Hendrix College at Conway, Arkansas, the University of Arkansas and the Kansas City College of Medicine and Surgery, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1919. Having thus thoroughly qualified for his chosen life work, he began practice in Kansas City even prior to his graduation, acting as plant surgeon for Swift & Company and continuing to fill that position after he had won his diploma. In 1920 he returned to Little Rock, where he has since practiced. He specializes to some extent in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, but the larger part of his practice is along the line of minor surgery. He is the local surgeon of the Missouri Pacific Railroad and is enjoying a steadily growing general practice.

During the World war Dr. Eason was a member of the United States Public Health Service, being commissioned a first lieutenant. He served from 1917 until 1919, doing active work in that connection. No young man in Little Rock stands higher in his profession and he is utilizing every means to advance his knowledge and promote his efficiency. He belongs to the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association and through the proceedings of these bodies keeps in touch with the trend of modern professional thought, research and investigation. In 1921 he removed his office to North Little Rock, being now located at the corner of Fourth and Main streets.

In his poliical views, Dr. Eason is a republican, giving stalwart support to the principles of the party. Fraternally he is a Mason and an Elk and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist church. His life has been guided by high and honorable principles, his course characterized by worthy motives, and he is fast winning for himself a most creditable place in professional circles.

JUDGE MUMFORD A. AUSTIN.

Among those whom the citizens of Pine Bluff honor in cherished memories is Judge Mumford A. Austin, who for many years was a distinguished representative of the bar of Pine Bluff and of Arkansas and exerted a no less widely felt influence over the political history of the commonwealth. Nature was generous with her endowments to Judge Austin and he used his talents wisely and well, at all times recognizing the obligations and meeting the duties that devolved upon him, while in the spirit of kindliness he often extended a helping hand to his fellowmen. The strain which he put upon his once robust constitution at length made itself felt and he was obliged to retire from the active practice of his profession. Later he went to Jacksonville, Florida, where he was planning to erect a home and remove his family when death suddenly called him. He was a native of North Carolina but had spent much of his life in Arkansas. His birth occurred in Monroe county of the former state, August 12, 1857, his parents being Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Austin, who came with their family to Arkansas about 1867, settling on a farm in the southeastern section of the state. The youthful experiences of Judge Austin were those of the farm bred boy. He attended the public schools and worked with his father in the fields, not infrequently riding into town in a wagon drawn by oxen. There were hardships and privations to be endured in those early days but he resolutely met these with the same courage and determination that characterized him in his later career. Having reached adult age, he determined to devote his life to the practice of law rather than to agricultural pursuits and directed his studies to that end. He became a student in the Emory and Henry College of Virginia, thus laying in his literary training a broad foundation upon which to build the superstructure of professional knowledge. He studied law for some time under the preceptorship of Carlton & McCain, well known attorneys of Pine Bluff, and made rapid progress in his absorption and assimilation of the science of jurisprudence, being admitted to practice at the Arkansas bar in 1880.

Immediately afterward Judge Austin opened an office in Pine Bluff and while advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, only a comparatively brief period elapsed ere he had become well established as an able attorney with large practice. Steadily he advanced until he occupied a place in the front rank of the leading lawyers of Arkansas and became associated in his practice with some of the most eminent members of the bar in the south, including Judge W. E. Hemingway, John M. Clayton, John A. Williams and the Hon. S. M. Taylor. Afterward he became a partner of M. Danaher and the firm of Austin & Danaher was regarded as one of the most prominent and distinguished in the state. Judge Austin was connected with much notable litigation of a varied character. For many years he was attorney for the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company and he acted as counsel for a number of important corporations and large private interests. As a trial lawyer, too, he displayed marked power and courts and juries listened to him with attention, while his clear presentation of a cause seldom failed to win for him the verdict desired. It was as a civil rather than a criminal lawyer, however, that Judge Austin won his well merited reputation. He possessed an intimate knowledge of the finer points of the law, a power of clear and logical analysis and strong and direct reasoning. His colleagues and contemporaries in the profession appreciated his cooperation and feared his opposition, knowing that no point ever seemed to escape him. He seemed to marshal his evidence with the precision of a military commander and every element in his case was given its due prominence, thus bringing into proportionate relationship the prominent points upon which the decision of every case finally turns.

On the 6th of November, 1881, Judge Austin was united in marriage to Miss Mattie Keeler, who was born and reared in Jefferson county, Arkansas, a daughter of George W. and Mary Anne Keeler of Pine Bluff. There were two children of that marriage: Boyd, who died in childhood and Bettie, who is now the wife of F. F. McNeny of Dallas, Texas. The wife and mother departed this life in 1890. On the 21st of December, 1903, Judge Austin was married to Miss Estelle Buckner, who was born and reared in Norfolk, Virginia, and is a daughter of Robert L. and Mary Anne Buckner of that place. The children of this marriage are two sons: Richard and Jac. Mr. Austin always found his greatest happiness at his own fireside and counted no effort or sacrifice on his part too great if it would enhance the welfare of his wife and children. He cared nothing for club life, nor did he desire to enter upon political activity as an officeholder. He was always a stanch advocate of democratic principles and worked earnestly for their adoption but consistently refused to accept public office. His attention was given to his professional duties and his rise in that connection was rapid, continuous in its progress and conspicuous in its achievements. His devotion to the interests of his clients was one of his marked characteristics and for many years he stood conspicuously forth as one of the ablest representatives of the Jefferson county bar. It was with the keenest regret that many of his clients were forced to relinquish his services when ill health warned him to put aside the cares and duties of the profession. During the last eighteen months of his life he spent his time largely in Florida, where the climate seemed to be beneficial. His wife was with him during much of that period and then they returned to Pine Bluff, with the expectation of a little later making Jacksonville their home. Mr. Austin went to that city to supervise the erection of a residence, while Mrs. Austin remained to care for their interests in Pine Bluff, preparatory to closing their home here and removing to Florida. While they were thus separated the death angel called Mr. Austin, his remains being brought back to Pine Bluff for interment in Bellwood cemetery. He numbered his friends by the score. No boundaries of party, religious creed or social status determined his regard of his fellowmen. His criterion was the true worth of the individual and all who knew him were proud to claim his friendship and felt honored by his acquaintance. It was on the 27th of July, 1912, that the word "finis" was written to his life record, but though a decade has since passed his memory is yet cherished and honored by those who knew him.

WILLIAM BURT BROOKS.

The elemental strength of his character and his constantly developing powers have brought William Burt Brooks to the front as one of the leading lawyers of Little Rock. Actuated by a laudable ambition he made splendid use of his time, talents and opportunities in early manhood and at length qualified for the bar, since which time he has made steady advancement and today enjoys a large and distinctively representative clientage, while in the presentation of his cases he shows clear reasoning, logical deduction and marked strength in presenting his contention.

Mr. Brooks is a native of St. Louis, Missouri. He was born on the 24th of May, 1870, his parents being Tinley M. and Mary (Burt) Brooks, the former a native of Missouri, while the latter was born in Louisville, Kentucky. He is also a grandson of the late Hon. Joseph Brooks, who was for many years a most prominent factor in the public life of Arkansas and was one of the principals in the famous Brooks-Baxter controversy of 1873. Of him a contemporary historian has said: "He was a man of strong personality, fearless in courage, powerful in debate, with a voice and physical strength unwearing in duration." Tinley M. Brooks gave his attention during the greater part of his life to the postal service. He remained for many years one of the representative citizens of Little Rock, where he died in 1887. His wife was for more than a quarter of a century one of the ablest of the public school teachers of Arkansas and other western states and one historian has said of her: "She is a woman of most gracious personality and in her home city is held in affectionate regard by all who have come within the sphere of her influence. She is a devout communicant of the Protestant Episcopal church and has been an active and popular factor in connection with the best social life of Little Rock."

W. Burt Brooks became a resident of Little Rock, by the removal of the family from Missouri to this city, when but two years of age. Here he pursued a public schoool course and afterward continued his studies in the Methodist College, which was located on Lincoln avenue. The urge of necessity combined with a laudable ambition caused him early to undertake the task of contributing to his support, which he did by delivering papers both morning and evening while still a school boy. This same spirit of industry, energy and enterprise has characterized him throughout his life. When he was a youth of seventeen he entered upon an apprenticeship in the machine shop of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad at Little Rock and closely applied himself to the mastery of the task assigned him, so that within three years he had thoroughly qualified as a mechanical engineer. In 1891 he again became a resident of his native city of St. Louis and there found employment at his trade, while at the same time he attended the manual training school of Washington University and he likewise did important work as a general contractor along the lines of mechanical engineering. It was his desire, however, to devote his life to a professional career and while employed at his trade in Little Rock he gave his attention during evening hours to the study of law as a member of night classes in the law department of the University of Arkansas, thus pursuing his studies whenever opportunity permitted. He at length reached his graduation and completed his course with first honors as a member of the class of 1901, at which time the Bachelor of Laws degree was conferred upon him. Immediately afterward he was admitted to practice at the state bar and since that time has followed his profession in Little Rock, where he is now a member of the law firm of Carmichael & Brooks. As a lawyer he is sound, clear minded and well trained, is felicitous and clear in argument, thoroughly in earnest, full of the vigor of conviction, never abusive of his adversaries, imbued with highest courtesy and yet a foe worthy of the steel of the most able opponent. Aside from his professional interest he is a director of the Central Heating Company.

On the 28th of November, 1894, Mr. Brooks was married to Miss Oriette Morris, who was born in Lowell, Massachusetts, in September, 1876, and is a daughter of Commodore Decatur and Sarah V. (Nesmith) Morris, who for some time were residents of Little Rock, Arkansas. The father died in 1905 and the mother departed this life in 1920. To Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have been born three children: Joseph, whose birth occurred June 11, 1907; Robert Morris, who was born June 21, 1909; and Mary Burt, born June 17, 1912.

Mr. Brooks is both a York and Scottish Rite Mason, loyally following the teachings and purposes of the craft. That the interests of Mr. and Mrs. Brooks center in those activities which have their root in the better things of life is indicated in the fact that the former is a member of the Protestant Episcopal church and the latter of the Second Presbyterian church. In his political views Mr. Brooks is a democrat and from 1905 until 1910 he filled the office of city attorney. He was elected to serve in the lower house of the state legislature from 1903 until 1905 and again was elected a member of the general assembly in 1917. He gave his attention closely to the vital questions and problems coming up for settlement and his aid and influence were ever on the side of advancement, reform and improvement. He labors effectively for the public welfare in both community and commonwealth and those who know nim—and his acquaintance is an extensive one—place him with the representative men of the capital city, honoring him no less for his sterling personal worth than for his professional attainments.

WILLIAM H. MORTON.

Washington county numbers among its native sons, William H. Morton, who is postmaster of Fayetteville and a representative citizen of that community. His birth occurred on the 28th of July, 1861, a son of James and Harriett L. (Tollett) Morton, both natives of Washington county, where they were born, reared and died. The father died in November, 1885, at the age of fifty-four years, while the mother's demise occurred in 1905, at the age of seventy-two. Three children were born to their union: William H., whose name initiates this review; Rowland M., a farmer and canner near Fayetteville; and James E., farming near Prairie Grove. The family were reared in the faith of the Presbyterian church and the father was a consistent member of the democratic party. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having volunteered his services in defense of the Confederacy upon the outbreak of the conflict, and he was captured at Prairie Grove and imprisoned for two years. His health was greatly impaired by the long confinement and resulted in his death some time afterward. He was a son of William and Rachael (Crawford) Morton, the former a native of North Carolina, where his birth occurred in 1804, and the latter also a native of that state, where she was born in 1803. In 1830 they came to Arkansas and locating in Washington county they resided there until their death, the father dying in 1880 and the mother in 1877. The maternal grandparents, Henry and Eliza (Brown) Tollett were natives of Virginia. They came to Arkansas in 1819 and located in Washington county in 1829. The grandfather served in the Black Hawk Indian Wars and in the War of 1812. His death occurred in 1871 at the age of seventy-eight years, and his wife died in 1885, when ninety years of age.

In the acquirement of an education, William H. Morton attended the common schools of Washington county, and then enrolled in the State University of Arkansas. In 1920 he was admitted as a member of the alumni association of that institution. His first occupation upon putting his textbooks aside was as a farmer and he followed agricultural pursuits until 1900, when he moved into Fayetteville. He then became circuit clerk and recorder for a period of four years, at the termination of which time he entered the Arkansas National Bank and was active in financial circles until 1919. On January 1 of that year he was made acting postmaster and on August 5th he was appointed postmaster. He was the first postmaster of Fayetteville, Arkansas, appointed under civil service regulations, having held the highest grade. Mr. Morton devotes his entire time and attention to the duties devolving upon him in this office and still keeps up with his studies, reading extensively along the lines in which he is most interested.

On the 13th of March, 1884, Mr. Morton was united in marriage to Miss Bettie Smith, a native of Washington county, born near Fayetteville. Her father was William C. Smith, a well known man of the community, who was killed by a marauding party during the Civil war. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Morton: James Herbert, farming in Washington county; Julia, who is the wife of Gus Bridenthal, a druggist of Fayetteville; Pauline, the wife of Sam Allison, a druggist of Haskell, Oklahoma; Winifred, the wife of S. L. Hall, a planter of Phillips county; and William C., of Fayetteville. James H. Morton was in the service of the United States for three years during the World war. He was one of the first to enter the service from Washington county, being a volunteer, serving in Battery B, One Hundred and Forty-second Field Artillery. His cousin, James A., was likewise in service and was for twelve months stationed in France.

Since age conferred upon Mr. Morton the right of franchise he has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias and is now serving as chancellor commander of the local lodge at Fayetteville, Arkansas. During the World war he took an active and prominent part in all of the drives and he was chief of the American Protective League in three counties. Mr. Morton devotes his entire time to the duties of his office as postmaster, for he believes that a public office is a public trust. He has thoroughly identified his interests with those of the community and is always ready to lend his support to a worthy cause.

A. D. SHINN.

A. D. Shinn, prominently identified with agricultural interests in Pope county, making his home at Russellville, was born on a farm in this county in 1868. He is a son of Calvin R. and Mary (Cagle) Shinn and he is a representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of this part of the state, his grandfather being Ransom Shinn, a native of North Carolina, who came to Arkansas in 1837, settling in Pope county, where he secured and developed a farm, while later he became a mill man. He owned a large amount of land and a number of slaves but during the Civil war lost all that he had. He brought the first circular saw into the county and at all times was actuated by a most progressive spirit in the conduct of his business affairs. The maternal grandfather of A. D. Shinn was Howard Cagle, a native of North Carolina, who was a millwright and later a mill owner, operating a mill in Pope county for a number of years.

Calvin R. Shinn was born in Pope county in 1840 and was here married in 1866 to Mary Cagle, whose birth occurred in Arkansas in 1842. She died in 1868, just two years after her marriage, while Mr. Shinn died in 1882. They were the parents of two children but A. D. Shinn is the only child of that marriage living. The father married again, his second wife being Angeline Eubanks and they had four children: Ida, the wife of Alex Countz, a farmer of London, Arkansas; Martha, the wife of Charles Reed, a railroad man of London, Arkansas; Ervin H., who is connected with the agricultural department of the government at Washington, D. C.; and Callie, the wife of J. F. Keeton, a railroad conductor, living at Russellville. Mr. Shinn always provided for his family by following agricultural pursuits. At the time of the Civil war he responded to the call of the Confederacy and went to the front with the first company from Pope county, serving for four years. On one occasion he was captured and held as a military prisoner for six months. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity, loyally adhering to its high teachings and beneficent spirit and he was also a consistent member of the Christian church.

A. D. Shinn pursued a common school education in Pope county. He was but fourteen years of age when his father died and was the eldest in the family, so that it became necessary for him to provide for his own support from that time on and also contribute to the support of the family. The father had two hundred acres of land but it was mortgaged and A. D. Shinn undertook the onerous task of paying off the indebtedness. With a resolute spirit and determination seldom found in one of his years he began the work necessary to meet the financial obligations of the family and further to develop the farm and as the years passed he prospered and accumulated more land, until today he is the owner of six hundred acres of excellent land, most of it lying along the river bottom. It is land specially adapted to the raising of cotton, corn and alfalfa. Mr. Shinn is regarded as one of the leading and progressive agriculturists of his part of the state. His energy and determination have enabled him to overcome many difficulties and as the years have gone by he has proved that individual efforts intelligently directed constitute the basis of honorable success.

In 1891 Mr. Shinn was married to Miss Lydia Rye, a daughter of John J. Rye, one of the early farmers of Pope county, who died in 1901 at the age of sixty-three years. He served with the Confederate army throughout the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Shinn are parents of four children: Gladys, who was educated in the Russellville high school and in the Agricultural College at that place, also attended college in Manhattan, Kansas, where she pursued a domestic science course; Homer, who entered the army in 1918, devoted three months to an auto repairing course at Austin, Texas, and was then transferred to El Paso, where he was engaged in automobile work. He had previously attended high school and the Agricultural College; John C. is identified with the engraving department of the United States government at Washington, D. C., and at night is pursuing a commercial course there. Mary Alice, who completed a high school course, afterward attended the Henderson-Brown College in Arkadelphia, Arkansas, and is now a teacher of expression and music at Prescott, Arkansas. In 1904 Mr. Shinn erected a nice two-story residence in Russellville, which he and his family have since occupied and theirs is one of the hospitable homes of the city, its good cheer being greatly enjoyed by their many friends. Mr. Shinn devotes most of his time to his farming interests, riding back and forth almost every day and he also takes an active part in banking, being one of the organizers of the Farmers State Bank, of which he became the first president.

In politics Mr. Shinn has always been an earnest democrat since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and he has filled a number of local offices. He served his county for four years as county and probate clerk, covering a period from 1904 until 1908 and through the succeeding four year period he sat upon the county bench as judge. He had three opponents for the position and received more votes than all three of his opponents together, a fact indicative of his personal popularity and of the confidence and trust reposed in him. He was made a member of the first board of trustees of the Agricultural College and acted as secretary of the board at the time the college buildings were erected. He has also served as a member of the city council for four years and has ever exercised his official prerogatives in the support of those plans and measures which have contributed to the city's upbuilding and improvement. In every relation of life he is actuated by a spirit of advancement and he never stops short of the successful attainment of his objective. He is a recognized leader in democratic circles, has attended many of the conventions of the party and has at times acted as chairman thereof. Fraternally he is a Mason, now a past master of his lodge and a former secretary of the Royal Arch Chapter. He belongs to the Christian church, while his wife and daughters are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Their aid and influence are ever given on the side of justice, truth and right and their labors have been a potent force in bringing about improved conditions in Russellville. Mr. Shinn certainly deserves great credit for what he has accomplished. He said that his uncle, I. N. Cagle, assisted him in getting an education and he has ever had a sense of deep gratitude for this assistance. But no matter what the advantages secured through school or in other ways one must essentially formulate, shape and determine his own character and this Mr. Shinn has done. He has ever held to high standards and lofty ideals and his ability is attested in his success, while the rules that he has followed are manifest in the high regard which is uniformly entertained for him in Pope county and wherever he is known.

EDWARD T. McCONNELL.

Edward T. McConnell, a capitalist of Clarksville, who throughout his life has fully recognized his duties and obligations to his fellowmen and has adequately met responsibilities that have devolved upon him, is now largely living retired in the enjoyment of a well earned and richly merited rest. He was born in Johnson county, Arkansas, about eight miles east of Clarksville, on the 20th of November, 1845, and is a son of Edward E. McConnell and a grandson of John McConnell. The latter wedded Mary Knighton and both were natives of Ireland, in which country they remained until after their marriage. Coming to the new world they settled in Salisbury, North Carolina, and John McConnell there engaged in teaching school. In 1836 he came to Arkansas, where his remaining days were passed and his name now figures on the pages of the state's pioneer history. His son, Edward E. McConnell, was born in Salisbury, North Carolina, and after removing to Kentucky was married in that state to Miss Susan Shelton, whose birth occurred in Greenville, Kentucky, where her father had settled at an early period in the development of that state, where he followed the occupation of farming. Some years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. McConnell removed to Arkansas, taking up their abode in Johnson county on the 2d of January, 1836. Here the father purchased a farm, upon which he lived until 1849, when he established his home in Clarksville. He was a physician and practiced medicine for a number of years, becoming the first representative of the profession in the city. He started upon his business career in this state as a merchant in connection with Seth J. Howell at Pittsburg Landing, but afterward turned his attention to the practice of medicine, in which he rendered valuable service to mankind. He died in Clarksville in 1858. His wife died in the same city on the 4th of July, 1865. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom only Edward T. McConnell, who was the eleventh in order of birth, is living. The mother was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. McConnell gave his early political support to the whig party and later became a democrat. Through the pioneer epoch in the history of the state he was closely associated with its development and progress. He was in limited financial circumstances when he removed to Arkansas and as the years passed by he prospered in his undertakings and in various ways he left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the history of Arkansas, contributing in large measure to its early progress and improvement.

EDWARD T. McCONNELL

Edward T. McConnell pursued his education in the schools of Johnson county and for four terms was a student at Little Rock, going to that city to enter school there at the age of fifteen years. He attended a select school and thus obtained a fair education and he was pursuing his studies when the Civil war was declared. Mr. McConnell was elected a page in the state legislature, over twelve applicants for the position. He served through that session and through the called session that followed and after Arkansas seceded from the Union he returned home and entered the war, joining the army in September, 1863. He served in Cabell's brigade throughout the remainder of the period of hostilities and when both sides had laid down their arms he returned to his home, in June, 1865. He weighed ninety-eight pounds when he entered the service and one hundred and eighteen pounds when he returned home. During much of the time he had served as a courier under General Cabell and surrendered at Little Rock at the close of the war.

On again reaching Johnson county Mr. McConnell drove a stage between Clarksville and Ozark and also took a contract to carry the mail from Little Rock to Fort Smith on the south side of the river on a pack horse. Later he engaged in clerking in a dry goods store for a year and subsequently leased a farm, which he conducted for seven years in connection with the ownership and management of the store, making money in that venture. On the 1st of January, 1867, he purchased the only drug store in Clarksville and for twenty-eight years remained one of the progressive druggists of the city, conducting a business of constantly growing proportions. In 1849 his father purchased a block on the east side of the square and Mr. McConnell still owns the block. He purchased the interests of the other heirs in the property in 1869 and has since been sole owner. In 1873 he built a large three-story hotel on the corner, which was destroyed by fire about 1898. In 1906 he built up the entire block, consisting of a two-story bank building and other business structures and over all these he erected a large hotel. His property interests are extensive and return to him a most gratifying annual income and, moreover, he displays marked business ability and sound judgment in the management of his real estate investments.

On the 18th of December, 1873, Mr. McConnell was married to Miss Alice A. Porter, daughter of William C. Porter, who was born in Kentucky and came to Johnson county, Arkansas, in 1840. He was a farmer, who served in the Confederate army and thus lost his health, his death occurring in 1867. Mr. and Mrs. McConnell became the parents of seven children, four of whom are living: Susie, the wife of G. O. Patterson, an attorney of Clarksville, mentioned elsewhere in this work; H. C., a public accountant of Little Rock; Maude Alice, the wife of Francis Q. Poynor, vice president and cashier of the Farmers National Bank of Clarksville; and Imogene, the wife of W. A. Ragon, postmaster of Clarksville. Mr. McConnell and his wife belong to the Presbyterian church and politically he is a democrat, who has held many positions of public honor and trust and has at all times been a loyal supporter of those interests which feature as factors in good government. He first served as city marshal of Clarksville during a period of six years when the country was more or less infested with a lawless band. He was afterward elected mayor and in 1878 was called to the office of sheriff, in which he was continued by reelection for six years. This was during the toughest period in the county's history when there were many saloons and lawless characters but without fear or favor he made arrests and enforced the law. It was he who put a stop to carrying pistols and he docketed one hundred and forty-four cases during the first term of the grand jury. Under his administration four train robbers were captured who were hanged on one scaffold. His next position was that of superintendent of the state penitentiary, to which he was appointed in 1894, by Governor W. M. Fishback, in recognition of the splendid record which he had made as marshal and as sheriff. When he was appointed to the position he was owner of a drug store and of five or six sawmills and was giving close attention to his business affairs, knowing nothing of the appointment until the governor telegraphed him to come to Little Rock at once. He accepted the proffered position in which he served for eight years. When he took charge the place was running behind financially and when he left there the institution had been put upon a safe basis. In 1918 he was elected to the state legislature and served in the forty-second general assembly, during which period he was also a member of two called sessions. He served on the penitentiary committee and the Confederate home committee, acting as chairman of the latter. In public office he has thus rendered valuable aid to the community and to the state. It was he who selected the location for a Confederate home and he was also superintendent of the state penitentiary when the new capitol was begun. He was asked by Governor Jones where was a good location for the state capitol and Mr. McConnell replied that it should be built on ground where the penitentiary was standing. His advice was followed, the capitol building being placed on that location. With convict labor he did all of the excavation work, put in the foundation and did other preliminary work toward the erection of the superstructure.

Mr. McConnell is now living practically retired from business, except for the management of his private investments, and is regarded as one of the substantial men of Johnson county. Since coming to Clarksville he has lost seventy-five thousand dollars in fires here. Notwithstanding this he has so directed his efforts and his energies that he is today numbered among the men of affluence in Arkansas and his ability is pronounced. He has used his time and talents wisely and well and his enterprise has enabled him to win substantial results in the management of the varied interests which have claimed his attention. Moreover, his labors have been of a character which have contributed to public progress and prosperity, as well as to individual success, while his record as a public official is one which reflects credit and honor upon the people who selected him to serve in public capacities.

WILSON L. YOWELL.

Wilson L. Yowell, cashier of the First National Bank at Mansfield, is a man of resolute and determined spirit, whose success in the business world has come as the direct result of his thoroughness, close application and laudable ambition. He has spent his life in Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Scott county in 1882. He is a son of J. L. and Georgia (Lewis) Yowell. The father was born in Kentucky and after coming to Arkansas settled in Sebastian county, while later he removed to Scott county, where he engaged in the occupation of farming. The Lewis family, to which the mother belonged, was one of the pioneer families of Scott county closely connected with the early development and progress of that section of the state. Her father was a soldier of the Confederate army in the Civil war and was killed in battle.

Wilson L. Yowell pursued his education in the schools of Mansfield and Arkansas and afterward attended the State University, so that he received thorough and liberal training, well qualifying him for life's practical and responsible duties. After leaving college he taught school in both Scott and Sebastian counties, but was constantly watchful of opportunities that would lead into broader and more remunerative fields of usefulness. He accepted employment in the Bank of Waldron as a bookkeeper and afterward came to Mansfield, where he was appointed assistant cashier of the Bank of Mansfield. The First National Bank was organized in 1918 with C. S. Marsh as its first cashier. The present officers are: I. H. Nakdimen, president; W. A. Martin, vice president; and W. L. Yowell, cashier. Since his connection with the bank, Mr. Yowell has contributed in no small measure to the growth and success of the enterprise, for he is a popular official and one who is most loyal to the interests which he represents.

In 1910 occurred the marriage of W. L. Yowell and Miss Ernestine Page of Abbott, Arkansas, and they are the parents of three children. They are well known in Mansfield, where they have an extensive circle of warm friends, while the hospitality of their home is greatly enjoyed by all who know them. Mr. Yowell is a Mason in his fraternal relations and is a loyal and exemplary follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft.

ALFRED BORMAN.

Alfred Borman is a partner in the firm of Borman Brothers, plumbers and steamfitters of Hot Springs, and is one of the representative and successful business men of the city. He was born in Hammond, Indiana, on the 25th of April, 1882, and is a son of Henry and Mary (Weber) Borman, both of whom were natives of Germany, whence they came to the United States in childhood, locating in Indiana. They were married at Hammond, that state, and began their domestic life there, continuing to reside in that city to the time of their death. The father was a musician by profession.

Alfred Borman was educated in the public schools of Hammond and in his youthful days learned the printer's trade. In 1901 he went to the Pacific coast and after a year spent in Los Angeles removed to San Francisco, where he was living at the time of the great earthquake in 1905. There he was employed as a pressman in a commercial printing house until 1906, at which time his brother William prevailed upon him to come to Hot Springs and learn the plumber's trade, in which the brother was then engaged. At length Alfred and his brother Otto acquired an interest in the business originally owned by William Borman, and upon the death of William in 1915, Alfred and his brother Otto established themselves in business under the present firm style. They are conducting an excellent business as plumbers and steamfitters and are accorded a liberal and gratifying patronage.

In 1913 Mr. Borman was married to Miss Irene Braden of Lufkin, Texas, and to this marriage have been born two children, Alfred Marion and Robert Clayton. Mr. Borman is a member of Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, A. F. & A. M. He also belongs to the Business Men's League of Hot Springs and he is classed among the stable and successful business men of the city.

HEARTSILL H. RAGON.

Heartsill H. Ragon, member of the Clarksville bar, was born on a farm in Logan county, Arkansas, March 20, 1884, his parents being Captain Andrew Jackson and Anna (Heartsill) Ragon, who were natives of Tennessee and of Georgia, respectively. The former was a son of Absalom Ragon, who was born in Tennessee and became one of the pioneer residents of Arkansas, settling in this state in the '60s. He died in Logan county. The grandfather in the maternal line was Hiram Heartsill, a native of North Carolina, who removed from that state to Georgia, where his remaining days were passed. He was active in politics and served as clerk and as sheriff of Murray county, Georgia, for many years. It was in that state that Captain Ragon was united in marriage to Anna Heartsill and about the year 1872 they removed to Arkansas, where he purchased a farm in Logan county, devoting his remaining days to its cultivation. He died about 1889 and is survived by his widow, who makes her home with her son, H. H. Ragon of this review. Mr. Ragon was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church and a faithful follower of the Masonic fraternity. He served as a captain in the Confederate army, enlisting from Tennessee and was wounded in battle. In days of peace he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits. He was also at one time county superintendent of schools in Logan county. To him and his wife were born five sons: Edgar, a farmer of Clarksville; J. O., who carries on merchandising in Clarksville; A. N., who is president of the First National Bank of Clarksville; Heartsill H.; and W. A., who is postmaster of Clarksville.

Heartsill H. Ragon is now the owner of the old homestead property upon which his father resided. He pursued his education in the College of the Ozarks and in the University of Arkansas until he had completed his more specifically literary course, after which he entered the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and was there graduated as a law student in 1908. He entered upon the practice of his profession in connection with G. O. Patterson, with whom he has since been associated, save for the time when he filled the office of prosecuting attorney, covering a period of four years. He is recognized today as one of the able members of the bar, proving a strong and resourceful advocate in presenting his cause before the court and is also at all times a wise and safe counselor.

In 1915 Mr. Ragon was married to Miss Mattie Smith, who was born in Drew county, Arkansas, a daughter of Edwin Smith, a farmer of Lincoln county, Arkansas. They have become the parents of a son, Heartsill, Jr., who is now four years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Ragon have membership in the Presbyterian church, in which they take an active and helpful part. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, has membership with the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and from 1916 until 1920 he served as prosecuting attorney of Clarksville. From 1911 until 1913 he represented his district in the state legislature. While a member of the general assembly he served on the judiciary committee of which he was chairman the second term and was chairman of the constitutional amendment committee. He was also a congressional delegate to the democratic national convention held at San Francisco that nominated Cox for the presidency. Aside from his law practice he has business interests in Clarksville, owning a farm and also having an interest in the Hardware Company of this city, but he devotes the major part of his time and attention to his law practice. He belongs to the State Bar Association and has regularly attended its meetings.

CHRISTOPHER C. HAMBY.

In the passing of Christopher C. Hamby the bar of Arkansas lost a lawyer and counsellor of marked ability and great personal integrity, whose keen sense of justice and patience and untiring efforts in the practice of his profession for more than forty years, endeared him to a large circle of friends and especially to the members of the bar. He was a southerner, born in Calhoun, Mississippi, on the 14th of September, 1851, a son of T. J. and Nancy Elizabeth (Byers) Hamby. On the maternal side he was descended from the Randolphs of Virginia. His father was a well known and progressive agriculturist.

Christopher C. Hamby was but ten years of age at the outbreak of the Civil war and although he was too young to be a soldier he made many sacrifices. By reason of the war he was denied the advantages to be gained from a college education, attending only the common schools and but one session of a grammar school. At the age of eighteen years he was employed as a brakeman on the Illinois Central railroad and he served in that capacity until he was twenty-one years old. In the year 1872 he removed to Logan county, Arkansas, and for two years worked on a farm near Booneville. He then removed to Ouachita county, where he engaged in teaching school. During that time he studied law, procuring his books from the firm of Bunn & Bearden at Camden and he was admitted to practice law at Camden in 1876. He continued teaching school at New Edinburg until the year 1878, when he located in Prescott and entered upon the practice of his chosen profession. He soon won for himself a prominent place in legal circles and for many years before his demise, which occurred on the 31st of January, 1921, he was conceded to be one of the foremost criminal lawyers in this section of the state.

Mr. Hamby made his initial step into the political world in 1890, when he was elected to the state senate, and at the close of the session of 1891 he was elected lieutenant governor. During the illness of Governor Eagle, in the summer of 1892, Mr. Hamby served as governor of this state for four months. While a member of the senate he was chairman of the judiciary committee and as a prominent and active member of the democratic party, he was chairman of the democratic state convention at Hot Springs in 1904. He was a stanch advocate of education and not only served as president of the school board in Prescott for several years but was for twelve years a member of the board of trustees of the State University.

In 1885 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Hamby to Miss Isabelle Blake, and to their union one child was born. Mrs. Hamby died in 1886. In 1888 he was married to Miss Bettie Wells and to their union four children were born. His widow, two sons and two daughters survive him. Further mention of one of the sons, R. P. Hamby, is made in a sketch appearing elsewhere in this work.

Fraternally Mr. Hamby was identified with the Masons and he was conceded an exemplary member of the craft. He was grand orator of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas in 1890, a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. Along strictly professional lines he held membership in various organizations and at the time of his death he was a member of the American Bar Association. The high regard and respect in which Mr. Hamby was held by members of the legal profession is clearly set forth in the following extract from the resolutions drafted by a committee of the Nevada County Bar and adopted by the circuit court on the 14th of July, 1921:

"Mr. Hamby was a natural leader of men, strong in his convictions and firm in the support of what he conceived to be right. He never took a doubtful course but was always outspoken on all public questions. He was a lawyer of marked ability and while in his youth he was denied the advantages of a collegiate education, he was always a close student, not only of law but of literature, language and science. Few men were better informed or took a greater interest in current events of the day. He despised a sham or a Pharisee. On all legal questions his judgment was sound and no man was more intelligent or energetic in the presentation of his case to the courts. He was a fine judge of men; no man knew human nature better than he and to this faculty many of his remarkable legal victories can be ascribed."

In the death of Mr. Hamby on January 31, 1921, Arkansas lost a public-spirited and representative citizen, for he always had the welfare of the community and of his state and nation at heart. His unselfish devotion to his profession and to the duties of citizenship won for him a large circle of friends and he was best beloved where he was best known.

RANDOLPH P. HAMBY.

Since 1912 Randolph P. Hamby has been mayor of Prescott and he has not only won prominence in that connection but is one of the representative members of the legal profession in the state. A native of Arkansas, he was born on the 23rd of September, 1886, a son of Christopher C. and Isabelle (Blake) Hamby, further mention of whom is made on another page of this work.

In the acquirement of an education Randolph P. Hamby attended the public schools of Prescott and for one year was a student in the Tennessee Industrial School at Nashville. For a like period he attended the University of Arkansas and after putting his textbooks aside he made his initial step into the business world as court reporter for the eighth judicial district. While serving in that capacity he took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1909. He then entered his father's office as a member of the firm of Hamby & Hamby and that association was maintained until the death of his father on the 31st of January, 1921. Since that time Mr. Hamby has been practicing independently. In 1912 he was elected chief executive of Prescott and has served in that office continuously since.

In the year 1912 Mr. Hamby was united in marriage to Miss Irene Royston of Washington. Her grandfather on the paternal side, Grandison D. Royston, was one of the most eminent jurists of the state in his day. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hamby two daughters have been born: Mary Isabelle and Irene R. The religious faith of the family is that of the Presbyterian church and they are generous contributors to its support.

Fraternally Mr. Hamby is a Mason and an exemplary member of the craft. He holds membership in Prescott Lodge, No. 80, F. & A. M.; Prescott Chapter, No. 38, Royal Arch Masons; Ezra Council, R. & S. M.; Ascalon Commandery, No. 22, Knights Templars; and Al-Amin Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is likewise a member of Nevada Lodge, No. 203, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the K. O. T. M. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hamby are members of the Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Hamby has been very successful in the practice of his chosen profession and is held in high regard throughout the state, both by reason of his professional ability and because of his high standards of citizenship. As mayor of Prescott he is tireless in his efforts to promote the best interests of the town, county and state on every possible occasion.

GUS F. ERFURTH.

Gus F. Erfurth, owner of one of the battery stations of Fort Smith, was born in this city in 1887, a son of R. A. and Mary E. Erfurth. He was a pupil in the public schools here and afterward gained comprehensive knowledge of electrical interests and principles through private study and through practical experience. He was early drawn to this line of work and immediately after school embarked in electrical work, having during his school days studied all the departments of electrical construction, with the exception of wireless telegraphy. He initiated his business career by entering the employ of the Fort Smith Light & Traction Company and later was with the Fort Smith Electrical Supply Company. His next position was with the F. E. Newbery Electric Company of St. Louis, representing their branch house in Dallas, Texas.

During the World war Mr. Erfurth took charge of the electrical construction schools in connection with the aviation schools at Fort Worth, Texas, for a time and was then sent down to the Muscle Shoals, Alabama, taking charge of part of the nitrate plant, with which he was connected until after the signing of the armistice in November, 1918.

When the country no longer needed his aid Mr. Erfurth returned to Fort Smith and here embarked in electrical work on automobiles, including batteries, ignition and other work. He has the agency for the U. S. L. Battery. It is his intention soon to build a two-story battery station at 116 North Ninth street. This will be modern in every way and the business will be carried on under the name of the Erfurth Battery Company. MAURICE LOUIS ALTHEIMER.

Maurice Louis Altheimer, who has attained a position in mercantile and financial circles that may well be an example for the youth of the state, was born in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, September 21, 1872, and is a son of Louis and Julia (Susholz) Altheimer. His father, Louis Altheimer, came to America in youth, accompanied by two cousins, and the total capital of the three lads was a trifle less than six dollars. The boys obtained such jobs as were available and thus they soon separated, their work taking them into various sections. Louis Altheimer has made history in the south and west. He built the first store in Cheyenne, Wyoming, and in Arkansas he established the town of Altheimer and built to it the Altheimer branch of the Cotton Belt Railroad. While he has now practically retired from active business, he is still associated with his son Maurice in the conduct of the Altheimer Dry Goods Company, whose stores are located at Little Rock, at Altheimer and at Humphrey.

Maurice L. Altheimer acquired his early education in Jordan's Academy of Pine Bluff and continued his studies in the Washington University at St. Louis, from which he was graduated in 1896 with the degree of LL. B. He practiced his profession for three years in Pine Bluff and for five years in St. Louis. Finding that his interests in Arkansas required his attention, he closed his law office and turned his attention to commercial pursuits. His capacity for work astonishes his associates and how he gets so much done is a constant wonder to them. He is the active manager of the large Altheimer store in Little Rock, and also looks after the affairs of the stores at Humphrey and at Altheimer, which stores do a large plantation supply business. In addition he is a planter, having two thousand acres in cotton, and attends to the marketing of the cotton from Altheimer and Humphrey, handled by his firms. He is likewise a partner in the Marx store in Little Rock, is the president of the Twin City Bank of North Little Rock and vice president of the City Market and Arcade Company. He is the chief executive officer of the Commercial Building & Loan Association of North Little Rock, also the president of the Altheimer Gin Company of Altheimer, Arkansas, and a director of the Rose City Cotton Oil Mill of Little Rock. He never seems hurried yet he manages somehow to get through a mass of business and always to keep a step ahead of his many organizations. There are few men who could at one time win success as banker, merchant and planter, working thus in separate fields, but Mr. Altheimer has evolved a method that enables him to do this. He has learned to economize time, to make no false moves and to utilize each moment to the fullest extent.

In 1902 Mr. Altheimer was united in marriage to Miss Alice Kramer of St. Louis, Missouri, who is a club woman and interested in all charitable organizations. They have two children: Alan J., who is a junior in Columbia University of New York City; and Julia, who is a high school student preparing for a course in Bryn Mawr.

In politics, as in business affairs, Mr. Altheimer maintains an independent course. In religion he is of the Jewish faith. Fraternally he is an Elk and a Mason and in the latter organization has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and become a Mystic Shriner. He has filled all of the chairs in the Knights of Pythias and he is a member of the B'nai B'rith and vice president of the Temple. During the World war he was active in all drives and in days of war or peace no public enterprise calls upon him in vain for assistance, nor really does any call ever have to be made for him, as he is ever beforehand with his aid. For the past three years he has been state chairman of the Near East Relief work. He stands ever for progress and improvement and his labors have ever been directed toward the public welfare in community, commonwealth and country, while at the same time he has most wisely directed his individual interests and gained a position among the most prominent and prosperous business man of the state.

THOMAS A. PETTIGREW.

Thomas A. Pettigrew, a prominent attorney and well known citizen of Charleston, was born in Franklin county, Arkansas, November 24, 1856, and is a representative of a prominent old southern family whose name is closely associated with records that figured conspicuously upon the pages of western history. His grandfather, George Pettigrew, was a native of Missouri and came to Arkansas in pioneer times. Here he acquired large landed interests and successfully managed his agricultural affairs. He also represented his district in the state legislature during the session of 1840 and thus left the impress of his individuality upon the laws of the commonwealth. He was the father of John M. Pettigrew, who was born in Hempstead county, Arkansas, and who in early manhood married Helen Aldridge, whose birth occurred near Tuscaloosa, Alabama. Her father was Thomas Aldridge, who was born in Alabama and came to Arkansas in 1832. He established the first settlement of Lake Village and was prominently connected with the development of that locality. He owned a large number of slaves and considerable land. He afterward removed to Franklin county, where he developed the finest farm in the state. John M. Pettigrew was one of the early school teachers of Franklin county. He was graduated from the Arkansas College at Fayetteville, this state, in 1854 and in the same year was made professor of mathematics there, teaching for one year in that institution. He established a noted school in Charleston in 1855 and while it was not chartered as a college its curriculum and its standards were sufficiently high to make it equal to a college course. The school was attended by people from all over the state, both before and after the war. A splendid high school is still maintained there and Mr. Pettigrew was the founder of the educational interests of that region. During the war he was quartermaster in Hindman's command and took a prominent part in the battle of Prairie Grove. He was at the front altogether for four years and came out of the service with the rank of captain. His death occurred in 1897. He was twice married, having three children by the first marriage, but Thomas A. Pettigrew, of this review, is the only one living. By the second marriage there were four children, of whom three are living: John, a farmer and trader, residing in Oklahoma; Bob, who was postmaster at Brea, California, for a number of years and still is in that state; George, who is a clerk in the post office at Fort Smith; and one who died in infancy. Mr. Pettigrew was a member of the Christian church in early life and afterward joined the Cumberland Presbyterian church, following his second marriage, his wife being a member of that church. He was a Mason and for several years served as master of his lodge. He also became a charter member of the Royal Arch chapter at Charleston. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party and on several occasions he was called to public office, serving as county surveyor and also as a member of the state legislature in 1871, while from 1883 until 1885 he was a member of the state senate.

Thomas A. Pettigrew pursued his education in the schools of Charleston and in the State University of Arkansas, in which he won the A. B. degree in 1878, while in 1879 the honorary degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon him. He was the first man in Arkansas to receive the Bachelor of Arts degree and also received the first diploma awarded by the State University in a class of seven members. He pursued his law course in the Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1881 and he began practice at Paris, Arkansas, the same year.

It was also in that year that he married Fannie Rieff, daughter of A. V. Rieff, an Arkansas pioneer, who served as a colonel in the Civil war. Mr. Pettigrew lost his first wife in 1882 and in 1885 he married Lizzie Burt, a daughter of J. S. Burt, a prominent resident of Hempstead county, Arkansas, who was one of the grand officers in the Masonic order. Her death occurred in 1885, and later Mr. Pettigrew married Lucy Ervin, who was born in Virginia and is a daughter of Robert Ervin, who settled in Independence county, Arkansas, at an early day. There are five children of this marriage: Ruth, who is principal of a high school at Hagerman, New Mexico, and was educated in the State University of Arkansas, which conferred upon her the Bachelor of Arts degree; Lucile, who was graduated from the State University of Arkansas with the A. B. degree and is now the wife of G. W. Johnson, an attorney of Greenwood, Arkansas; Helen, also a State University graduate, who taught school, being instructor in Latin at Stonewall, Lousiana, in 1920; Thomas, who attended the State University and is now with the Chamberlin Supply Company of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, having made good in his business, while at the same time he possesses a mechanical turn of mind and is working on several inventions; and Lucy, who is a junior in the State University of Arkansas.

Mr. Pettigrew is a director in the Bank of Charleston, but the greater part of his time and attention is devoted to law practice, yet on various occasions he has rendered valuable aid in connection with public service. For twenty-eight years he has been a member of the school board of Charleston and the cause of education has found in him a stalwart friend and champion. He has ever voted with the democratic party and has been an active worker in its ranks. He served as deputy sheriff, as county superintendent of schools, as deputy judge, as deputy prosecuting attorney and was post office inspector under President Cleveland. From 1892 until 1895 he was a member of the state senate and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1920. He studies closely the questions and issues which are of vital interest to the state and his aid and influence are ever on the side of progress, reform and improvement. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, has served as master of his lodge for a number of years and has been past chancellor commander in the Knights of Pythias and chairman of the judiciary committee of the Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, on a number of occasions. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he has always taken an active and helpful interest in church work. His life has been guided by high and honorable principles that have found their expression in marked devotion to the interests of his clients in the practice of law, loyalty in every matter of citizenship, faithfulness in friendship and fidelity and devotion to home life.

FREDERICK CHARLES MULLINIX.

One of the foremost attorneys of Arkansas, specializing in bankruptcy law, is Frederick Charles Mullinix, a resident of Jonesboro. He was born in Rosendale, Missouri, on the 5th of April, 1880, of Scotch-English parentage. The father, Abram Mullinix, was of English descent and a native of Missouri. For some thirty years he was engaged in the practice of medicine at Rosendale, Missouri, and subsequently he took up the practice of law, removing to Willow Springs in 1892. He became one of the foremost lawyers of that State and was enjoying an extensive clientage at the time of his demise in 1909, at the age of seventy-two years. At Mount Sterling, Illinois, in the year 1870, was celebrated the marriage of Abram Mullinix to Miss George Anna Scott, of Scotch descent. She was born in Mount Sterling and reared to young womanhood there. Her demise occurred at Willow Springs, Missouri, in 1908, in her sixty-eighth year. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Mullinix four children were born, two boys and two girls. Frederick Charles, who is the only child living, was the second in order of birth.

Upon attaining school age, Frederick Charles Mullinix attended the public schools of Rosendale and the high school at Willow Springs. He then attended the University of Missouri at Columbia and was afterward admitted to the bar, but did not at once enter into the practice of his profession. He removed to Hot Springs, Arkansas, and for some time was city salesman for Schwarzschild & Sulzberger, one of the large packing houses there. The following year he became associated with Morris & Company, traveling between Memphis and Birmingham, and he was active in that position until 1907. In that year he determined to practice law and established offices in Memphis, Tennessee, where he remained until 1908. In the early part of 1909 he came to Jonesboro and has since engaged in the practice of law here, achieving more than gratifying success. In addition to handling a large and lucrative general clientage, he specializes in bankruptcy law, and is well known in that connection throughout the state. For a period of two years and nine months, Mr. Mullinix was deputy prosecuting attorney of Craighead county and previous to holding that office he was active as assistant claim agent for the Frisco Railroad for eleven months. He has put together in book form under the title, Wit, Wisdom and Philosophy, a collection of epigrams and excerpts from the opinions of Henry Lamb, chief justice of the supreme court of Missouri. The book, which will contain some three hundred and twenty-five pages, is most interesting and consists largely of quotations from Judge Lamb's opinions while on the bench.

Mr. Mullinix has been twice married. At Middleton, Mississippi, in 1904, occurred his marriage to Miss Anna Gordon, a daughter of Robert and Thrace Gordon of Okolona, that state. To their union one daughter, Thrace, sixteen years of age, was born. She is now attending Granada College at Granada, Mississippi, where she is taking a special course in designing. On the 17th of June, 1914, Mr. Mullinix was married to Miss Iona Marie Robinson, a daughter of H. J. and Alice (Howes) Robinson of Jonesboro. Her parents are well known residents of Jonesboro, and are natives of England, born, respectively, at London and Bristol. Mrs. Mullinix is prominent in the club and social circles of this community and is active in all movements for the betterment of the civic welfare.

Fraternally, Mr. Mullinix is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Jonesboro Lodge, No. 129, A. F. & A. M., and he likewise holds membership in Jonesboro Lodge, No. 498, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. While attending the University of Missouri he became affiliated with Phi Gamma Delta collegiate fraternity. Although the greater part of Mr. Mullinix's time is devoted to his professional interests, he is one of Jonesboro's most public-spirited citizens and there is no movement for the development or improvement of the community which seeks his aid in vain. A man of genial and pleasing personality, his friends here are legion and he well merits the confidence and esteem in which he is held by his fellowmen.

REV. J. H. DeLANO, D. D.

One of the well known residents of Eureka Springs is the Rev. J. H. DeLano, a retired minister of the Baptist church. He was born in Vermont on the 26th of July, 1845, a son of H. and Samantha (Parker) DeLano. The paternal grandfather, H. DeLano, was born in New England and when a young man removed to Indiana, where he engaged in farming until his demise. Sterling Parker, the grandfather on the maternal side, was a native of Vermont, in which state he spent his entire life. The father of J. H. DeLano was a native of New England and removed to Illinois in 1848. He resided in that state for a number of years and was actively engaged in farming. He then removed to Keokuk, Iowa, where his demise occurred in 1878.

In the acquirement of an education J. H. DeLano attended the common schools of his birthplace and later graduated from the high school at Warsaw, Illinois. He was likewise graduated from an academy at Quincy, Illinois, and subsequently took a theological course at Shurtleff College at Alton, that state. He was a soldier in the Civil war, serving in the Second Illinois Cavalry and in the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Illinois Infantry. He was ordained in 1869 and his first charge took him to northeastern Missouri. For six years he was in charge of the Baptist church at Blandinsville, Illinois, and then served as pastor in different places in Iowa, subsequently returning to Illinois. His last charge in that state was at Monmouth, where he was a dominant factor in the building of a thirty thousand dollar church. In 1894 he came to Eureka Springs and was pastor of the Emanuel church here for two years, at the end of that time removing to Sapulpa, Oklahoma, where he was pastor for the following three years. Returning to Eureka Springs, he then took charge of Penn's Memorial church, of which he was pastor for five years. During this pastorate the present fine building was completed. In fact it was due to the labors and money contributions of Dr. and Mrs. DeLano that the church was able to build at all. Mrs. DeLano out of her own funds gave and loaned the church a large sum of money on long time that enabled the speedy completion of the edifice. This church is now out of debt and prosperous. Dr. DeLano accepted no remuneration for his service until the church was practically free of debt. He became well known in the religious circles of the state, but retired from the active work of the ministry in 1920.

Dr. DeLano was twice married, his first wife being the daughter of Rev. Samuel Pickard, of Iowa, whom he married in June, 1870. Seven children were the fruit of this union, four of whom are still living. Mrs. DeLano died in Monmouth, Illinois, in 1893. Dr. DeLano was married in Monmouth, in September, 1895, to Mrs. Sarah A. Miller, a native of that city and a daughter of Reuben and Susan Knapp, pioneer farmers of Illinois. To this marriage one daughter has been born: Faith, who is now the wife of Fred N. Sawyer, assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Eureka Springs. He is a veteran of the World war, having seen two years service in France and Germany. He was in the Famous First Army and participated in three of the great drives which brought defeat to the German army.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Baptist church. Dr. DeLano was for fifty years in the active work of the ministry of that denomination and served a number of churches that today are among the largest in the denomination. As a preacher he was well and favorably known in several states. He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Ewing College, Ewing, Illinois, in 1893. Fraternally Dr. DeLano is a member of the Masonic order, having taken all degrees up to Knights Templar. He is a past high priest of the Royal Arch chapter and also past exhalted ruler of the Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks.

Since attaining his majority Dr. DeLano has been affiliated with the republican party in politics and has been an active member therein. He was for some time a member of the board of aldermen of the city of Eureka Springs and later mayor of the city, in which positions he served with honor. He was a candidate for state senator in his home district, which was strongly democratic, and while defeated by his opponent greatly cut down the usual majority. During the World war he was president of the Carroll County Chapter of the American Red Cross and organized the whole county, securing five thousand members in the county. He also was an efficient speaker in the Liberty Loan drives.

Before coming to Arkansas Dr. DeLano turned aside for a few years to secular pursuits and engaged in the newspaper business. He was half owner and editor of the Kewanee Daily and Weekly Courier and was afterward editor-in-chief of the Daily Gazette of Monmouth, Illinois. In Eureka Springs he served for nine years as secretary of the school board and for two years he was secretary of the Commercial Club of the city. He is now retired from active pursuits. He has many friends in his community who recognize his worth and many sterling traits of character.

CHARLES CLAY REED, M. D.

Dr. Charles Clay Reed, physician and surgeon of Little Rock and one of the faculty of the Isaac Post Clinic of the University of Arkansas, occupying the chair of general practice, was born July 7, 1874, in Evansville, Indiana, and is a son of Andrew Jackson and Nellie (Wilkinson) Reed. The father was born in Petersburg, Illinois, in 1847 and the mother was a native of Cynthiana, Posey county, Indiana. They were married in Evansville, of the latter state, and in 1884 came to Arkansas, settling in Beebe. A later removal was made to Little Rock, where Mr. Reed spent his last days. He devoted the greater part of his life to merchandising and he was active in community affairs, serving twice as mayor of Beebe. At the time of the Civil war he espoused the Union cause and served as a private in the army for a period of four years. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party. His wife died at Old Austin, Arkansas, in September, 1901. They were the parents of two sons and a daughter. The latter died in Los Angeles in 1920. She was the wife of Homan S. Jackson.

Dr. Reed was a lad of ten years when the family home was established in Beebe, Arkansas, where he continued his education until graduated from the high school with the class of 1895. It was about six years later that he completed his medical course, having been graduated from the medical department of the University of Arkansas in 1906. In 1910 he did postgraduate work in the Chicago Polyclinic and by broad reading and study throughout his professional career he has kept in close touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress. In 1913 he registered as a pharmacist. He had entered upon the practice of medicine in 1903 at England, Arkansas, and in 1907 he became chief surgeon for the William Farrell Lumber Company at Farrell, Arkansas, continuing to act in that capacity until 1919, when he removed to Little Rock, where he has since followed his profession. In the intervening period of two years he has built up an extensive practice, which is steadily growing. He is a skilled surgeon with comprehensive knowledge also of the principles of medical practice and he is now serving as one of the faculty of the Isaac Post Clinic of the University of Arkansas, occupying the chair of general practice.

On the 13th of August, 1904, Dr. Reed was married to Miss Ruth N. Robinson, who was born in Lonoke, Lonoke county, Arkansas, January 7, 1885, a daughter of B. and Elizabeth (Lee) Robinson. Their children are: Nellie Elizabeth, Charles C., Jr., Emmet Jackson, Lucille, Homan Kay and Ruth Jean. The religious faith of Dr. and Mrs. Reed is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he is well known in Masonic circles, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. His political allegiance is always given to the democratic party. Along professional lines his membership connection is with the Pulaski County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. He is a man who has ever held to the highest professional standards, closely observing the ethics of his chosen calling and he is ever keenly interested in anything that tends to bring to man the key to the complex mystery which we call life.

ROBERT D. DUNLAP.

Through successive stages of progression and development Robert D. Dunlap reached a prominent position in business circles. He was widely known throughout Arkansas as a business man and citizen of substantial worth and the story of his progress is one of stimulating interest, showing what can be accomplished through individual initiative, ability and merit. The birth of Robert D. Dunlap occurred in Lancaster county, South Carolina, April 7, 1860, and his life record covered the intervening years to the 14th of April, 1917, when he was called to his final rest. He was a representative of an old southern family, his parents being R. Jefferson and Margaret Dunlap, who were natives of South Carolina, in which state they were reared and married. They afterward removed to Mississippi and thence to Arkansas, where the former followed the occupation of farming. He died about 1906 and is still survived by his widow, who has now reached the age of eighty years. He was a soldier of the Civil war, serving for four years with Wade Hampton, and was under the command of General Lee at the time of the latter's surrender at Appomattox. He was a slave owner in the south and was financially ruined by the war. It cost him his slaves and his property.

Robert D. Dunlap was born just prior to the outbreak of the Civil war and the disorganized condition of the schools of the south for several years prevented him from receiving the educational training which he would have enjoyed otherwise. He was reared upon a farm in South Carolina and in Mississippi, to which state his parents removed soon after the close of hostilities between the north and the south. Later a removal was made to Johnson county, Arkansas, in 1875, at which time Robert D. Dunlap was a lad of fifteen years. He started to earn his living in young manhood in connection with the dairy business and afterward went to the River farm. He later engaged in the livery and live stock business and at a subsequent period turned his attention to mining, to banking and to other lines of business activity, in all of which he proved adequate to the demands made upon him. He possessed marked energy and initiative and as the years passed on he accumulated a handsome estate. Perhaps his hobby was live stock yet he made the greater part of his fortune by mining. He was the first man to introduce registered Jersey cattle into the state and he likewise engaged in the breeding of standard bred horses. His labors in this direction were extremely beneficial to the state, contributing largely to the advancement of standards among the live stock dealers.

Mr. Dunlap was united in marriage to Miss Effie Ward, a daughter of David and Polly Ward. The former, a native of Missouri, came to Arkansas when a small boy and died in this state about 1886. His wife is still living and has reached the notable old age of ninety-eight years. To Mr. and Mrs. Dunlap were born four children: D. Ward, who is now manager of his father's estate and controls important farming, banking and mining interests; Polly, who is the wife of M. A. Scarborrough, a druggist of Clarksville; Robert D., who is cashier of the First National Bank; and John Jefferson, who is a bill clerk with a wholesale grocery company at Clarksville. The mother, who was born in Clarksville, March 20, 1867, is still living.

Mr. Dunlap belonged to the Masonic fraternity, in which he took the Royal Arch degree, and was also identified with the Knights of Pythias Lodge, in which he served as chancellor commander. His political endorsement was given to the democratic party. He contributed much to the development, progress and improvement of Clarksville in many ways, especially in the matter of lighting, water works and sewers and in the support which he gave to the school system. He was very liberal, giving generously of both his time and means for the public benefit, and by reason of the value of his public service he became well known throughout the county and the state. He held membership in the Presbyterian church and his religious belief characterized his relations with his fellowmen at all times.

THOMAS HENRY HARRIS, JR., D. D. S.

Though young in years Dr. Thomas Henry Harris, Jr., has rapidly attained a place in the front rank among the leading representatives of dentistry in Little Rock and by reason of his success the story of his life is an interesting one. He was born in Palestine, Texas, July 12, 1894, his parents being Thomas Henry and Amelia (Sevenright) Harris, the former a native of Wales, while the latter was born in the state of New York. Coming to the southwest the father settled in Palestine, Texas, where for many years he was actively engaged in railroad business. In 1902 the family removed to Little Rock and there Dr. Harris was educated in the graded and high schools, while subsequently he matriculated in the Jonesboro Agricultural College. Deciding to take up the practice of dentistry as a life work he entered the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and was graduated from its dental department with the class of 1918. He then enlisted in the dental corps of the United States army in the World war and served until after the armistice was signed.

Returning to Little Rock Dr. Harris established an office in the Donaphy building and almost immediately won a considerable practice as he has a sincere love for and attachment to his profession and is keenly interested in all the scientific investigations which are adding to professional knowledge and efficiency. His ability is widely recognized and he enjoys the esteem and confidence of his fellow practitioners to a marked degree.

In 1918 Dr. Harris was married to Miss Lida May Pettey, a daughter of C. O. Pettey of Little Rock. Mrs. Harris is a popular young matron especially active in church work and holds the office of treasurer of the Presbyterian church circle. Dr. Harris is a consistent member of the Presbyterian church and he is also a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. His popularity is demonstrated by his selection as the dental representative of the Kiwanis Club. He is an active member of the Psi Omega, a dental fraternity, as well as the Delta Sigma. In politics he is a stanch democrat but not a politician in the sense of office seeking. He has membership in the Little Rock Dental Society, the Arkansas State Dental Society and the American Dental Association and no young man in any profession in the state has promise of a brighter future than he.

MAHLON DICKERSON OGDEN, M. D.

Dr. Mahlon Dickerson Ogden, one of the most prominent surgeons of Arkansas, practicing at Little Rock, his entire time being devoted to surgery, was born in the capital city December 5, 1881, and is a son of Charles Cullen and Altamirah (Deason) Ogden. The father was born in Chicago, Illinois, January 1, 1845, and the mother's birth occurred at Elyton, Alabama, in 1854. They were married in Little Rock in 1880 and for many years resided in the south. Mr. Ogden was connected with traffic interests, being a freight traffic man and he died in St. Louis in 1902. When but a boy he ran away from home and joined Farragut in the navy. His widow survives and now makes here home in Little Rock. Dr. Ogden, an only child, was a pupil in the Little Rock public schools until graduated from the high school with the class of 1898. He made preparation for his professional career as a student in the medical department of the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated with the class of 1904 and since then he has taken postgraduate work in the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, Maryland, at Harvard University and also in London, England. He is one of the most prominent surgeons not only of Little Rock but of the state, a man of eminent ability in his profession and constantly promoting his knowledge and resourcefulness through wide study and investigation.

On the 14th of November, 1907, Dr. Ogden was united in marriage to Miss Sue Peay Worthen, who was born in Little Rock, July 7, 1881, a daughter of the late Booker T. Worthen, at one time a prominent banker and resident of this state. Mrs.

Ogden was graduated from the high school of Little Rock, she also attended the Misses Ely School in New York, a most exclusive school of the east. Dr. and Mrs. Ogden have become parents of four children: Mahlon D., born August 17, 1908; Mollie Worthen, born May 16, 1911; John Deason, born November 13, 1913; and Altamirah, born November 21, 1916.

Dr. Ogden is a member of the first Methodist Episcopal church, South. Fraternally he is a Knights Templar Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine, and these membership connections indicate well the high principles that govern him in every relation of life. He has always voted with the democratic party but has never been an aspirant for public office, his only public position being that of member of the Little Rock school board. At the time of the World war he joined the army as a member of the Medical Corps and was on duty from September, 1917, to May, 1919, serving with the rank of lieutenant, of captain and of major. He was commissioned a first lieutenant on entering the army in 1917, and was advanced to the captaincy in August of that year, while in December he won his final promotion as major. In May, 1918, he went overseas and was on duty at the front throughout the entire time. In August, 1921, he received the victory medal with five battle clasps, showing he was under fire in five different engagements, these being the Champagne defensive, the Oise-Aisne, the Aisne-Marne, the Argonne and the Toul sectors. In December, 1918, he went with the army of Occupation into Germany, being located in Coblenz until he returned to the United States in April, 1919. He then went to Camp Pike, Arkansas, where he was honorably discharged May 15, 1919. Immediately he resumed the work of his profession and long since he has reached a position as one of the most prominent surgeons of the state. He has been professor of pathology in the University of Arkansas, filling that chair from 1907 until 1910, while from 1910 until 1915 he was professor of gynecology. He has membership in the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association and is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons, and his discussion of any question before these organizations is regarded as a valuable contribution to the proceedings of the different bodies. He is also chief of the surgical staff of St. Vincent's Infirmary of Little Rock, Arkansas.

PROFESSOR OSCAR M. OWENS.

One of the well known educators in southern Arkansas is Professor Oscar M. Owens, superintendent of the Magnolia public schools. He is numbered among the natives sons of this state, his birth having occurred at Mountain Home on the 4th of June, 1882, a son of Thomas Jefferson and Rhoda Ellen (Keeney) Owens. Thomas Jefferson Owens, whose death occurred on the 3d of April, 1893, at Sulphur Rock, was one of the alert and enterprising citizens of that place. A native of Tennessee of Scotch ancestry, he came to this state in 1860, and locating at Sulphur Rock, conducted a mercantile business there for many years. He was but forty-three years of age at the time of his demise. Mr. Owens not only occupied an enviable position in business circles but was prominent in politics and frequently held public office. For eight years he was sheriff and collector of Independence county and he was assessor of that county for four years. Mr. Owens married Miss Rhoda Ellen Keeney of Scotch ancestry and a native of Tennessee. She is living in the old home at Sulphur Rock, hale and hearty, at the age of seventy years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Owens eleven children were born, nine boys and two girls, Oscar M. being the sixth in order of birth. Four of the sons are deceased.

Oscar M. Owens received his education in the public schools of Sulphur Rock and after graduating from the high school there entered Ouachita College at Arkadelphia. He was graduated from that institution with the class of 1918, receiving an A. B. degree and then for the next few summers he attended the Teachers College at Greeley, Colorado, obtaining his A. M. degree. In 1918 he came to Magnolia as principal of the Magnolia high school and in 1921 he was elected to his present position as superintendent of the city's schools. He majored in journalism, mathematics and science and while principal of the high school here he was an instructor in the last two subjects.

During his college days, Oscar M. Owens took an active and prominent part in all campus affairs and while a student at Ouachita College was first editor in chief of the college paper known as the Ouachita Signal. He was president of the Philomathean Literary Society and chief executive of the Baraca Sunday School class at Ouachita College. He was likewise a member of the debating council and won considerable prominence in that connection.

On the 4th of September, 1920, at Sulphur Rock occurred the marriage of Professor Owens to Miss Willa Moore, a native of Sulphur Rock and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Moore, prominent citizens of that community. Professor Owens is a consistent member of the Baptist church and teaches the Young Men's class. Mrs. Owens is a member of the Methodist church. Along strictly educational lines Professor Owens holds membership in various organizations and he has for many years been a member of the Parent-Teachers Association. He is a public-spirited citizen who takes a commendable interest in every enterprise for the promotion of the general welfare and he is held in high regard in Magnolia.

LEO JAY ADAMS, D. D. S.

Dr. Leo Jay Adams, devoting his time to dental surgery in Little Rock, was born in Painesville, Lake county, Ohio, February 28, 1892. His parents are Charles Don and Luella (Nichols) Adams. The Adams family is descended from two brothers who were natives of the Isle of Man and came to America early in the seventeenth century. The grandfather of Dr. Adams removed to Ohio when that state was very young and his son, Charles Don Adams, was born at Leroy, Ohio, but spent his life at Geneva, in Ashtabula county. He is a lawyer by profession and has held many positions of public honor and trust in that state. He served as county judge of Ashtabula county for twenty years and is still one of the leading residents of Ohio. His wife was born at Madison, Ohio, and her father was a colonel of the Union army in the Civil war. He became an extensive railroad builder and constructed the larger part of the New York Central Railroad.

Dr. Adams was educated in the graded schools of Geneva, Ohio, and at the Western Reserve College, in which he completed his course with the A. B. degree in 1915. He next became a student in the University of Kentucky and was graduated from the dental department in 1917 with the D. D. S. degree. The same year he volunteered in the service of his country in connection with the World war and was made a lieutenant in the naval department, being assigned to the Great Lakes naval station, where he remained for five months, when he was transferred to the New York station. There he remained for only a month, when he was ordered to the United States Steamship Santa Theresa and served for twenty-six months, making seventeen trips to France. When the World war was brought to a close he became a lieutenant in the Naval Reserve Corps and in 1919 he took up the practice of his profession in Little Rock, where he has since remained and has since enjoyed a liberal patronage. While he engages in general practice, he also specializes to a large extent in oral surgery and occupies the chair of oral surgery in the Research Hospital in Little Rock. He practiced in Lonoke before coming to the capital city and was appointed United States government agent for war risk insurance for that county. Dr. Adams passed the rigid examination and received the appointment of dental examiner under Form 1705 of the United States Civil Service Commission.

In politics Dr. Adams has always been a stalwart republican, voting with the party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He is an active member of the Baptist church and fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He belongs to the various dental societies and, being still young in years, the future holds much promise for him, as already he has attained an enviable professional position and possesses those characteristics which indicate continued advancement in his chosen life work.

JOHN M. ROSE.

John M. Rose, one of the more capable of the younger representatives of the Little Rock bar and a member of one of the prominent families of the state, has, since completing his law course, successfully engaged in practice in Little Rock, his native city. He was born April 22, 1891, and is a son of John M. and Lillie May (Kelly) Rose. The father was born in Batesville, Arkansas, October 8, 1855, and the mother's birth occurred in Malvern, this state, in 1860. They were married in Malvern, December 13, 1879, and became parents of three sons, all living: William N., W. D., and John M. The father was for many years a well known attorney of Little Rock and was recognized also as one of the stalwart supporters of the democratic party in this city. He departed this life on October 19, 1915, and is survived by his wife, who makes her home in the capital.

John M. Rose obtained his early education in the public schools of Little Rock and then, determining to follow in the professional footsteps of his father, he became a law student in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1914. He also pursued a special course in the Law School of the University of Chicago and thus became splendidly qualified by liberal training for onerous and responsible professional duties. No dreary novitiate awaited him following the initiation of his professional career. His thorough training, his natural ability and his wide acquaintance soon gained for him a good clientage and as the years have passed his practice has constantly increased in volume and importance. He has been connected with many leading cases and his presentation of a cause indicates his mastery not only of the immediate case engaging his attention but also of the principles of law applicable thereto.

In October, 1917, Mr. Rose made response to the country's call and joined the army, serving until January, 1919. He was in the chief of staff's office at division headquarters at Camp Pike from October, 1917, until January, 1918, when he was transferred with the colonel commanding to the One Hundred and Sixty-second Depot Brigade at Camp Pike, there continuing until the close of hostilities. He spent three months in the third Officers' Training School at Camp Pike. He later received a commission as second lieutenant.

Mr. Rose attends the Presbyterian church. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is also well known in club circles, having membership in the Country Club and the Little Rock Athletic Club. Along professional lines his connection is with the American Bar Association, the Arkansas Bar Association and the Little Rock Bar Association. The breadth of his interests is further indicated in the fact that he is a member of the American Legion and of the Board of Commerce. He is alive to opportunity and to duty and he is just as quick to take advantage of a chance to promote public progress as to advance his individual interests and fortunes. His worth as a citizen is widely acknowledged and his course reflects credit and honor upon an untarnished family name.

NAT R. CLARK.

Nat R. Clark is the oldest coal operator continuing in active business in this section of the state. He has developed an enterprise of large and profitable proportions and his business has been a contributing element in the continued growth and upbuilding of the section in which he lived. Possessed of marked energy and determination he has carefully formulated his plans and carried them forward to successful completion and has ever been watchful of the opportunities for steady development in his business. For many years a resident of Clarksville, Nat R. Clark was born in Johnson county, November 9, 1859, and is a son of A. P. and Belle (May) Clark. The grandfather in the paternal line was a native of Tennessee and spent his life in that state. The maternal grandfather, William May, became a pioneer settler of Johnson county, Arkansas, and his daughter, Belle May, was born in this state in 1829. The birth of A. P. Clark occurred in Tennessee in 1820 and they were married in Johnson county, Arkansas, where Mr. Clark followed farming throughout his life, dying in 1879, while his wife survived until 1880. They were consistent members of the Presbyterian church and their many sterling traits of character won them the high regard and warm esteem of all who knew them. Mr. Clark was also one of the early members of the Masonic fraternity in Arkansas and was ever a loyal and faithful follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party but he was never an office seeker. He preferred to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his business affairs and was a successful self-made man. To him and his wife were born ten children, but only five are living: W. P., who is a coal miner at Spadra, Arkansas; Nat. R.; Alice, the wife of W. A. Pearson, living at Pomeroy, Washington; May, the wife of Ed Umston, who is engaged in the monument business at McAlester, Oklahoma; and Thomas M., who is connected with coal mining at Clarksville.

Nat R. Clark obtained his education in the Spadra schools and at an early age began assisting in the work of the home farm, giving his attention to agricultural pursuits until he engaged in the coal business in 1891. In that year he leased a small coal mine and used a horse as a motive power in hoisting the coal. He also put his first shaker on a stump and thus with crude equipment started in the business. He is the oldest operator in this field and has met with every imaginable experience in the development of his business. Today, however, he has a large coal mine operated by the firm of Clark & McWilliams. This has a capacity of six hundred tons per day and their plant is thoroughly modern in every particular. They employ more than two hundred people and make extensive shipments of coal to Missouri, Arkansas, Nebraska and southern points. Mr. Clark has been very successful in the conduct of the business as the years have passed by. He started out in life empty-handed, owning in the beginning a little box house and four acres of ground in Montana, Arkansas; nor was he free from indebtedness at that time. Determination and energy, however, have enabled him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties that have barred his path to success and today he stands as one of the prominent representatives and honored business men of his section of the state.

On the 25th of December, 1883, Mr. Clark was married to Miss Amelia Crowley, who was born in Columbia, Mississippi, a daughter of J. S. and Julia (Crowley) Crowley. The father was a native of South Carolina, born in 1837 and is still living. The mother, who was born in Alabama in 1837, died in 1918. They removed to Arkansas in 1870 and took up a homestead, thereon rearing their family, while Mr. Crowley developed the land into a highly cultivated farm. In politics he is a democrat and he served for five years in Captain Thrall's battery from Mississippi during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Crowley were the parents of four children, but two of whom are living, the elder being Thomas J. Crowley, a machinist in the railway shops at Los Angeles, California. The only surviving daughter is Mrs. Clark. One of her great-great-grandfathers in the paternal line was John Jennings, who was born and reared in England, while her ancestors in the maternal line came from Ireland. Three of Mrs. Clark's ancestors were killed while serving in the Revolutionary war and one met death while defending the interests of his country in the Mexican war. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have become parents of a son, Henry Garland, born in 1887 and now engaged in the coal mining business with his father. He married Ernest A. O'Neal, a daughter of Frank O'Neal of Clarksville, who is a blacksmith, a coal miner and a native of Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Clark have two children: Ventrers, born January 17, 1910; and Mary Josephine, born in 1914. Like his father the son has been very successful in business and the two have always been associated since the son attained adult age. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. and Mrs. Nat R. Clark are also loyal followers of the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church and guide their lives according to its principles. He has never sought to figure prominently in political office but has always concentrated his attention upon his business affairs. His life proves the force and value of industry and determination when guided by laudable ambition. He has worked his way steadily upward, his labors crowned with notable success and he today wears the proud American title of a self-made man.

VAN B. SIMS.

One of the public officials of Arkansas is Van B. Sims, who is occupying the position of state comptroller, to which he was appointed in January, 1920. He has been a resident of Little Rock since 1912, except during 1914, when he was with the United States government in the Indian service. He is a native son of Georgia, his birth having occurred in Rome on the 4th of March, 1890, his parents being Rev. John Warren and Alice Rose (Locke) Sims, who are likewise natives of Georgia, the former born in 1858, while the mother's birth occurred in Cedartown, Georgia, in 1860. They were there married in 1885 and in 1895 they became residents of Arkansas, living in various towns in the state as the ministerial duties of Rev. Mr. Sims called him from place to place. He and his wife now make their home in Marvell, Arkansas, and he is treasurer of the Baptist Orphans Home. As a minister he has done effective work in behalf of his denomination, being most zealous and earnest in promoting the cause with which he became allied in early manhood. His political support is given to the democratic party. To him and his wife have been born three sons and three daughters and with the exception of one son all are living.

Van B. Sims was but five years of age when brought by his parents to this state and in the public schools of Arkansas he pursued his early education, while later he became a student in Beauvoir College, a preparatory school, and subsequently took additional courses of study in Ouachita College in Arkadelphia, Arkansas. He then took up bookkeeping and accounting, following the profession in De Queen for a number of years. He was called to the office of city treasurer of De Queen, Arkansas, in which capacity he served for one term, and he was also deputy circuit clerk of Sevier county, Arkansas, for a period of two years. He came into the employ of the state as legislative secretary to Gov. Joe T. Robinson, in January, 1913, and probably holds the state's record for secretarial service in the governor's office, in point of having served four consecutive administrations, besides a few "acting governors." He entered the state service in 1913 with but one hobby, and that was the placing of the state on a cash basis. He contended that this could be accomplished in only one way and that was by taking up the state's enormous floating indebtedness (amounting to about three hundred and fifty thousand dollars at that time) by the issuance of serial payment notes. Very few people thought it should be done in that way and still fewer thought it could be. The very mention of "notes" or "bonds" was sufficient to make most public men dive for cover. The legislature of 1913 would hardly consider the proposition and did not vote on it. The legislature of 1915—although the indebtedness had grown to more than one-half million dollars—voted on the proposition and beat it overwhelmingly. The legislature of 1913 raised the general revenue tax rate one-half mill, but still the indebtedness grew. The governor vetoed more than six hundred thousand dollars of the 1915 appropriations, but there was another enormous increase in the indebtedness, which had reached the amount of eight hundred and eleven thousand dollars in 1917. Loaded with facts and figures and backed by Governor Brough and a few of his advisors, the issue was put squarely before the 1917 general assembly and received an almost unanimous vote—only five votes in each branch being against it. The retiring governor led a stubborn fight against the measure and carried same to the supreme court, where the Act was upheld in all particulars. The state now buys on cash markets at a saving of thousands of dollars per annum. The interest and principal of the old indebtedness is being retired through the sinking fund which was created by diverting part of the taxes formerly used for maintenance and without the slightest increase in taxation. Thus, through consistency and persistency, the thing which "could not be done" was accomplished. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party and he has been an earnest and untiring worker in its behalf, serving as assistant secretary of the state central committee in 1918. In January, 1920, he received from Governor Brough the appointment to the position of state comptroller for a term of three years, and he is now acceptably filling the position.

On the 12th of November, 1913, Mr. Sims was married to Miss Anne Lindsay, who was born in Covington, Tennessee, in 1891, her parents being Rev. Z. D. and Josephine (Manning) Lindsay. Her father, a native of Tennessee, is a divine of the Methodist Episcopal church and is now living in Ashdown, Arkansas. They accorded their daughter excellent educational opportunities and she is a graduate of the Henderson-Brown College at Arkadelphia, this state. Mr. Sims and his wife are highly esteemed in Little Rock, where they have made many friends. He belongs to the Baptist church and is a Royal Arch Mason, loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft. He has a wide acquaintance in Arkansas, owing to the fact that he has lived in various places, and wherever he is known he is spoken of in terms of high respect and warm regard. During the period of the World war he served on all bond drives as publicity director for Little Rock.

NINA L. CUMMINGS FARRELL.

"A people that takes no interest or pride in the noble achievements of remote ancestors will never achieve anything worthy to be remembered with pride by remote descendants," wrote Lord Macaulay. The memory of the early pioneers of America is being carefully preserved, however, by numerous societies who desire thus to perpetuate and to disseminate the highest ideals of American citizenship. Mrs. Farrell, who has every reason to be proud of her ancestral line, was born in Huntley, Illinois, a daughter of Stewart and Matilda (Daniels) Cummings, both of whom were natives of the state of New York and the ancestry of both can be traced back to the earliest period of American history. Her father died in 1903 but her mother is living and is an honored member of the Farrell household. Joseph Coffin, one of Mrs. Cummings' ancestors, founded the Coffin school for the training of the descendants of the Coffin family. Mrs. Farrell was educated in her home town and in St. Xavier's convent. In 1879 she became the wife of Robert Emmett Farrell, a native of Michigan, and in 1881 they removed to Arkansas. Here Mr. Farrell and his father established an extensive industry which grew to have a national reputation. The business was carried on under the name of the William Farrell Lumber Company and became one of the largest in the south, retaining that name until 1913, when it became the Boyle-Farrell Lumber & Land Company, following the death of William Farrell. The partners in the enterprise today are Robert E. Farrell and John F.

Boyle, in connection with whose sketch on another page of this work appears a more extended mention of the business. To Mr. and Mrs. Farrell have been born four sons: Lucian E. C., Lyman B., William S., and Charles Morris, all of whom are married, have homes in Arkansas and are associated in business with their father.

Mrs. Farrell is a member of the Little Rock Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution and has served as its secretary and its treasurer. Her membership in this patriotic body comes through her great-grandfather, Zarick Wheeler. She is also a member of the Daughters of 1812, by reason of her descent from Guy Cummings in the paternal line and Joseph Coffin in the maternal line. At this writing, in 1922, Mrs. Farrell is the regent of the Nicholas Headington Chapter of the Daughters of 1812. By birth and education she is well fitted to stimulate and initiate the best policies of the society and the organization has profited greatly through her leadership. She is also an active member of the Educational Aid Society, which was organized for the purpose of rendering material aid to deserving girls desiring an education. She is likewise a member of the Musical Coterie and of the Authors and Composers Club, the League of Women Voters and many other organizations of social character. She is also a member of the P. E. O., organized and incorporated in the state of Iowa, for the education and advancement of young girls, now a national organization of 100,000 members. She was also a member of the general committee from Pulaski county in the United War Work Campaign in behalf of the seven welfare organizations recognized by the United States government as qualified for work among the American troops at home and overseas during the war. Mrs. Farrell was elected one of the delegates to the state convention of the Daughters of the Revolution at Fayetteville, Arkansas, in 1922. She is a charming hostess and a fine example of the true meaning of the term lady—an inheritor of the ideals of her ancestors.

SIDNEY ROBERT CRAWFORD, M. D.

Dr. Sidney Robert Crawford, who in the practice of his profession at Little Rock is specializing in the treatment of eye, ear, nose and throat, was born in Benton, Arkansas, January 13, 1894, his parents being William Ayers and Mary Olivia (Adams) Crawford, who were also natives of Benton, the father born in 1854 and the mother in 1858. They were there married in 1886 and became parents of four sons and three daughters all of whom are living with the exception of one son. Mr. Crawford still lives at Benton and has now retired from business. His wife died in February, 1915.

At the usual age Dr. Crawford became a pupil in the public schools of his native city and continued his course through successive grades until graduated with the class of 1912. He completed his medical course by graduation on the 31st of May, 1917, from the medical department of the University of Arkansas and later he pursued a special course on the eye, ear, nose and throat at Tulane University in New Orleans. In June, 1919, he located in Little Rock for practice along the line in which he now specializes and through the intervening period of two years has made steady progress in his profession. He employs the latest scientific discoveries in his chosen life work and his practice is now such as many an older physician might well envy.

Interruption to his professional career came when patriotism prompted his response to the country's need. He enlisted on the 7th of June, 1917, being made a first lieutenant of the Arkansas National Guard, commissioned by Governor Charles H. Brough. He was instructed to organize an ambulance company to be known as the First Arkansas Ambulance Company, which he formed at Hot Springs. On the 5th of August, 1917, the company was mustered into the Federal service and was sent to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, there remaining to the 13th of August, 1918. In May, 1918, Dr. Crawford was transferred to the One Hundred and Fortieth Field Artillery and with this command went overseas, landing in France on the 7th of September, 1918. There he began intensive training and the command was just back of the firing line when the armistice was signed. Dr. Crawford remained in France for five months with his command which acted as a training regiment. He then returned to the United States, arriving in Hoboken, New Jersey, June 6, 1919. On the 3d of May of that year, he was promoted to the rank of captain. Dr. Crawford was appointed by the Veterans Bureau at Washington, D. C., as the eye, ear, nose and throat specialist for the disabled veterans of Arkansas.

On the 27th of December, 1917, Dr. Crawford was married to Miss Blanche Donham, who was born in Benton, Arkansas, August 22, 1898, a daughter of W. R. Donham, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Crawford attended Ouachita College and the Ward Belmont College and is a lady of liberal culture and refinement. They have become parents of one son, Sidney R., Jr., born March 21, 1920. Dr. and Mrs. Crawford are members of the Baptist church and they occupy an enviable social position. Politically he is a democrat and fraternally he is a Mason, while his professional memberships are with the Pulaski County Medical Society, Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a young man actuated by laudable ambition, who already has attained a notable professional position. The prompt response which he made to his country's call during the World war was indicative of his character. He has ever made immediate answer to the call of duty along any line and his legion of friends attest the many sterling traits of his character.

ALEXANDER HUMBOLDT COHEN, D. D. S.

Dr. Alexander Humboldt Cohen, engaged in the general practice of dental surgery at Little Rock, was born in Florence, Alabama, August 6, 1882. His father, who was a traveling salesman with a large corporation, removed to New Orleans, when the Doctor was a small boy and there he pursued his education in the public schools. Upon reaching early manhood he showed an inclination for the profession of dentistry and entered the New Orleans College of Dentistry, from which he was graduated in 1905, receiving at that time his professional degree. Immediately afterward he opened an office in New Orleans, where he continued in active practice for four years. During the succeeding two years he was located in Monroe, Louisiana, and then removed to Hot Springs, Arkansas, where he continued in active practice until 1915, when he came to Little Rock. Being advised to go to eastern Arkansas, he did so and there remained until 1921, practicing in that part of the state. He decided, however, to return to Little Rock and in 1921 again established an office in this city, where he has built up an excellent practice and is enjoying a splendid and well deserved reputation.

Dr. Cohen is a son of Sigmund and Sarah (Sloman) Cohen, who are still residents of New Orleans and he was the second in order of birth in their family of five children. On New Year's day of 1916 he was married to Miss Adele Ingram, a daughter of Marion and Mary (Edwards) Ingram of Millersburg, Iowa, her parents being representatives of one of the old pioneer families of Iowa. Mrs. Cohen, a woman of pleasing personality, is a member of the Eastern Star and The Maccabees. Fraternally Dr. Cohen is a Mason and is also identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Zell, a physician and surgeon, who specializes in X-ray work and is a member of one of the prominent medical firms of Little Rock, was born in Wuerttemberg, Germany, September 24, 1882, a son of Mathias George and Augusta (Lahner) Zell. The parents were also natives of Wuerttemberg, Germany, the former born in 1841 and the latter in 1849. In the meantime he had entered upon preparation for the profession of medicine and surgery and completed a course in the medical department of Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1905. He is prominently known today as a Roentgenologist and today is one of the members of a very prominent medical firm of Little Rock. He entered upon the practice of his profession in 1905 and his identification with Little Rock dates from 1906. He has studied broadly along the line of this profession and his capability is pronounced. During the World war he was on the medical advisory board and was also contract surgeon at Little Rock.

On the 13th of April, 1910, Dr. Zell was married to Miss Amelia Mary Snyder, who was born in Morrillton, Arkansas, in 1889, a daughter of John Snyder, a native of Pennsylvania, now residing in Little Rock. Mrs. Zell was educated in St. Mary's Academy

HON. VIVIAN O. BRACK.

Hon. Vivian O. Brack, attorney-at-law, practices his profession in Little Rock, his native city. He was born October 4, 1886, and is a son of Carl O. and Lucie Herminia (Beauchamp) Brack. The father was born in 1848 and the mother's birth occurred in Todd county, Kentucky, in 1852. They were married in Little Rock in 1872 and are parents of two sons: Vivian O. and Milton, both of Little Rock, where the parents still reside.

Vivian O. Brack obtained a public school education in Little Rock and afterward attended the Arkansas Military Academy, from which he was graduated in 1907. He then spent some time in the law school of the University of Arkansas and later was for two years a student in the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia. On the expiration of that period he returned to his native city and was admitted to the bar of the state in 1913. In 1916 he was admitted to practice before the supreme court of Arkansas and in 1920 before the supreme court of the United States. He is now general counsel for the Western Law Company and has a good private practice.

Mr. and Mrs. Brack have become the parents of four children: Lucie Owen, Annie Fray, Milton Otto and Mary Imogene.

The religious affiliation of the family is with the Trinity Episcopal church and in political belief Mr. Brack is a democrat. He has been quite active in the work of the party, his opinions carrying weight in its councils, and he gives thoughtful and earnest consideration to the vital questions that come up for settlement. He also delves to the root of every legal problem and his thoroughness has been one of the elements in his success at the bar.

C. S. BARNETT.

Since 1890 C. S. Barnett has been superintendent of the city schools of Eureka Springs. He is of southern descent, his birth having occurred in Bowling Green, Kentucky, on the 12th of February, 1862. His ancestors originally located in Virginia and from that state emigrated into Kentucky, where his father, Thomas J. Barnett, and his mother, Mary Jane Jackson, were born, their parents residing in Warren county. After their marriage they continued to make Warren county their home and the father was one of the representative agriculturists of the community. He also engaged in buying and feeding stock and during the Civil war he was active in that capacity for the Federal government. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Barnett, three children were born, two of whom are living: C. S., whose name initiates this review; and Mrs. J. F. Carpenter, whose husband is one of the successful grocers in Eureka Springs. Mr. Barnett was a stanch democrat and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Baptist church.

After receiving his preliminary education, C. S. Barnett attended the Ogden College at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and subsequently became a student in Lebanon University at Lebanon, Ohio, from which latter institution he was graduated with the class of 1885. Soon after receiving his diploma he began teaching in the country schools of Kentucky and he continued to teach throughout the state for over four years. He then went to Weatherford, Texas, where he was engaged in educational work for a like period and in 1889 he came to Eureka Springs to become superintendent of the city schools and he has been active in that capacity since. He now has under his supervision fourteen teachers and about six hundred pupils and he is tireless in his devotion to the duties devolving upon him in that connection. Mr. Barnett is also interested in raising White Wyandotte chickens and he is considered an authority on chrysanthemums.

In 1888 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Barnett to Miss Adda Hendrickson, a native of Ohio, and to their union four children have been born: Thomas, a student of the Arkansas University for two years, is now chief engineer for the United Fruit Company of Tela, Honduras; Rose, now a primary teacher in the Eureka Springs schools, received her education in the high school here and later attended Crescent College; Margaret, a teacher of English and Latin in the high school at Jonesboro, received her education in Crescent College and at the school of expression in Boston; and Charles, whose death occurred at the age of five years.

The family is affiliated with the Baptist church and Mr. Barnett is a deacon and teaches in the Sunday school. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and since attaining his majority he has given his support to the democratic party. Mr. Barnett is readily conceded to be one of the prominent educators in the state and he is active in any movement furthering education. He was a member of the first board of education in Carroll county.

ROBERT BERTRAM BABBITT.

A forceful figure in business circles in Little Rock is Robert Bertram Babbitt, now president of the Newsum Auto Tire Vulcanizing Company. He was born in Huntingburg, Indiana, August 2, 1890, and is a son of Millard F. and Emma Matilda (Pohl) Babbitt. The father was born in Hawesville, Kentucky, in 1857, and the mother in Cannelton, Indiana, in 1862. They were married in the latter city, August 8, 1888, and became parents of three sons and three daughters, all of whom are living, the family circle still remaining unbroken by the hand of death. The family removed to Little Rock during the early boyhood of Robert B. Babbitt and the father has since engaged in the insurance business in the capital city. He gives his political support to the republican party.

Robert B. Babbitt completed his education in the schools of Little Rock. He was but two years of age when his parents left Indiana and removed to Henderson, Kentucky, and in 1903 the family came to Arkansas, settling in Hot Springs, where they remained for two months and then removed to Little Rock, so that R. B. Babbitt was for a short time a student in the public schools there. After putting aside his textbooks in 1905, he went to work as an office boy and rose to the position of shipping clerk with a cotton firm of Little Rock, remaining with that house for three seasons, or for nine months each year. He afterward entered the employ of the Pulaski Gas Light Company, with which he continued for two years and was advanced through intermediate positions to that of purchasing agent. Later he was connected with the Natural Gas Supply Company for two years as its cashier and still later was with the Arkansas Water Company for one year, in charge of the North Little Rock plant. His identification with the Democrat Printing & Lithographing Company covered service as bookkeeper, city salesman and traveling salesman and on leaving that company in June, 1917, he entered the navy.

Making immediate response to the country's call for troops by enlisting in the naval service, Mr. Babbitt was assigned to the radio station in the navy yard at New Orleans, where he remained until September, 1918, and during that time did special duty as radio operator on government chasers in the Gulf of Mexico. He was next sent to the aviation depot at Pensacola, Florida, for training in aviation, there remaining until February, 1919, when he was transferred to "inactive duty" in the Naval Reserve Corps, from which he received honorable discharge on June 6, 1921. On returning to Little Rock in February, 1919, he resumed work with the Democrat Printing & Lithographing Company, remaining there for two months, when he resigned and took a position with the Newsum Auto Tire Vulvanizing Company of Little Rock as salesman. This was in May, 1919, and in August of the same year he was advanced to the position of manager, while in January, 1920, he became president of the company and is still its chief executive officer. He has contributed largely to the upbuilding of a very substantial business and is regarded as one of the forceful business men of the city.

On the 5th of November, 1919, Mr. Babbitt was married to Miss Lise Marie Brun, who was born in Donaldsonville, Louisiana, March 6, 1899, a daughter of Lawrence J. Brun and Eugenie (Esneault) Brun, the latter now deceased. The former is a native of Louisiana, now residing at New Orleans. Mr. and Mrs. Babbitt have one child: Stella Eugenie, born October 5, 1920.

Mr. Babbitt gives his political endorsement to the democratic party. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Board of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, the Travelers Protective Association, the Loyal Order of Kangaroos, the Little Rock Motor Club and the American Legion. In the last named he is very active, serving as vice commander of M. M. Eberts Post, No. 1, in which he represents the navy branch of service. He is today widely known as a representative of the younger business men and citizens of Little Rock and enjoys the esteem and confidence not only of the men of his own age but of those who have achieved twice his years.

ROBERT N. MANLEY, M. D.

Dr. Robert N. Manley, physician and surgeon, practicing at Clarksville, was born in Pope county, Arkansas, June 25, 1884, and is a son of Matthew and Josephine (Dickey) Manley, the former a native of Johnson county and the latter of Pope county, Arkansas. The father, who was born in 1851, departed this life in 1886, but the mother, who was born February 22, 1855, is yet a resident of Pope county. They were members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Manley gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He began life on a farm and devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits till death ended his labors, winning a substantial measure of success, so that he was the owner of a good farm property at the time of his demise. He was known as a peacemaker in his neighborhood, for the people of the community were constantly calling upon him for advice and on many occasions he kept them out of trouble and out of the court. He was a son of John E. Manley, who was born near London, England, and crossed the Atlantic to Philadelphia at the age of eighteen years to complete his education. He finished his studies, but in the meantime had become so infatuated with America that he determined not to return to England. In the '40s he removed to Arkansas and spent the remainder of his days in this state, his time being divided between farming and school teaching. He died at about the time of the outbreak of the Civil war. Dr. Manley's maternal grandfather was Louis W. Dickey, who was born in Middle Tennessee, and came to Arkansas at an early day, here following the blacksmith trade. He lived to the advanced age of eighty-five years and he served through the Civil war under Price. At one time while on a furlough at home he was captured. It will be seen that both in the paternal and maternal lines. Dr. Manley is descended from old pioneer families of Arkansas and from an early day representatives of the name have taken active and helpful part in promoting progress and improvement in the community in which they lived. The family of Matthew and Josephine Manley numbered four children: John, who resides on a farm in Pope county; Lucy, the wife of J. F. Moore, also a farmer of Pope county; Robert N.; and Matthew, who occupies the old home farm of his parents.

Dr. Manley, who is the only one of the three sons that entered professional life, acquired a common school education in his native county and then devoted his attention for some time to farm work, remaining on the old homestead to the age of nineteen years, when he became a student in the University of Arkansas, matriculating in the medical department at Little Rock. He attended the college for three years and at the end of that time entered upon the active practice of medicine in order to make enough money to complete his course. He afterward resumed his studies and was graduated with the class of 1912. He first took up the work of the profession at Lamar, Arkansas, where he remained in active practice for five years and in 1917 he removed to Clarksville, where he has since successfully engaged in professional work, save for the period of his service in the army. He joined the United States troops in 1918, being trained at Fort Riley, Kansas, where he served until he was discharged in the following December. He then returned home to resume his practice and now has a large number of patients, so that his business makes continuous demands upon his time and energy.

In 1908 Dr. Manley was united in marriage to Miss Zoe Battenfield, who was born in Scottsville, Arkansas, a daughter of David Battenfield, a pioneer of Pope county, who in 1849 went to California with the gold seekers and brought back a considerable treasure as a result of his mining operations on the Pacific coast. He died in London, Arkansas. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Lee, was born in Virginia and is a cousin of General Robert E. Lee. She has in her possession an old will written by this distinguished Confederate leader. In the family of Dr. and Mrs. Manley are three children: Sarah Nell, twelve years of age; Matthew Henderson, a lad of nine; and Josephine, who is seven years of age. All three children are in school. Mrs. Manley is a member of the Christian church, while the doctor belongs to the Presbyterian church. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party but the honors and emoluments of office have had no attractions for him.

He belongs to several medical societies, including the Johnson County, the Southern and the Arkansas Medical Societies, also the American Medical Association. He has served as president of the County Society and he takes an active interest in the Southern Medical Society, attending all of its meetings. He devotes his entire time to his medical practice which is general in character. He has taken postgraduate work at the Tulane University at New Orleans and is continually improving every opportunity that will promote his knowledge and advance his efficiency. In addition to this he maintains an active interest in the American Legion of Clarksville, of which he was one of the organizers and was made service officer, since which time he has filled the position and in his official capacity has given assistance to one hundred and forty-nine boys. Most of these, largely through Dr. Manley's efforts, have been able to obtain compensation from the government. He has devoted much time and considerable money to assisting these boys who went to the army from his neighborhood and he is loyally holding to the high standards and ideals which lie behind the great organization known as the American Legion, the organization which was formed of those men who turned the tide of war in Europe and who are now holding to the highest standards of American manhood and civilization.

SAMUEL FRAUENTHAL.

Samuel Frauenthal, former judge of the supreme court of Arkansas, and now engaged in the private practice of law in Little Rock as senior partner in the firm of Frauenthal & Johnson, is a native of Louisville, Kentucky, and a son of Jacob and Yetta Frauenthal, both of whom were born in the kingdom of Bavaria, Germany. In young manhood the father crossed the Atlantic to the new world and in 1852 established his home in Louisville, Kentucky, but afterward removed to Russellville, that state, where he resided for nearly thirty years, becoming a leading merchant and influential resident of that city. In the early '90s, however, he joined his sons in Conway, Faulkner county, Arkansas, where he lived retired throughout his remaining days, his death occurring when he had reached an advanced age. His wife survived him for several years and then she, too, was called to the home beyond. In their family were six sons and one daughter. The daughter married Leo Schwarz of the firm of Frauenthal & Schwarz. The sons have attained distinction as business men and citizens. Joseph Frauenthal of this family, was the first to come to Arkansas and has been a resident of Conway since 1875, having long conducted an extensive mercantile business in that city, where his brothers Henry and Charles also make their home.

Judge Frauenthal is the only member of the family residing in the capital. He acquired his early education in the public schools of Louisville, Kentucky, and afterward attended Bethel College in Russellville, Kentucky, where he completed his course in 1883, at which time the Bachelor of Arts degree was conferred upon him. He began preparation for law practice as a student in the Louisville Law School and following his graduation removed to Arkansas, entering upon the practice of his profession in Conway. He had not then attained his legal majority, but he soon demonstrated his ability, which has constantly increased as the result of his continual study and broadening experience as the years have passed. He has long displayed comprehensive knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence with ability accurately to apply these principles to the point in litigation and for many years has been regarded as one of the ablest attorneys and wisest counselors of the state. For several years he engaged in practice in partnership with Colonel George W. Bruce of Conway.

It was but natural that a man of Judge Frauenthal's ability should be called to public office. With a mind naturally logical and analytical his deductions being always clear and forceful, it seemed that he was destined to solve the most complex legal problems and on the 1st of February, 1909, he was appointed by Governor Donaghey to the office of associate justice of the supreme court, to fill out a vacancy. In July, 1909, at a special election, he was regularly elected to the position and he continued upon the bench until January 1, 1913, having proved himself a peer of the ablest members who have sat in this court of last resort. A contemporary writer has said, "His opinions have been marked by clarity, precision and directness, and they show invariably his high sense of the principles of equity and justice, as well as his broad and exact knowledge of law and precedent. Thus he has proved a most valuable member of the highest tribunal of the state and has the unqualified confidence and respect of his confreres and of the members of the bar."

With his retirement from the bench Judge Frauenthal took up the private practice of law and in 1918 entered into partnership relations with Ector R. Johnson, under the present firm style of Frauenthal & Johnson. He is likewise a director of the Bankers Trust Company and also of the Bank of Conway, at Conway, Arkansas, and has become identified with a number of industrial corporations, which he represents on the directorate, his opinions being of marked value in the successful conduct of these interests.

Judge Frauenthal is a Mason and also has membership with the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Along strictly professional lines he is connected with the Little Rock, the Arkansas State and the American Bar Associations.

CAPTAIN JAMES GUY TUCKER.

Captain James Guy Tucker, veteran of the World war, has the distinction of being the youngest of the state officials of Arkansas, having been elected to the position of auditor on the 2d of November, 1920, when but twenty-six years of age. His previous experience and natural qualifications, however, well fitted him for the office and he is making an excellent record in the position of responsibility which he is now filling.

Mr. Tucker was born in El Dorado, Union county, Arkansas, April 14, 1894. His paternal grandfather, Milton Peronet Tucker, the second son of Rev. Reuben and Jane (Cannon) Tucker, was born at Camden, South Carolina, August 2, 1823. The great-grandfather was pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in Camden, owned a plantation a few miles from the city and was a slaveholder. He was also interested in mercantile pursuits in Camden. A short time before his death, which occurred in 1831, he bought two farms in Georgia—one in Talbot and one in Meriwether county. In 1832 his widow, accompanied by her three sons and a daughter, her brother, Rev. John Cannon, and her slaves, removed to Georgia. Milton P. Tucker was then about nine years of age. Melvin, the eldest of the three sons, died in early manhood.

Milton P. Tucker had attended school before the family left Camden. He was rather precocious and had learned to read Latin by the time he was eight years old. After the removal to Georgia the opportunities to attend school were extremely limited. In fact there were no schools, except when a few of the citizens would subscribe to a fund to employ a teacher—and the teachers were often persons of mediocre ability. In his desire to obtain an education, the boy wrote to his guardian, a Mr. De Pass of Camden, who came to Georgia to see him. Arrangements were made for him to enter the Methodist Episcopal Training School at Oxford, Georgia, where he remained a student until he was graduated. This school is now Emory College, of Atlanta, Georgia. While he was in this institution several noted educators served on the faculty, notably the Capers and Pierces. Lucius Q. C. Lamar, afterward associate justice of the United States supreme court, was a classmate of young Tucker at Oxford. His mother married a Mr. Vanwinkle, who died after a short time, and his youngest brother was killed by falling off a wagon. His sister, Georgiana, and his half sisters were educated at Salem, North Carolina, where there was a good school for girls. The two half sisters were little girls when his mother died, and the responsibility of educating them fell on Milton. He had sufficient money to send them to the school mentioned. His sister later became the wife of T. B. Adams, who was at one time state attorney of Georgia.

Milton P. Tucker married Miss Mary Caroline McGhee and became interested in public affairs. For several years he was at the head of the inferior court, as the county court in Georgia is called, and was admitted to the bar, though he never practiced law. At the outbreak of the Civil war in 1861 he was in Texas, where he had also obtained a license to practice law. He hurried back to Georgia, raised a company for home defense and served about Savannah until the term of enlistment expired. Most of his men then entered the Confederate army. He organized another company and served in Tennessee and Kentucky under General Gracey. He was captured near Cumberland Gap and sent to Johnson's Island, in Lake Erie, near Sandusky, where he was held as a prisoner for twenty-one months. When President Lincoln was assassinated, Captain Tucker was selected to read Andrew Johnson's first proclamation to the prisoners. After the war he was elected to the Georgia legislature and served in the session of 1866-67. His name was mentioned for congress, but the act prohibiting all who had held office under the United States before the war and under Confederate states during the war rendered him ineligible.

After the death of his first wife, who left no children, Mr. Tucker remained a widower for twelve years. In 1869 he married Miss Georgia Catherine Beckwith, whose mother was a cousin of General Zachary Taylor. To this marriage were born two sons: Guy Beckwith, now deputy auditor of Arkansas; and Clarence Milton, a physician at Haughton, Louisiana. In 1871 he came to Arkansas. When the law above referred to was repealed in 1872, his wife urged him to return to Georgia and reenter politics, but he declined and for several years was engaged in teaching. He died in 1882.

James Guy Tucker, whose name introduces this review, acquired his education in the public schools of El Dorado and of Little Rock while spending his youthful days in the home of his parents, Guy Beckwith and Martha Juliet (McCain) Tucker. The father was born on a farm in Troup county, Georgia, April 2, 1870, and formerly resided in El Dorado, Union county, Arkansas, for a considerable period but is now a resident of Little Rock. He has devoted much of his life to the occupation of farming and has also been called to public office, in which he has proven his loyalty to the state by the prompt and faithful performance of his duties. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party. He was elected democratic national committeeman for Arkansas in 1908 and served in that capacity until 1912. It was in El Dorado, in 1891, that he wedded Martha Juliet McCain, who was there born in 1870 and is a daughter of James Grandison McCain, who was a lieutenant of the Confederate army through the Civil war and is now deceased. Mrs. Tucker is still living and by her marriage has become the mother of three sons and a daughter, the latter being now the wife of Louis A. Geupel, who was born in Evansville, Indiana.

Captain James Guy Tucker of this review was the second in order of birth in his father's family. After mastering the preliminary branches of learning in the public schools of El Dorado he accompanied his parents on their removal to Little Rock and there he continued his education until graduated from the Little Rock high school as a member of the class of 1911. Ambitious to enter upon a professional career, he utilized every opportunity to make this course possible and eventually worked his way through Georgetown University at Washington, D. C., winning the LL. B. degree upon graduation with the class of 1916. He then returned to Little Rock and soon afterward enlisted in the Arkansas National Guard, for it was about this time that the trouble with Mexico occurred. He served on the border from August, 1916, until March, 1917, and was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant on his return. When war was declared with Germany he at once reported to his company and was stationed at Camp Beauregard, Louisiana. It was on the 1st of April, 1917, that he was promoted to a first lieutenancy and was on duty at Camp Beauregard as a member of the One Hundred and Fifty-third Infantry of the Thirty-ninth Division. There he remained until June, 1918, when he was sent overseas. On arrival in France he was transferred to the Three Hundred and Fifty-third Infantry of the Eighty-ninth Division and served in the front line with this division during the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives. He was wounded and gassed and was cited for gallantry in action:

"HEADQUARTERS EIGHTY-NINTH DIVISION, GERMANY.
General Orders. No....106. 17 December, 1918.

The division commander is proud of the opportunity to commend those members of this command, named below, for their bravery, courage and devotion to duty displayed during the operations of the division in the St. Mihiel sector and in the subsequent Argonne-Meuse offensive.

First Lieutenant James Guy Tucker, 353d Infantry. During the Argonne-Meuse offensive, November 1-11, 1918, Lieutenant Tucker showed great skill in the handling of Company E, 353d Infantry, and, although in poor physical condition, by his cheerfulness, courage and bravery under great hardships and heavy fire, set an example that was an inspiration to the men of his company. During the assault on the north edge of the Bois de Barricourt, on November 2, 1918, at a time when the advance of the battalion was critically endangered by the heavy machine gun fire of the enemy, Lieutenant Tucker showed great skill and presence of mind in conducting his company, then in support to the right flank of the battalion, and though under heavy fire, succeeded in flanking the enemy machine guns and enabled the battalion to move forward. . . . .

The division commander is happy to express his praise and appreciation to these members of the division who exhibited such heroism, exceptional fortitude and coolness under the extreme hardships of campaign.

By command of Major General Winn.

John C. H. Lee,
Colonel, General Staff,
Chief of Staff."

It was on the 1st of April, 1917, that Mr. Tucker was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, while on the 2d of December, 1918, he was advanced to the rank of captain. He returned to the United States in June, 1919, after having served for six months in the occupied area of Germany, and was mustered out in the month of July.

In politics Captain Tucker has always been a democrat and in July, 1920, was approached by some of his friends, who urged him to become a candidate for the office of state auditor. He won his nomination almost without campaigning from a field of four contestants and carried fifty-nine out of the seventy-five counties in the state. In the election which followed he was seen to be the choice of the people and is the youngest elective state official in the service. He had had several years' previous experience in clerical and executive work and his training and education fully qualified him for the position which he is now filling.

It was after his election to this office that Captain Tucker was married to Miss Velma Boyce, who was acting as his secretary. The marriage was celebrated in the Second Baptist church by the Rev. Calvin B. Waller. Mrs. Tucker was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1896, and is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Boyce, of the capital city, where she has spent her entire life and where on the 30th of April, 1921, she became the bride of Captain Tucker. They have many friends in this city and the hospitality of a large number of Little Rock's most attractive homes is freely accorded them. Captain Tucker belongs to the Delta Chi, a college fraternity. He has membership in the Baptist church and he is keenly, actively and helpfully interested in all those projects which make for the uplift of the individual and the betterment of the community at large. A lifelong resident of Arkansas, his cooperation can at all times be counted upon to further any measure for the general good and as a public official his record is reflecting credit and honor upon the people who honored him in placing him in his present position.

JOHN T. BATTEN.

John T. Batten, a prominent attorney of Paragould and a veteran of the World war, was born in Advance, Missouri, on the 7th of January, 1888, a son of Frank and Margaret (Bryant) Batten, both natives of Tennessee, in which state they were reared to young manhood and womanhood. The father, who is deceased, was for many years engaged in farming, having come from Missouri to Arkansas in 1895, and located on valuable land near Paragould. In 1878 occurred the marriage of Mr. Batten to Miss Margaret Bryant and to their union six children were born, five boys and one girl. Four sons and the daughter are living. John T., whose name initiates this review, was the fifth in order of birth.

John T. Batten received his education in the public schools of Paragould and in due time enrolled in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville, from which institution he was graduated in 1915 with the A. B. degree. He then took up the study of law in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and he lacked one year of completing his law course when, upon the entrance of the United States into the World war, he put all personal interests aside and enlisted in the army. His law course was finished, however, at Kings College University of London, London, England, while he was stationed in that city with the American Expeditionary Forces. He entered service as a first lieutenant in the infantry and served for some time as adjutant of the First Battalion, One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Infantry. He was in service for over twenty-seven months, about one year of the time having been spent in active service overseas. While overseas he acted as judge advocate of the general court martial. On the 16th of August, 1919, Mr. Batten received his honorable discharge at Camp Pike, Little Rock, with the rank of first lieutenant. He immediately returned to Paragould and began the practice of his chosen profession in connection with Mr. Shane and Mr. Pierce, the firm becoming Shane, Pierce & Batten. That partnership was maintained for some time, when Mr. Pierce withdrew from the firm and it is now conducting business as Shane & Batten. Although they have an extensive general practice, the firm has specialized in criminal law and the two members have won an enviable reputation among the leading criminal lawyers in the county and state. In addition to his private practice Mr. Batten is deputy prosecuting attorney for Greene county, having been appointed to that office on the 1st of January, 1921. While he was overseas he was elected police judge of Paragould and is now active in that office. He is sincerely devoted to his profession, of which he is a constant student. He is an active member of the Greene County Bar Association.

At Dallas, Texas, on the 1st of January, 1920, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Batten to Miss Ethel Browning of Piggott. She is socially prominent, being a leader in all club, social and church affairs. Since attaining his majority Mr. Batten has given his political allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Paragould Lodge, No. 368, F. & A. M., of which body he is secretary. He is likewise identified with Para-gould Lodge, No. 1080, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and he is a generous contributor to its support. He is one of the most public-spirited and progressive citizens of Paragould and every man who knows him is his friend.

NATHAN A. CAMMACK.

Nathan A. Cammack is connected with business interests of Wilmar as shipping clerk and planing mill foreman for the Gates Lumber Company and is a representative of a family that for three generations has been identified with the lumber industry, with every phase of which he is thoroughly familiar. He was born at Cambridge City, Indiana, May 31, 1874, a son of Charles and Lauretta (Neff) Cammack, who were also natives of the Hoosier state, the former born at Milton and the latter in Anderson. As a young man the father was associated with his father and grandfather in the conduct of a woolen mill at Milton, Indiana, until they disposed of their business and went to Cambridge City, that state, where they operated a sawmill until about 1880. At that time they sold their interests and Charles Cammack came to Arkansas, while his father, Nathan H. Cammack, went to Cottage Home, Illinois, there erecting a sawmill. For four years he was connected with the lumber industry at that place and then moved his mill to Cammack Station, Indiana, where he was joined by his son, David, and later they established their plant at Mulberry, Indiana, where Nathan H. Cammack died in 1898. On coming to Arkansas, Charles Cammack had become identified with lumber interests and about 1890 he associated himself with the Gates brothers, pioneer lumbermen of the state. For more than thirty years he has been prominently connected with the Gates interests at Wilmar and Crossett and is now residing in the latter place, being one of the best known operators in connection with the lumber industry in this part of Arkansas.

From the time he was four years of age until he reached his majority Nathan A. Cammack was reared by his paternal grandfather and his education was acquired in the grammar schools of Cambridge City, Indiana, Carbondale, Illinois, and Mulberry, Indiana, where he finished the work of the eighth grade. He then entered the preparatory department of Purdue University of Indiana, in which he spent a year, afterward becoming a student at De Pauw University, but after completing his sophomore and junior courses he was obliged to discontinue his studies, owing to ill health, and in July, 1894, he went south in order to recuperate. Coming to Wilmar, he joined his father and in 1895 he returned to Indiana, assisting his grandfather in operating the mill at Mulberry for about eighteen months. In 1897 he again came to Wilmar, securing a position as a common laborer in the Gates brothers' mill and working eleven hours a day. He received a wage of one dollar and five cents per day and through determined effort and indefatigable industry worked his way steadily upward, being made shipping clerk in 1903. He continued to act in that capacity until 1918, when he was also made foreman of the planing mill and is now capably filling the two positions. He has devoted his life to the lumber industry and has therefore gained an expert knowledge of the work in which he is engaged. He is the oldest employe of the Gates Lumber Company, having been retained in its service continuously for a period of twenty-five years, and he is doing all in his power to promote the firm's interests, his record being one of which he has every reason to be proud.

Mr. Cammack has been married twice. His first union was with Miss Mattie Heflin of Drew county, Arkansas, whom he wedded on St. Valentine's day, 1898. Her demise occurred in October, 1906. They became the parents of three children: Charline, the wife of C. S. Geter of Akron, Ohio; and David C. and Emma, both at home. For his second wife Mr. Cammack married Miss Maggie S. Heflin, by whom he has two children, a son and a daughter: Fred and Nathan A., Jr.

That Mr. Cammack has been mindful of his moral obligations is indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church and in his political views he is a stanch republican. He is a leader in the ranks of the party in this part of the state and is now serving as secretary and treasurer of the central committee of Drew county. His fellow citizens have called him to public office and from 1909 until 1919 he served as mayor of Wilmar, his long retention in that connection being unmistakable proof of the excellence of his administration and his popularity as a man, as this is a strong democratic district. He is well known in fraternal circles of the locality, being affiliated with Wilmar Lodge, No. 122, of the Knights of Pythias; Wilmar Camp, No. 15896, of the Modern Woodmen of America; and Holly Comp, No. 192, of the Woodmen of the World. Throughout his career he has closely applied himself to the work in hand and his enterprise and ability have carried him steadily forward, his present prosperity having been gained entirely through his own efforts. He is ever ready to give his support to measures for the promotion of the public welfare and at all times has been actuated by an unselfish spirit of devotion to the general good. His life has been guided by high standards and his genuine personal worth has secured for him the esteem and goodwill of a large circle of friends in Wilmar.

JAMES HOMER RICE.

James Homer Rice, superintendent of public works at Little Rock, is the son of Patrick J. and Nora Bingham (Parker) Rice. His birth occurred in this city in 1887 and here he acquired his early education in the public schools, while later he attended the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1908 with the degree of Civil Engineer. For two years thereafter he occupied the post of chief engineer of the Little Rock, Maumelle & Western Railroad and left that position to become assistant division engineer of the Frisco line, with which he remained for fifteen months. His next official position was that of assistant United States engineer of water and sewers and he continued to act in that capacity until after America entered the World war, when he enlisted in the Engineer Corps and was commissioned a captain of the First Arkansas Engineers, being assigned to duty at Camp Pike and later at Camp Root. At the close of the war he became a member of the Reserve Officers Engineers Corps, U. S. A., with the rank of captain.

Returning to civil life, Captain Rice became superintendent of a large construction project and later he served for eleven months as engineer of the Moffat Railway of Colorado and Utah. When he left that position he became associated with a firm of consulting engineers and thus was busily employed until 1919, when he was elected superintendent of public works and building inspector of the city of Little Rock, to which position he was reelected in 1921, so that he is the incumbent in the office. He is thoroughly qualified for the duties and responsibilities that devolve upon him, for he has had comprehensive training and broad experience and he is in close touch with the great scientific principles which underlie his tasks. The call of duty is one to which he has ever made prompt and immediate response and he has that spirit of perserverance which prompts him to carry forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes. He is a member of the Little Rock Engineers Club, belongs to the American Society of Civil Engineers and to the Association of Engineers. Fraternally his membership connections are with the Elks and the Eagles and politically he is a democrat.

In 1916 Mr. Rice was married to Miss Margarette English, daughter of P. D. English, a pioneer citizen of Arkansas and for fifty years clerk of the supreme court. Mrs. Rice is a graduate of Vassar College, which conferred upon her the Bachelor of Arts degree. By her marriage she has become the mother of two children, James H., Jr., and Peyton English. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rice are descendants of old American families, the English family being of Virginia stock, while the ancestral record of Mr. Rice will be found in the record of his mother, Mrs. P. J. Rice, on another page of this work. From the time of his graduation, Captain Rice has been given credit for ability and wide knowledge of his profession and in the important post he now fills he has given marked evidence of that ability to an extent that insures him a continuation in the office of superintendent of public works perhaps as long as he desires to hold the position.

CHARLES T. BLOODWORTH.

A prominent member of the Arkansas bar is Charles T. Bloodworth of Corning, who is likewise active in the conduct of an abstract and farm loan business. He is a Kentuckian, his birth having occurred near Dixon, Webster county, on the 19th of January, 1878. His father, John Wesley Bloodworth, died in 1893, at the age of fifty-three years. He was born and reared in Tennessee and came to Randolph county, this state, in 1878. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade and followed that line of work until his demise. He served throughout the Civil war as a private in the Tennessee infantry, under General Robert E. Lee, and participated in many of the most important battles of that conflict. At Shawneetown, Illinois, in 1874, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Bloodworth to Miss Nancy Elizabeth Carner. She is sixty-four years of age and is making her home with a daughter in Newata, Oklahoma. She was born and reared in Kentucky. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Bloodworth four children were born, three boys and one girl. Two sons and the daughter are living. Charles T., whose name initiates this review, was the eldest.

In the acquirement of his education Charles T. Bloodworth attended the Maynard Academy, although his early education was obtained for the most part by home study. He engaged in farming on the home farm until 1898, when he put all personal interests aside and enlisted in the United States army for service in the Spanish-American war. He became a private in Company C, Second Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, and received his honorable discharge in February, 1899. He then returned to Arkansas and engaged in teaching school in Randolph and Clay counties until the 1st of March, 1901, when he went to Springfield, Missouri, and enrolled in a business college there. Upon the completion of his course he came to Corning and accepted a position as stenographer in the law office of G. B. Oliver. He was active in that connection three years, reading law in his spare time, and was admitted to the bar in 1904. He did not begin actual practice, however, until 1906. In that year he established offices for the practice of his chosen profession and has always practiced independently. In addition to being a lawyer he conducts an abstract and farm loan business and has the leading abstract business for the western district of Clay county. In 1906 Mr. Bloodworth founded the Clay County Republican, a local newspaper at Corning, and was active in the publication of that sheet for a period covering eight years, 1906 to 1914. At the termination of that time he disposed of his interest in the paper, which is still being edited under the name of the Clay County Times. In 1910 Mr. Bloodworth was appointed postmaster of Corning and was active in that important position throughout President Taft's administration.

Mr. Bloodworth has been twice married. His first marriage was celebrated in April, 1902, when Miss Ethel Spencer of Doniphan, Missouri, became his wife. To them was born a son, Haskell Spencer. He is nineteen years of age and a senior in the Corning high school. Mrs. Bloodworth died in April, 1903. On the 1st of October, 1907, Mr. Bloodworth was united in marriage to Miss Effie Belford, a native of this place, and they have become the parents of six children, of whom one boy and one girl died in infancy. The other children are: Charles T., Jr., twelve years of age; Ralph R., aged seven; William Howard, four years of age; and Helen M., aged ten.

Mr. Bloodworth gives his political endorsement to the republican party and the principles for which it stands. In June, 1917, he was elected a delegate from Clay county to the constitutional convention of that year and was a delegate from the first district of Arkansas to the Republican National convention in 1912, and again in 1920. Along strictly professional lines Mr. Bloodworth holds membership in the Arkansas State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. During the World war he was tireless in his devotion to the government and was not only active as a member of the county legal advisory board but made many speeches throughout the county in behalf of the various Liberty Loans, Red Cross drives and other activities and he was ready for admission into an Officers Training School, when the armistice was signed.

JUDGE JOHN W. MEEKS.

Judge John W. Meeks, engaged in the general practice of law at Pocahontas and also active in the conduct of an insurance business, was born on the 7th of October, 1858, near Fairfield, Wayne county, Illinois. His father, R. B. Meeks, who is deceased, was born in Illinois, his parents having been among the pioneer settlers of the southern part of the state. He followed farming throughout his life and was one of the most progressive and successful agriculturists in the county. In Wayne county, in 1856, R. B. Meeks was married to Miss Amelia C. Beard, who is also deceased. She was a native of Wayne county, her parents having also been among the early settlers of southern Illinois. To their union three children were born, all of whom are living. John W., whose name introduces this review, was the oldest child. By his second marriage, R. B. Meeks became the father of four girls and one boy.

In the acquirement of his early education, John W. Meeks attended the common schools of Wayne county. His earliest ambition was to become a lawyer and subsequently he took up the study of law, his preceptor having been Judge Edwin Beecher of Wayne county, a prominent attorney. In 1884 John W. Meeks was admitted to practice at Mount Vernon, Illinois, but he did not begin his legal career immediately. From 1886 to 1889 he taught in Mount Pleasant Academy, Barren Fork, Arkansas, and subsequently he removed to Mammoth Springs, where he began his career as an attorney. He practiced there until 1914, a period of twenty-five years, and he enjoyed an extensive and important clientele. He was active in the public life of that community, served as mayor for three terms, was a member of the board of charities of the state for the sixth congressional district and served three terms as circuit judge of the sixteenth judicial district. He held the latter office from 1902 to 1914. In August, 1914, he came to Pocahontas and has since resided here. He has won an enviable position for himself among the leading attorneys of the county and aside from his professional duties he is active in the conduct of an insurance business. He is a man of proven ability and is well calculated to inspire all with his splendid business acumen and sterling worth.

On the 27th of October, 1897, at Newport, was celebrated the marriage of John W. Meeks to Miss Mary D. Tucker, a daughter of Thomas P. Tucker of Batesville. They became the parents of three children: Arkie A., who is living at home and who is engaged in the conduct of a millinery establishment; Charles Culp; and Mary Elizabeth, who is the wife of Herbert Schnabaum, a well known business man of Pocahontas. Charles Culp made the supreme sacrifice during the World war. He met his death in an aeroplane accident near Rimancourt, in the Haute Marne district, on the 8th of March, 1919, in his twenty-sixth year. He was a second lieutenant in the Two Hundred and Fifty-eighth Aero Squadron and saw active service in the observation department. He was in the army two years and served with the American Expeditionary Forces overseas one year. His death came as a severe blow to his family and many friends, for he was one of the most popular young men in Pocahontas. The body of Lieutenant Meeks was returned to Pocahontas for final interment. His father, the Judge, was active during the World war and gave generously of his time and money in the furtherance of the government's interests. He was chairman of the legal advisory board of Randolph county and made many speeches throughout the county in behalf of various war drives.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and for some time Judge Meeks has been a member of the board of stewards and a teacher of the Men's Bible class. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has held all offices in the Grand Lodge of the state. From 1913 to 1914 he was Grand Master of the state and attended the Sovereign Grand Lodge as delegate to the conventions at San Francisco, California, and Chattanooga, Tennessee. Judge Meeks is known to be a progressive, enterprising citizen and he can be relied upon to assist all movements tending to advance the interests of Pocahontas or Randolph county. He well merits the success he has achieved and no citizen stands higher in this community for integrity and sterling worth.

THOMAS H. ROGERS.

Thoroughly trained in the basic principles of jurisprudence and recognizing fully the necessity for thorough preparation of cases for the work of the court, Thomas H. Rogers has made steady progress in his professional career and is today one of the forceful lawyers of the Logan county bar, practicing successfully at Paris. He was born in Dublin, Logan county, Arkansas, December 26, 1874, and is a son of Winfield S. and Martha R. (Tygart) Rogers. The father was born in Johnson county, Arkansas, May 22, 1849, and is still living, aged seventy-three years. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Collier) Rogers, who were natives of North Carolina and of Tennessee, respectively, their marriage having been celebrated in the latter state. John Rogers was a farmer by occupation and also a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church. Winfield S. Rogers was in his minority when brought to Arkansas and at Dublin, this state, he was married, after having spent his youthful days in Johnson county. He wedded Martha R. Tygart, who was born in Logan county, Arkansas, in 1854, a daughter of John Tygart, who was killed during the Civil war while valiantly serving in defense of the Union, meeting his death at the hands of southern sympathizers. Following his marriage, Winfield S. Rogers purchased land, becoming owner of a forty-acre tract in Logan county, to which he added from time to time as his financial resources increased, until he now owns valuable property and six hundred acres of land which is underlaid with coal. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party. Fraternally he is a Mason and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Their family numbered seven children, four of whom are living: William Jonas, who is located on a farm near Dublin, this state; Thomas H.; Buell S., a merchant of Scranton, Arkansas; and Hester E., who is the wife of Toney M. Gray, a live stock dealer and owner of a cotton gin at Prairie View, Arkansas. The mother died in 1895.

Thomas H. Rogers mastered the branches of learning, taught in the rural schools, continued his education in the State University of Arkansas, 1894-96, and later became a law student at Little Rock. There he was graduated in 1912 but had been admitted to the bar in the previous year, and in 1917 he was licensed to practice before the supreme court. He entered upon the active work of the profession at Paris in 1911 and has been a member of the bar continuously since, save for the period of his service in the army. He joined the Second Arkansas National Guards on the 14th of October, 1903, remained with that organization until August 5, 1917, and went to the Mexican border on the 19th of June, 1916, being mustered out on the 15th of March, 1917. He then reentered the service in connection with the World war on the 5th of August, 1917, and was trained at various camps, pursuing a special course at Fort Sill as a student in the infantry school of arms. He completed his work there in October, 1917, after which he was with the Thirty-ninth Division at Camp Beauregard. He rejoined his organization in November, 1917, which was the Second Arkansas Infantry, later known as the One Hundred and Forty-second Field Artillery. He was ordered to the school of fire at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, on the 7th of February, 1918, and completed his course there on the 21st of April, 1918. He then rejoined his organization at Camp Beauregard on the 23d of April and afterward took an extra course in the field artillery at Camp Beauregard. He was then ordered across, entraining from Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, on the 14th of August for Camp Mills, New York, and embarked at Hoboken, New Jersey on the 27th day of August, 1918, sailing for Brest, France, on the 31st of that month, on the steamer Leviathan. He disembarked on the 7th of September at Brest and remained in camp at Pontinausan barracks, the old barracks of Napolean, for one week. He left there on the 14th of September and went to Bain, where he continued for two weeks, after which he marched fifty-five kilometers to Camp DeCoetquidan, where he completed an intensive training course. On the 5th of November he was pronounced ready for active duty at the front but the armistice was signed six days later. He was promoted to the rank of major June 26, 1917. He sailed from France on the 3d of June, 1919, leaving St. Nazaire on the Amphion, which was thirteen days in making the voyage to Hampton Roads, Norfolk, Virginia.

After the war Mr. Rogers returned home and resumed his law practice at Paris, where he has remained. He possesses an analytical mind and keen insight into involved problems, which is one of the marked characteristics of his practice. He served in the state senate in 1917 but resigned in 1919, while in France. He had been a member of the house of representatives of the Arkansas legislature in 1915. On his return from the war he was reappointed to the state senate and thus in both branches of the assembly he has rendered valuable service to the commonwealth in his endorsement of measures which tend to promote the progress and upbuilding of the state. In November, 1920, he was elected prosecuting attorney, entering upon the duties of the office on the 1st of January, following, so that he is the incumbent in that position.

On the 12th of August, 1903, Mr. Rogers was married to Miss Jessie Dandridge, a daughter of G. G. Dandridge, who was born in the state of Virginia and is a descendant of Mrs. Martha Dandridge Washington, wife of George Washington, Mrs. Washington's maiden name being Martha Dandridge. They have become the parents of five children: Elizabeth Fay, who graduated in May, 1922, from Paris high school; Virginia Sue, Laura Beatrice, Jeptha Scott and Thomas Dandridge, all in school. Mr. Rogers is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his wife and three daughters belong to the Christian church. He is also identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and with the Knights of Pythias and is a past chancellor commander of the latter lodge. In politics he has always given his support to the democratic party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He served as sheriff of Logan county from 1908 until 1910, in addition to the other offices which he has filled, and at no time has his fidelity to duty been called into question. He has ever been most faithful and loyal to the trust reposed in him and is now enjoying an excellent private practice and making a splendid record as prosecuting attorney.

CLARENCE QUARLES.

Clarence Quarles, a veteran of the Civil war and a planter of note, has been justice of the peace in Helena for some twenty-seven years. He was born in Christian county, Kentucky, on the 11th of February, 1844, a son of John N. and Penelope (Brunson) Quarles, the former a native of Louisa county, Virginia, and the latter of Stewart county, Tennessee. The paternal grandfather, John Minor Quarles, was born in Virginia and removed to Kentucky at an early day. He was one of the most prominent attorneys in that state and likewise a successful farmer. Soon afterward he and his wife removed to Kentucky and he engaged in farming there for many years. In 1851 they came to Phillips county, this state, and the father bought a farm here, residing thereon until the close of the Civil war, when they removed to Helena. Mr. Quarles owned two good farms in this county at the time of his demise and for some years had been financially independent. His death occurred in 1873. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Quarles four children were born, Clarence, whose name initiates this review, being the only one living. He was likewise the eldest child. A brother, Greenfield Quarles, was a very prominent lawyer and jurist in Phillips county. He was active in politics for many years and served in both the state senate and the house of representatives. His demise occurred on the 14th of January, 1921. In the acquirement of his education Greenfield Quarles had attended the Virginia Military Institute. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army and was in active service one year. During that time he was twice wounded and captured. Throughout his life John N. Quarles gave his political allegiance to the democratic party and his religious faith was that of the Episcopal church. Fraternally he was identified with the Masons and was for years an exemplary member of the craft.

Clarence Quarles received his early education in the public schools of his native county and in due time enrolled in Stewart's College at Clarksville, Tennessee. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the First Kentucky Cavalry and served under Colonel Ben Hardin Hill, who married a sister of Abraham Lincoln's wife. Mr. Quarles served throughout the conflict and won promotion to a lieutenancy in the confederate service. Although he was active in many of the most important battles of the war, he was not once wounded, neither was he captured. At the close of the war he returned to his father's farm in Phillips county and as all the outbuildings on the farm had been burned and the crops destroyed by the invading forces, he set about to rebuild the houses and bring the land to its former highly cultivated state. He remained on the farm a number of years and then removed to Helena, where he has since resided. He is still actively engaged in agricultural dvelopment, owning two good farms in this county, and he devotes his entire time and attention to his private interests and to the duties devolving upon him in the office of justice of the peace, which office he has held for twenty-seven years.

In 1873 occurred the marriage of Mr. Quarles to Miss Josie Green, a native of Phillips county, and a daughter of Joe and Annie Green. They were both among the early settlers of this county and the father was one of the leading agriculturists here. He is now in the income tax department of the government at Washington, D. C.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Quarles has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal church and he is a generous contributor to its support. Since taking up his residence in Helena, Mr. Quarles has wielded a great influence for good here and no man stands higher in the community for integrity and sterling worth.

JUDGE ARTHUR D. POPE.

Judge Arthur D. Pope, who has occupied the bench of the county court and is now serving as district prosecuting attorney for the district comprising the four counties of Calhoun, Columbia, Ouachita and Union, is classed with the prominent and representative members of the legal profession in this section of the state. His birth occurred on a farm south of Magnolia, in Columbia county, Arkansas, February 14, 1881, and after he had attended the public schools he engaged in railroad work for a few months. Later he entered a preparatory school and next became a student in the State University. That he was actuated by laudable ambition of a marked strength of character is indicated in the fact that he worked his way through college. He was graduated in the class of 1906. During the last two years of his college course he acted as assistant librarian in the university. He was awarded a scholarship at the law school of the University of Chicago and pursued a two years' law course there, thus splendidly qualifying for the profession which he had determined to make his life work. In February, 1909, he was admitted to practice in Arkansas and established an office in Magnolia, where he at once entered upon the duties of the profession. Advancement at the bar is proverbially slow and yet he made steady progress, giving proof of his ability by the able manner in which he handles his cases before the courts. His fellow townsmen showed appreciation of his faithful service and loyalty to the public interest by electing him to the office of mayor and soon after his retirement from that position he was elected county judge, in which position he served for two terms. He also filled the position of secretary of the State Association of County Judges and was numbered with those representatives of the bench who are striving most earnestly and effectively to uphold the highest standards of judicial fairness, capability and impartiality. He is now filling the position of prosecuting attorney

Judge Pope has long been an acknowledged leader in democratic circles and his opinions carry weight in party councils in the state. He was for two terms a member of the state democratic central committee from the seventh congressional district and his work has been of the character to secure success for his party along legitimate lines at all times.

On the 1st of November, 1911, Judge Pope was married to Miss Octavia C. Sheppard and they became the parents of three children: Francis O., Laura E. and John Julius. The wife and mother died on the 23d of February, 1920, her death being a matter of deep regret to the many friends who highly esteemed her by reason of her splendid traits of heart and mind. Judge Pope is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the B. P. O. E., and also of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church. He holds membership in Paragould Lodge, No. 368, F. & A. M.; Paragould Chapter, No. 103, Royal Arch Masons; Ascension Commandery, No. 29, of which he is commander; Arkansas Consistory, No. 1, at Little Rock; and Omega Council, No. 37 of Rector. He contributes many articles to Masonic journals and is identified with Quartuor Coronati Lodge, No. 2076, an English society, as a correspondence member. The membership of this organization is made up of those who are original investigators along Masonic lines. Mr. Partlow is likewise affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, belonging to Paragould Lodge, No. 1080; and Paragould Lodge, No. 237, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. For the last three years he has been a member of the school board. During the World war he was chairman of the Red Cross activities for Greene county, served on the legal advisory board of Greene county and was one of the Four-Minute men making speeches in behalf of the various drives throughout the county.

HON. ROBERT MINOR WALLACE.

Hon. Robert Minor Wallace, an orator by nature and a lawyer by profession, has been one of the most potent forces in molding public thought and opinion not only in Arkansas but along many lines throughout the United States. Making his home in Little Rock, he has become well known in the national capital and in various sections of the Union by reason of his championship of the prohibition cause.

Mr. Wallace is a native of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in New London, Union county, August 6, 1857. He is a representative of one of the old southern families. His grandfather, Colonel Robert Minor Wallace, for whom he was named, served in the Confederate army and as a member of the general assembly of the state in 1867. He was a man of affairs, with extensive influence and left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the history of the commonwealth. An uncle, Colonel H. G. P. Williams, was a gallant officer of the Nineteenth Arkansas Infantry and a member from Union county at the convention that framed the state constitution of 1874. He, too, did much in molding public thought and opinion and was regarded as a man of marked force and of sterling character.

William Jonathan Wallace, father of Robert Minor Wallace of this review, was born in Chester district, South Carolina, December 17, 1833, and was a worthy scion of his race. He came to Arkansas in his boyhood with his parents, who settled in Union county, and his entire record was in harmony with that of a family that ranked with the most prominent and intelligent families of the old southern school. He devoted his life to the care of his plantation until the outbreak of the Civil war. His political endorsement was given to the whig party. When hostilities were inaugurated between the north and the south he enlisted in 1861 and served in the Confederate army as a captain and as major of the Ninth Arkansas Regiment until killed by a cannon ball which struck him full in the face at Resaca, Georgia, on the 15th of May, 1864. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Susan Ann Williams, was born in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, June 27, 1834. She was exceptionally endowed with much beauty and attractive personality and marked literary and musical taste and talent. She died August 1, 1860, about four years before the death of her husband, leaving two children: Robert Minor and Martha Ascenath. The daughter became the wife of Neil W. Carothers, a prominent lawyer and author of Chattanooga, Tennessee, who died at Fayetteville, Arkansas. Mrs. Carothers afterward became librarian of the State University there and later removed to Austin, Texas, where in the University of Texas she has occupied a prominent and important place for sixteen years. She has written most charming articles for the magazines and is a woman of equal influence with that of the male members of the family. She is now prominently connected with the Daughters of the American Revolution and other prominent women's organizations. Her eldest son, Neil Carothers, took his Bachelor of Arts degree in the Arkansas University and the Rhodes scholarship degree at Oxford, England, while Princeton University conferred upon him the Ph. D. degree. There he was retained as an instructor until called to service in the United States war department at Washington, D. C., in connection with the World war. He is a young man of brilliant accomplishments and promise and is now engaged in special service for the United States government in New York city.

Robert Minor Wallace, whose name introduces this review, the only son of his parents, obtained a common school education and afterward became an A. B. graduate under J. W. Nicholson, principal of the Arizona (La.) Seminary and president of the University of the State of Louisiana. He also attended law lectures in the city of Little Rock and was admitted to the bar from the office of Judge U. M. Rose, of this city. He entered upon active practice at the bar of Arkansas and has long maintained an eminent position among its representatives. He is a man of pronounced ability in his chosen calling by reason of his comprehensive familiarity with the principles of jurisprudence and combined with clear reasoning, logical deduction and an eloquence that never fails to win attention and seldom fails to gain desired verdicts.

It is a recognized fact that the lawyer more than any other professional or business man has figured most extensively in connection with political affairs. The reason for this is not far to seek. The qualities which equip one for the successful practice of law—careful analysis and clear deductions—enable him also to find solution for the intricate problems of politics. It was but natural, therefore, that a man of Mr. Wallace's learning and ability should be called upon for important public service. He was elected to the Arkansas general assembly from Union county and he also filled the position of prosecuting attorney in the thirteenth judicial district. He was likewise assistant United States attorney at Texarkana, Arkansas, and represented his district in the United States congress from 1902 until 1911. While sitting in the national halls of legislation he gave most thoughtful and earnest consideration to the vital questions which came up for settlement and his advanced views, his cultured reasoning and his sound opinions carried weight and influence in the adoption or rejection of congressional measures. On one occasion the Hon. Champ Clark, speaker of the house of representatives said: "Minor Wallace's speech in congress on the relations of the north and south I have always regarded as one of the greatest and most eloquent orations delivered during my services in that body." W. J. Bryan spoke of him as "an orator of magnetism and strength with fine address," while Burke Cochran said: "His speech in behalf of the prospective nominee (W. J. Bryan) was a masterpiece of English and insight." For a period of five years Mr. Wallace was lecturing for the Anti-Saloon League of America and at the same time did some incidental lecturing in connection with Chautauqua assemblages. Dr. John G. Cornwell, director and lecturer of the Radcliffe Chautauqua at Washington, D. C., said: "The speech to which we have just listened by the Hon. Minor Wallace, I have not heard surpassed by any orator on the American platform, from John B. Gough to John G. Woolley. For informing fact, legal grasp, functional insight, convincing eloquence, logic, power and the assertion of manhood rights, it was the great effort of a great orator in a great cause." Mr. Wallace is now concentrating his efforts upon his law practice, which has ever been of a distinctively representative character.

Mr. Wallace was united in marriage in 1879 to Miss Minnie Ella Pennington, who was born in Arizona, Claiborne parish, Louisiana, on the 7th of November, 1860, a daughter of J. D. Pennington, of that place. Mrs. Wallace was educated in the Arizona (La.) Seminary and in Brookhaven College of Mississippi. She died in 1886 and Mr. Wallace afterward wedded Jennie Kelso, who was born in Magnolia, Arkansas, April 9, 1867, and is a daughter of John M. Kelso, of that place. Mrs. Wallace was educated in a convent at Galveston, Texas, and in Mrs. Warner's College at Little Rock. There were four children of the first marriage. The eldest, Roberta Williams, born October 30, 1880, is now the wife of R. E. Kelly, a prosperous business man of Homer, Louisiana; Neil Pennington, born September 4, 1882, died January 22, 1884; Minnie Nell, born August 13, 1884, is the wife of Fred A. Couch, active in the cotton business at Magnolia, Arkansas; David Minor, born June 22, 1886, lived but two weeks. The children of the second marriage are: Louise Ann and John Kelso. The former was born March 1, 1899, and is an A. B. of the Arkansas University and successful teacher in the public schools of Colorado. The son, born September 28, 1902, is a high school graduate and is now a student in Henderson-Brown College, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

In former years Mr. Wallace was connected with the Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Woodmen of the World, but is a non-attendant at the present time. He has never had ambition for martial honors or glory and in times of the country's wars has been too old or young for active service, yet has ever been ready to respond to public needs or to advance the public welfare in any possible way. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party and he has been a platform speaker in its behalf through a series of years but has never sought nor cared for political honors or positions. He has membership in the First Methodist Episcopal church at Little Rock, and his Christian faith has found expression in his untiring efforts to promote projects and causes which have to do with the introduction of higher moral standards and advanced ideals of life. It was this which occasioned his most active and effective work in behalf of prohibition and his natural gift of eloquence combined with his broad study and understanding of the problem both from a moral and economic standpoint made him a most forceful and effective speaker. An eminent American statesman said: "The thing that is supremely worth having is the opportunity for doing a piece of work which will be of signal service and benefit to mankind." This opportunity came to Minor Wallace and in his utilization of it the world has fared forward to higher ideals.

W. E. SPENCE.

Since 1895 W. E. Spence has practiced law in Piggott and he well merits the esteem in which he is held by his professional brethren throughout the county and state. He was born in Camden, Alabama, on the 15th of February, 1860, a son of W. W. and Evelyn (McNeill) Spence, the latter of Scotch descent. The father, whose demise occurred at Clarkton, Missouri, in 1893, at the age of sixty-five years, was for many years a minister of the Presbyterian church. Previous to entering the ministry he engaged in educational work and was a dominant factor in the organization of the Camden Female Institute, which is still in existence. That institution was established in 1850. W. W. Spence was born and reared in South Carolina but removed to Alabama prior to the Civil war. Upon the outbreak of the war he enlisted in the Confederate army from the latter state and served throughout the conflict as a first lieutenant in the cavalry. He was a highly educated man for his day and enjoyed the confidence and osteem of all of his fellowmen. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Spence was celebrated in 1856 at Camden, Alabama. She was born and reared in that state and her demise occurred in 1875, at the age of forty-three years. To their union ten children were born, nine boys and one girl. Two sons and one daughter are living. W. E., whose name introduces this review, was the second in order of birth.

W. E. Spence received home instruction, his father having been his teacher and his law education was acquired through reading and through the experience he received as clerk in various offices of leading attorneys. From clerk he advanced to bookkeeper and was active in that capacity in an office at Malden, Missouri, for some three years.

In 1886 he was elected clerk of Clay county and served in that office six years, or until 1893. While in the clerk's office he spent his spare time in the study of law and in 1895 was admitted to the bar. He immediately entered practice under his own name, and has so continued, having been for a period of twenty-seven years in Piggott. He is one of the two oldest practitioners in this community. Although for many years his practice was mostly general, he is now specializing in civil cases and has won a widespread reputation in that connection. At two different times Mr. Spence has served as mayor of Piggott and his administrations were marked by development and improvement and continued prosperity. He has always been a stanch advocate of education, realizing what it means to the boy or girl starting out into the world on his or her own account, and for some fifteen years he was a director of the local school board.

At Boydsville, on the 13th of December, 1888, Mr. Spence was united in marriage to Miss Mary Simmons, a daughter of Dr. G. W. Simmons. Her father was for many years one of the most prominent physicians and surgeons in Clay county and was the oldest member of the profession in that county at the time of his demise. Mr. and Mrs. Spence are the parents of seven children: Evelyn, whose demise occurred at the age of four years; Bernie, who is serving in the legal department of the St. Louis, Southwestern Railroad Company at St. Louis, was private secretary to Senator Caraway for six years, and also served for one year at Camp Pike during the World war; Raymond E., who married Miss Kinley Dunscomb of Piggott, and is now associated with his father as stenographer in the law office; Opal and Ayleene, both of whom are residing at home; William M.; and Mary Catherine.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Presbyterian church and for many years Mr. Spence has been active as an elder. Along strictly professional lines he holds membership in the Arkansas State and Clay County Bar Associations and fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being an exemplary member of the craft. He holds membership in Piggott Lodge, No. 545, F. & A. M.; is a charter member and was first master of the blue lodge; belongs to Piggott Chapter, No. 134, Royal Arch Masons, and is a charter member of that body, of which he was also the first high priest; and he is a non-active member of Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 12, of Jonesboro. Mr. Spence is a man of well proved ability and is calculated to inspire all with his manly qualities and sterling worth. During the World war he gave generously of his time and money in promoting the government's interests and not only served on the legal advisory board but was active in organizing the different townships to raise war funds, making many speeches in behalf of war activities throughout Clay county.

MRS. MINNIE BRYAN DAVIS.

Mrs. Minnie Bryan Davis is the daughter of Thomas Smith and Nancy Jane (Montgomery) Bryan. Her father, a native of Tennessee, was but seven years of age when brought by his parents to Arkansas, the family settling in Prescott, where Thomas S. Bryan became not only one of the county's most prominent business men but also the largest owner of real estate in that section. He was but fifteen years of age when the Civil war broke out, but fired with a desire to fight for the land to which his forbears had pioneered in the early days of the republic, he went into the ranks and served from 1861 until 1865, acting part of the time as orderly for Governor Fleming. The last two years he served with the Tenth Arkansas Cavalry. At the close of the struggle he returned to Prescott and became a railroad agent, while later he turned his attention to mercantile pursuits, carrying a line of dry goods and jewelry. In the conduct of his business he won a substantial measure of success. In early manhood he wedded Nancy Jane Montgomery, a native of Columbia county, Arkansas. Her grandfather, Andrew H. Montgomery, was a soldier of the War of 1812 and his father was captain of the Mountain Rangers of the Tennessee Militia. The Montgomery family was also established in Arkansas in pioneer times. Mrs. Davis is a direct descendant of Elizabeth Morris and she is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution and to the societies formed by those whose ancestors have fought in three other different wars of the country. Her father, Thomas S. Bryan, was called to his final rest in 1918.

That the blood of American pioneers and patriots flows in the veins of Mrs. Davis is clearly shown in the heroic struggle which she has made in rearing and educating her children. Left practically without resources when a young woman with two small children, she has fought a noble fight in maintaining and providing for them. In 1915 she was appointed to the position of matron of the agricultural College at Jonesboro. During the World war she took helpful part in all war work, especially the Red Cross activities.

By her early marriage Mrs. Davis had two children. Otto Bryan Johnson, who is now an active young business man of Little Rock, filling the position of manager with the Underwood Typewriter Company, is married and has one son. The daughter, Nancy Pearl, is a high school student, now majoring in the commercial course. It was in 1916 that Mrs. Minnie Bryan Johnson became the wife of William N. Davis, who has been connected with the operating department of the Missouri Pacific Railroad for twenty-seven years and is one of its valued and efficient representatives, having a record for faithful service of which he may well be proud. In this extended time, covering more than a quarter of a century, no train under his control has suffered from any accident that could be attributed to any fault of his.

Mrs. Davis has been a close student of the vital questions of the day, political and otherwise, and gives her support to the democratic party. She is an active member of the Baptist church and was secretary and treasurer of its organized Sunday school. Since that date she has taken an active part in the church work and her influence and efforts have been far-reaching and effective. She has membership also with the Royal Neighbors and has held the office of recorder in the local society. She is the historian of the Nicholas Headington Chapter of the Daughters of 1812 and corresponding secretary of the T. J. Churchill Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. She likewise takes a deep and zealous interest in the Woman's Missionary Union of the Baptist church and no good work done in the name of charity or religion seeks her aid in vain. Her popularity in all the circles in which she moves is but a tribute to one of Arkansas' courageous and capable daughters.

DOTRY W. LANCE.

Starting out in the world for himself when sixteen years of age, Dotry W. Lance has steadily worked his way upward through industry, persistency of purpose and ability, until he now occupies the responsible position of superintendent of the Monticello Cotton Mills and his expert knowledge of this industry has made his services very valuable to his employers. He is a native of Georgia, his birth having occurred in the northern part of that state on the 29th of April, 1879, and his parents were George R. and Mary (Dolan) Lance, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. As children they removed with their parents to Georgia and in that state they were married. The father devoted his active life to the occupation of farming and is now living retired in Monticello, but the mother died in 1892.

In the district schools of Georgia, Dotry W. Lance acquired his education and when sixteen years of age he became a wage earner, securing work in the cotton mills at Dalton, that state. He has since devoted his attention to the cotton industry, with which he has been identified for twenty-six years, beginning as a common laborer and winning advancement through merit and ability. In 1904 he came to Monticello as overseer of the finishing room of the Monticello Cotton Mills and two years later returned to the mills at Dalton, Georgia, with which he remained for three years. In 1909 he again came to Monticello as overseer of the weaving department of the mills and in 1912 became assistant superintendent of the plant, while two years later he was promoted to the position of general superintendent of the mills—a position of large responsibility, for which he is well qualified. He has devoted his life to the cotton industry, gaining that specialized knowledge which makes him an authority in his line of work, and he is doing all in his power to increase the efficiency of the plant and to promote the interests of those whom he serves.

Mr. Lance has been married twice. His first union was with Miss Jennie Sam of Dalton, Georgia, whom he married in 1898, and they became the parents of three children, two of whom survive, Floyd Leonard and Harlan Edgar. The wife and mother died in July, 1910. In October, 1911, Mr. Lance married Miss Callie Louise Hawkins of Monticello. They have two children, a son and a daughter, Lawrence W. and Helen Gwendolyn. Mr. and Mrs. Lance are Baptists in religious faith and his fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of The Maccabees. With progress as his watchword he has eagerly grasped every opportunity which has come his way and each step in his business career has given him a broader outlook and wider opportunities. As the architect of his own fortunes he has builded wisely and well and in winning advancement he has at the same time gained the respect and goodwill of those with whom he has been associated.

Their marriage was celebrated in Helena and to this union five children were born, three of whom are living: Mrs. F. O. Watts of St. Louis, Missouri; C. The father followed the occupation of farming in the vicinity of Gansville, Louisiana. He died in 1896. The mother afterward removed with her family to Mount Lebanon, Louisiana, where I. M. He is wide-awake, alert and energetic and measures up to the highest standards of personal honor and present-day business ethics.

JOEL CHALMUS HURT.

Joel Chalmus Hurt, one of the leading business men of Paragould, has since 1918 been president of The Hurt Wholesale Grocer Company. He was born near Searcy, White county, Arkansas, on the 20th of November, 1879, a son of James O. and Mary Elizabeth (Pilkingeton) Hurt, both of whom are deceased. The father was a man of varied occupations, having been a farmer in White county, also a school teacher and a minister in the Baptist church. He was likewise county surveyor for some time. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in an Arkansas regiment and participated in many of the most important battles of that conflict. Members of the Hurt family were among the pioneer settlers of White county, having come to this state from Tennessee. James O. Hurt contributed in a marked degree to the development and improvement of the county and his demise in 1892, at the age of sixty-nine years, came as a severe blow to his family and many friends. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hurt was celebrated in Tipton county, Tennessee. Her death occurred at the age of fifty-one years. Mrs. Hurt was born and reared in Virginia and came to this state with her parents prior to the Civil war. They located in Searcy, White county, but afterwards removed to a near-by farm. They were among the earliest settlers of that section of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Hurt became the parents of twelve children, eleven boys and one girl. Five of the boys are living. Joel Chalmus, whose name initiates this review, was the tenth in order of birth.

Joel Chalmus Hurt received his early education in the common schools of White county, attended the high school in Searcy and subsequently enrolled in Ouachita College at Arkadelphia, where he was a student one term. About two years later, he entered the Dallas Commercial College at Dallas, Texas, and completed his course there in due time. Mr. Hurt worked his way through school. He then engaged in railroading and was active in that connection for a period covering fifteen years. He was station agent and train dispatcher at various towns and was likewise active in all of the different positions from brakeman to conductor. In 1904 he quit railroading and engaged in the mercantile business at Wynne, this state, also eight years later (1912), in Forrest City. The capital to go into business he saved from his earnings while with the railroad. He continued to conduct the business in Forrest City until 1914, when he came to Paragould from Wynne and went into the wholesale produce business, in which line he continued until December, 1916. He then organized The Hurt-Heaton Grocery Company, dealers in wholesale groceries, and he was vice president of that concern until 1918, when the company name was changed to The Hurt Wholesale Grocer Company and he became president.

Mr. Hurt is well fitted to discharge the many duties devolving upon him in this capacity and he has been a dominant figure in the constant growth of the concern. From a small beginning, the company has grown until it now occupies a modern building, constructed of concrete, steel and interlocking tile, with complete cold storage system, the total cost of which is estimated at sixty-five thousand dollars. The company also maintains a branch house at Corning, Arkansas. The annual sales of the company approximate close to three quarters of a million dollars and the trade is extensive, covering a territory seventy-five miles north and one hundred miles south of Paragould. Upon organization the company was capitalized for fifty thousand dollars, later for one hundred thousand dollars and at the present time the capital stock is two hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Hurt is a man universally liked and admired for his splendid business acumen and friendly and cordial spirit and he well merits the success he has achieved as the result of his own intelligently directed efforts.

At Tuskegee, Alabama, on the 18th of July, 1900, occurred the marriage of Mr Hurt and Miss Louella Mayes, a native of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Hurt have one daughter, Evelyn, fifteen months old. Mrs. Hurt is a woman of much culture and refinement and is socially prominent.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Hurt has given his political allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Although he has never sought nor desired public preferment on his own account, he is a constant student of the living issues of the day and takes an active part in the furtherance of every movement for the development of the general welfare. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church and for many years he has been active as a deacon. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Paragould Lodge, No. 368, F. & A. M. and is likewise affiliated with the Wynne Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons. He is a member of the Paragould Lodge of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World, the Degree of Honor and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. During the years of his residence in Paragould, Mr. Hurt has wielded a great influence for good in this community and he is held in high esteem by his fellowmen.

WALTER O. PARRISH, M. D.

Since 1900 Dr. Walter O. Parrish has engaged in the active practice of medicine in Rector. He is of Scotch-Irish descent and a native of Tennessee, his birth having occurred near Union City on the 29th of April, 1875. His father, W. C. Parrish, died in 1897 at the age of sixty-two years. He was born and reared in Tennessee and engaged in farming in Obion county for some time. His parents were among the early settlers of that county, coming there from South Carolina. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war W. C. Parrish enlisted in the Confederate army and was a messenger for Stonewall Jackson. In Fulton, Kentucky, in the year 1865, occurred the marriage of Mr. Parrish to Miss Johanna Chambers, whose demise occurred in September, 1921, in her seventy-fifth year. She was born and reared in Fulton county, Kentucky, her parents having come to that state from Virginia. Nine children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Parrish, seven boys and two girls. The seven boys are living. Walter O., whose name initiates this review, was the fourth in order of birth.

In the acquirement of his early education Walter O. Parrish attended the rural schools of Obion county, Tennessee, and was a student at Dickson College for one year. At the termination of that time he enrolled in the University of Nashville for the study of medicine and the M. D. degree was conferred upon him by that institution in 1898. His higher education was received as the result of his own efforts, for he had no financial aid. Immediately after receiving his degree he located in Union City for the practice of his chosen profession and resided there until 1900, in which year he came to Rector. He has been in continuous active practice here since that time and is enjoying well merited success, having built up an extensive and lucrative patronage and the consensus of public opinion places him among the leading physicians of the county and state. In 1921 Dr. Parrish established a hospital in Rector and there his patients are given the best medical care. Although the greater part of his time is devoted to his profession, he has always been interested in farming and owns extensive land interests in this county.

During the World war Dr. Parrish served as captain in the Medical Corps and prior to the armistice he was assigned to the One Hundred and First Division and was stationed at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, and Camp Fort Riley, Kansas. While at the former camp he was assistant camp surgeon. Dr. Parrish was in service for over a year.

During the twenty-two years of his residence in Rector the Doctor has wielded a great influence for good, and no man stands higher for integrity and sterling worth.

MRS. MINNIE WEATHERALL KIRKWOOD.

Through association with various patriotic societies and by reason of her social prominence Mrs. Minnie Weatherall Kirkwood has become widely known in Little Rock, where she presides with gracious hospitality over an attractive home. She has spent her life in Arkansas, her birth having occurred near Austin. Her parents were Argyle C. and Lou H. (Stephenson) Weatherall, who removed from Alabama to Des Arc before Mrs. Kirkwood was born. There she was reared and educated. Her father was a native of Tennessee, belonging to one of the old and prominent families of that state. He was a gallant and fearless soldier in the Civil war, cheerfully giving his aid to his loved southland from 1861 until 1865. After the close of hostilities he took up the business of contracting and was thus engaged to the time of his demise. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lou H. Stephenson, was a native of Alabama and was a splendid example of the cultured lady of the old south.

Their daughter, Minnie Weatherall, was carefully reared and educated and having reached womanhood, she became the wife of John W. Kirkwood, a native of Arkansas and a direct descendant of old Colonial Quaker stock that settled in Pennsylvania in the days of William Penn. Dr. John Kirkwood, the grandfather of John W. Kirkwood, came to Arkansas and established his home in this state in 1843. His namesake, John W. Kirkwood, is today one of the notable business men in the capital city. He occupies a prominent position in real estate and insurance circles and is also closely and actively identified with banking interests. To Mr. and Mrs. Kirkwood have been born two splendid sons, Norman Reney and Ralph Wendall. The former is now a senior in the high school and is its star athlete, being the captain of the track team and a member of the baseball and basket-ball teams. He won the silver cup in the athletic contests; Ralph, like his elder brother, is also active in athletic affairs of his school, which is the Junior high, being a member of its first baseball team.

Though eligible to membership with the Daughters of the American Revolution, Mrs. Kirkwood has confined her activities to the Daughters of the Confederacy and is the treasurer of the T. J. Churchill Chapter, of which she has also served as corresponding secretary. She is likewise very active in social affairs and is a member of the Wednesday Book Club, the S. I. A. and many other prominent social organizations. The members of the Kirkwood household enjoy a wide acquaintance and marked popularity throughout Little Rock.

WILLIAM DICKSON REEVES.

In the death of William Dickson Reeves, Arkansas lost a representative citizen. For many years he was a resident of Helena and his demise occurred there on February 3, 1914. A native of Tennessee, he was born in Obion county, August 23, 1856, a son of William Dickson and Susannah (Garrison) Reeves. James Reeves, the father of William Dickson Reeves, the first, and his wife, Avie Wright, emigrated to West Tennessee in the early part of 1800, the former being a native of near Charleston, South Carolina, and the latter from along the French Broad river in North Carolina. Their marriage was celebrated in the latter state and soon after they came to Tennessee by the wagon route and became pioneers. By integrity of character and stanch principles of right, as well as industry, they contributed in no small part to the making of the early history of their adopted state. William Dickson Reeves, the first, enlisted in the Confederate army and after a time was honorably discharged on account of ill health consequent to exposure and inattention during a siege of typhoid fever. His demise a few years later was attributable to this illness. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Reeves six children were born, three of whom are living: William Dickson, whose name introduces this sketch, was third in order of birth. A sister, Mrs. Tennessee Pyles, lives at Blytheville, with her son, Will Pyles; Miss Sue Reeves lives in Helena; and Mrs. John P. Adams lives in Union City, Tennessee. A brother, E. L. Reeves, a prominent business man of Texarkana, Arkansas, died a year ago. Finis, who married Miss Fannie Moffatt, died many years ago. William Dickson Reeves was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and gave his political allegiance to the democratic party.

In the acquirement of his education, William Dickson Reeves attended for a short time the country schools of Tennessee and after putting aside his books he clerked in the country store of his uncle, John Reeves, at Troy. After the death of his father, when William Dickson Reeves was seventeen years old, he went back to the farm to look after the family. Soon afterward he went into the logging business and later engaged in the sawmill business at Reelfoot Lake. It was there he got his start in the lumber business and there was no phase of it with which he was not familiar, from driving a tram team to rolling sawdust and a working day of sixteen to eighteen hours. It was here, too, that he felt the effect of the Night Riders, who objected to the employing of negro labor in that community. Every night for weeks Mr. Reeves corralled the negro employes in one building and with arms at hand slept there to protect them if need be with his life. At this time he was twenty-two miles from a bank and many miles from a doctor and it was here he acquired the knowledge and skill in administering to the sick among his crew and their families, which all his life endeared him to his men and to his friends. Always a man of many and varied interests he was never too busy nor too tired to attend the bedside of a sick friend or employe for a night's vigil, many preferring him to a doctor.

In 1889 Mr. Reeves came to Arkansas, locating at La Grange and was associated with Reeves, McDonald & Company there until 1894. In that year he moved to St. Louis, but retained his interest in the business at La Grange. Three years later he returned to Arkansas and located at Helena, where he resided until his demise. Upon the incorporation of the W. D. Reeves Lumber Company he was made president and was likewise chief executive of the Reeves Timber Company, both of which companies had large holdings of virgin forest and operated for years one of the largest sawmills of the south, to which was added a veneer mill and box factory. As an employer of several hundred men in the woods, on the river and in the factory he wielded a great influence for good in the community and was readily conceded to be one of the county's most representative and public-spirited citizens. Starting out in life on his own account at an early age, he learned many lessons in the hard school of experience and triumphed over many obstacles that endeavored to prevent him from reaching the goal for which he had set out. Many a man of less strength of character would have fallen by the wayside, but not Mr. Reeves. The greater the difficulties, the greater his determination, and the ultimate result was a life crowned with successful achievement. A large man physically, he weighed some one hundred and seventy-five pounds and was about six feet, three inches tall. He was a man of very temperate habits, never smoked nor used stimulants, and throughout his life he enjoyed good health. Gifted with a genial and striking personality he had many friends, but preferring the peace and quiet of his own family circle, he was not interested in social life. For many years he was a leading layman in his church and was devoted to the church and church work. He was a strong prohibitionist and gave much time and money to the furtherance of the cause.

On the second of December, 1891, William Dickson Reeves was married to Miss Louise Weir, a native of Kentucky, and a daughter of Colonel Edward Rumsey Weir and Eliza (Johnson) Weir, the former a native of Greenville, Kentucky, and the latter of Smithland, that state. The paternal grandmother of Mrs. Reeves was Harriett Rumsey Miller Weir of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, who was one of the early suffragettes of this country. Mrs. Reeves' paternal grandfather, Edward Rumsey Weir, was an abolitionist, a friend of Abraham Lincoln and a man of deep learning. The Weirs came from Fishing Creek, South Carolina, and founded Muhlenberg county, Kentucky. The ancestral home in Greenville still stands and was originally furnished with colonial furniture brought on a flatboat from Philadelphia. Colonel Weir was one of the most brilliant lawyers in western Kentucky in his day and practiced in that state all his life. He was colonel in the Union army during the Civil war. Colonel Weir married Miss Eliza Triplett Johnson, whose father, Dr. John M. Johnson, was a very prominent physician and surgeon of Smithland and Paducah, Kentucky. He was active in that capacity in the Confederate army during the Civil war and at the close of that conflict went to Atlanta, Georgia, becoming a representative member of the medical profession in that city and one of the most highly respected and esteemed citizens of the state. Before the war he was a member of the Kentucky legislature for several terms. Mrs. Reeves' mother was a descendant of the Earle family, which came from England to Northumberland county, Virginia, in the seventeenth century, her particular branch of this distinguished family moving from there to South Carolina and later to Arkansas, where her great grandfather died and his wife, Mary Prince Earle, rode forty miles on a mule, alone, through the forest, to have the grant of land registered which had been given him for Revolutionary service. This grant is the spot on which the town of Earle now stands. James Rumsey, credited by historians and the Encyclopedia Britannica, as the inventor of the steamboat, his patent having been granted by George Washington in 1785, was a great, great uncle of Mrs. Reeves.

To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Reeves five children were born: Louise, whose death occurred in Washington, D. C., during the World war. She was doing war work at the time, having withdrawn from Vassar College in her sophomore year, to take up her duties; William Dickson, who attended Hendrix College and was a member of the Students Army Training Corps at Washington and Lee University during the World war; Frank Weir, who likewise attended the same university and is now a student at the University of Wisconsin; Elizabeth Earle, who is now attending Baldwin School at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, preparatory to entering Vassar College; and James Horner, a student in the local high school.

Mrs. Reeves is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is president of the Missionary Society and superintendent of Junior department of the Sunday school. She is prominent in the activities of the local chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Twentieth Century Club, the School Improvement Association, Women's Voters League, member of the local board of the Young Women's Christian Association, vice chairman of the Phillips County Tuberculosis Association, a member of the state board of the Arkansas Tuberculosis Association, and chairman of the Woman's Division of the State Inter Racial Commission. She is a woman of much culture and refinement and has many true, stanch friends in this community. Mr. Reeves left large timber interests, of which Mrs. Reeves is manager.

H. H. RIGHTOR, M. D.

This is the day of specialization and Dr. H. H. Rightor is one of the representative eye, ear, nose and throat specialists in the state. Although he has resided in Helena for some time he was born in Tennessee, his birth occurring in 1877. He is a son of H. C. and Mary (Haskell) Rightor, the former a native of Helena, this state, and the latter of Tennessee. The grandfather on the paternal side, Nicholas Rightor, was born in Pennsylvania. He married Minerva Putnam, a granddaughter of Israel Putnam and soon after his marriage he was sent by the Federal government to Arkansas. He arrived here in 1820 and sectionized this portion of the state. He laid out the city of Helena and died here a young man. The maternal grandfather was General William D. Haskell, who was a general throughout the Mexican war. He was prominent in the public life of Tennessee, having been an attorney, orator and politician of note. His demise occurred in Tennessee. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Rightor was celebrated in Helena, where the father was engaged in the cotton business. To their union two children were born, H. H., whose name initiates this review, being the only child living. Some time after his first wife's death, Mr. Rightor married her sister and to the second union two children were born: Mrs. Emmett Suddoth of Helena; and J. C., a traveling salesman, with headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Rightor has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal church and he is a generous contributor to its support.

H. H. Rightor received his early education in the public schools of Helena and after graduating from the high school with the class of 1894, enrolled in the University of Arkansas where he was a student two years. At the termination of that time he withdrew and began work in a drug store here. He was active in that capacity five years and during that time saved sufficient funds to enable him to continue his education. He graduated from the medical department of Tulane University, New Orleans, in 1904, and immediately returned to Helena, where he began practice. For nine years he was engaged in general practice here but in 1912 went to New York, where he took a course on the eye, ear, nose and throat. He then went to Vienna, Austria, and he was in that city when the World war broke out. He returned to the United States and since 1914 has been active along the line of his specialization in Helena. He has won for himself an enviable position among the foremost specialists of the kind in the county and state and the confidence and esteem in which he is held by his fellowmen is evinced in the liberal patronage accorded him. Dr. Rightor devotes his entire time and attention to his profession and through membership in the American Medical Association and Arkansas State and Phillips County Medical Societies keeps in constant touch with the advance in medical research being made by various eminent members of the profession throughout the country. He well merits the success he has achieved and being a firm believer in the state in which he resides he has invested heavily in valuable farm land in Phillips and Lee counties.

On the 1st of March, 1906, was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Rightor to Miss Jennie Pillow, a daughter of J. B. Pillow, for many years one of Helena's most representative and public-spirited citizens. He is now deceased. To the union of Dr. and Mrs. Rightor three children have been born: James Pillow; Henry Haskell; and Mary Viola. Mrs. Rightor is a woman of charming and magnetic personality and she is active in the club and social circles of this community.

Since attaining his majority the Doctor has given his political allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Although he has never sought nor desired public preferment on his own account he is ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities, as well as the privileges, of citizenship and no movement for the development and improvement of the community seeks his aid in vain. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal church. He is a vestryman and for some time has been a teacher in the older boys Sunday school class. Fraternally he is a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Mystic Shrine. During the World war he was tireless in his devotion to the government's interests and served on the exemption board. Dr. Rightor wields a great influence for good in this community and no man stands higher for integrity and sterling worth.

WILLIAM HENRY THORNTON.

William Henry Thornton, superintendent of mills and master mechanic of the Crossett Lumber Company, has had broad experience along business lines and is identified with timber interests in various parts of the country, his influence being one of broadening activity and strength in the field in which he is operating. He was born in Fairfax county, Virginia, August 26, 1870, a son of William H. and Mary (Carter) Thornton, both members of old families of that state, and in both the paternal and maternal lines the subject of this review is eligible to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution. The father was a veteran of the Civil war, in which he served as captain, defending the cause of the Confederacy. After receiving his discharge he returned to his farm in Fairfax county, where he continued to reside until called to his final rest when sixty-five years of age. The mother had reached the age of fifty-five at the time of her demise. William H. Thornton was a member of the Episcopal church and his wife was a Methodist in religious faith.

Reared on his father's farm William H. Thornton acquired his education in the public schools of Virginia and in Strickland Academy at Fairfax Courthouse, in that state, and when eighteen years of age he went to Texas, securing a position as machinists' helper in the shops of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railroad. In 1874 he completed his apprenticeship and remained with the corporation until about 1896, when he went to Memphis, Tennessee, as superintendent of the mills of the American Cotton Oil Company, with which he was connected for two years. From there he went to Fort Wayne, Indiana, entering the mechanical department of the Bass Sawmill & Machinery Company, and later went to Blissville, now Jerome, Arkansas, to establish a sawmill for the Bliss-Cook Lumber Company of Saginaw, Michigan, completing the work in May, 1901. He then came to Crossett and assisted Mr. Newell, superintendent of construction, in building the Crossett Mills. After the plant was erected he continued to serve under Mr. Newell until the resignation of the latter in 1904, when Mr. Thornton became his successor and is now acting as mill superintendent and master mechanic. In 1905 the company decided to double the capacity of its plant, adding another sawmill and planing mill, and Mr. Thornton had charge of this work, which he performed in a highly satisfactory manner. He is an expert mechanic and a thoroughly dependable man, capable of assuming large responsibilities, and he gives his best energies to those whom he serves. He also has other important interests along this line, being a stockholder of the East Arkansas Lumber Company, which maintains a chain of yards in the state, with headquarters at Little Rock; a stockholder in the Arkansas-Vancouver Timber & Lumber Company, with heavy timber holdings in British Columbia; and a stockholder in the Arkansas-Alabama Lumber Company, a manufacturing enterprise located at Wetumpka, Alabama. He is likewise a stockholder in the Home Life Insurance Company of Little Rock and has never been afraid to broaden his interests as opportunity has offered, while he possesses the executive ability necessary to accomplish whatever he undertakes.

In 1908 Mr. Thornton was united in marriage to Miss Flora Ramsay of Fordyce, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of two children: William Henry, Jr., and Helen Laura. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally Mr. Thornton is connected with the Masonic order, belonging to Crossett Lodge, No. 576, F. & A. M.; Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R., of Little Rock; and Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

Thoroughness and devotion to duty are outstanding traits in the career of William H. Thornton and these qualities, combined with intense application, ceaseless watchfulness of opportunity, self-confidence and a readiness to assume responsibility, have constituted the foundation upon which he has reared the superstructure of success. His career has been characterized by integrity and honor in every relation, commanding for him the respect and confidence of all with whom he has been associated, and he is accounted one of Crossett's most valued citizens.

WILLIAM WOODFORD BANDY.

William Woodford Bandy, circuit judge of the second judicial district comprising Clay, Greene, Craighead, Poinsett, Cross, Crittenden and Mississippi counties, was born in Weakley county, Tennessee, on the 19th of November, 1863, a son of James H. and Margaret Catherine (Bragg) Bandy. He is of Scotch-English ancestry on the maternal side. James H. Bandy was born and reared in Tennessee, the Bandy family having been among the early settlers of Middle Tennessee. They came to that state from Virginia. In early life James H. Bandy took up farming and was active in that connection upon the outbreak of the Civil war. He immediately enlisted as a private in the infantry, Confederate army. He was captured while serving under General Hood, at Atlanta, Georgia. Mr. Bandy is now living in Trenton, Tennessee, at the age of eighty-eight years, and is a beloved and respected citizen of that community. In 1859, in Weakley county, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bandy. She was born and reared in that county. Her demise occurred in October, 1915, in her seventy-second year. Mr. and Mrs. Bandy became the parents of two boys, William Woodford, whose name initiates this review, being the eldest.

In the acquirement of his early education William Woodford Bandy attended the country schools of Weakley county and received the equivalent of a high school course. He worked his way through Vanderbilt University, where he studied law, and was graduated from that institution with the LL. B. degree in 1884. The following year he came to Paragould, where he established offices for the practice of his profession and has since resided here. For over thirty-six years he has been in active practice here and the consensus of public opinion places him among the foremost attorneys of the town, county and state. He is the third oldest practicing attorney in this community. Although his practice has been general, it has been predominated by civil practice, and he well merits the success he has achieved in both connections. From 1892 to 1896 he was prosecuting attorney of the second judicial district and is now active in the office of circuit judge of the second judicial district, having been elected to this office by a special election on the 15th of August, 1921. His term of office will expire on the 1st of December, 1923, and he will be a candidate in the primaries for reelection. He has discharged the duties of that office to the complete satisfaction of all concerned and his chances for reelection are almost certain, for seemingly he has no opposition.

On the 19th of December, 1893, occurred the marriage of Mr. Bandy to Miss Ida May Meriwether, a daughter of Captain W. W. Meriwether, a well known resident of this community. The ceremony was performed in Paragould.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Bandy has given his political allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, holding membership in Paragould Lodge, and he is likewise a member of Paragould Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Bandy is devoted to his profession and along strictly professional lines he is identified with the Greene County Bar Association. He likewise made many speeches throughout the county in behalf of the various war drives. Mr. Bandy is in all respects a loyal and public-spirited citizen and brings to his various duties in life a keen mind and broad intelligence, which are the basis of his success.

ROBERT EASTIN WAIT.

For an extended period Robert E. Wait has figured in the financial circles of Little Rock and since July, 1909, has been secretary of the Arkansas Bankers Association. Born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 24th of July, 1869, he is a son of William Boynton and Fannie (Eastin) Wait. The father, a native of Groton, Massachusetts, was born January 10, 1808, and was a son of Levi Wait, a Scotchman, a farmer and a Mason, and a most even-tempered man. In 1817 he removed to Albany, New York, where he died in 1822. His wife was Elizabeth Jones, who was born in Acton, Massachusetts. Her mother was married three times, her first husband being Captain Isaac Davis, who was the first officer killed in the Revolutionary war, falling near Concord Bridge, Massachusetts. He is named in one of Webster's orations, which was delivered at Acton on the occasion of the erection of the monument at that place. The mother of William B. Wait reared a family of eight children, of whom he is the eldest.

William B. Wait removed from Albany to Boston in 1824 and for a period of five years was there employed as a clerk, receiving seventy-five dollars and board per year during the first four years and a hundred dollars and board during the last year. The opportunities of the growing west attracted him, however, and in July, 1829, he left New England for Cincinnati, Ohio, spending two years in and near that city and at Louisville, acting as a clerk in stores and on steamboats. After reaching Cincinnati and paying his second week's board in advance, his remaining cash capital consisted of but twelve and a half cents. He came to Arkansas on the 28th of December, 1830, to accept the position of clerk in the store of Frederick Notrebe, a general trader at Arkansas Post, with whom he remained until May, 1834. Removing to Little Rock he became engaged in business with Edward Dunn, under the firm style of Wait & Dunn, general traders. Following the death of his partner two years later, Mr. Wait continued the business until the spring of 1838, and then returned to Arkansas Post, where he formed a partnership with Charles F. Notrebe, under the style of Notrebe & Wait, successors to Frederick Notrebe. Charles F. Notrebe died in 1841 and in the fall of 1843 Mr. Wait brought his stock of goods to Little Rock and was one of the active and enterprising merchants of the city from that time until 1854.

Mr. Wait was married twice. In Little Rock, December 11, 1838, he wedded Martha Lavinia Reardon, sister of John Reardon, the bookseller at Little Rock. She was born in Easton, Maryland, in 1809, a daughter of Lambert Reardon, who engaged in merchandising in Maryland in early life and afterward in Little Rock. He was a man of genuine worth, highly respected for his business integrity and upright character. He was of Irish descent. The death of Mrs. Wait occurred December 31, 1863. There were four children of that marriage: Charles Edmond, who was born in Little

ROBERT E. WAIT

Rock, November 3, 1849, was graduated at the University of Virginia and in August, 1879, wedded Leila Beasley of Petersburg, Virginia, by whom he had one child, William Beasley, who died December 24, 1880. Charles E. Wait is the only survivor of that family of four children. He was professor of chemistry and metallurgy and manager of the School of Mines at Rolla, Missouri, until 1888, when he accepted the chair of chemistry, in the University of Tennessee, where he has remained for the past thirty years. On the 20th of May, 1867, William B. Wait was married to Mrs. Fannie Eastin Tyler, widow of William H. Tyler, a lieutenant of the United States army. She was born in Tallahassee, Florida, and educated in Alabama and by her marriage became the mother of a son, Robert Eastin, of this review. Mrs. Wait was a sister of the wife of Dr. W. W. Spotswood, formerly of the United States navy, and of Matilda, the wife of Colonel Alexander Montgomery, U. S. A. Her father, Thomas Eastin, edited the first newspaper published at Key West, Florida. He was on General Jackson's staff at the battle of New Orleans; was navy agent at Pensacola under President Van Buren and died in Florida in 1863. His wife, who in her maidenhood was Lucinda Gayle, was a sister of Governor John Gayle of Alabama and died at Mobile in 1870. With the passing years Mr. and Mrs. William B. Wait became more and more widely known in Little Rock, where eventually his business activity led him into the field of banking. In the early days when he followed merchandising he received money, keeping it for others until called for, but did not loan the money nor pay interest on deposits. Subsequently he was elected vice president of the old First National Bank, but retired in 1890. Several years later the bank was discontinued. He owned large real estate interests in Little Rock, making wise investments in property which constantly rose in value with the development and growth of the city. He died in the capital city February 16, 1892, being survived for nineteen years by his second wife, who died in 1911.

Robert Eastin Wait was but an infant when his parents left Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to become residents of Little Rock and here he has lived continuously since, save for the three-year period which he spent in college and five years devoted to official life in Washington. He began his education in the public schools of Little Rock and later continued his studies in the Methodist University, from which he was graduated in 1887, with the Bachelor of Arts degree. He afterward matriculated in the University of Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1890, again receiving the Bachelor of Arts degree. In the early '90s he took up the study of law under private instruction and following his admission to the bar practiced in Little Rock in connection with Judge Joseph W. Martin, under the firm style of Martin & Wait. In 1894 he became private secretary to the assistant secretary of agriculture at Washington and occupied that position for four years or until 1898. He then returned to Little Rock and here organized the Citizens Investment & Security Company, a banking, insurance and real estate corporation, which began business in 1901, Mr. Wait continuing to serve as president of the company until its interests were consolidated with the Peoples Savings Bank on the 28th of October, 1918. In the meantime, or in July, 1909, Mr. Wait had been appointed secretary of the Arkansas Bankers' Association, which position he still fills and he is likewise editor of the Arkansas Banker, a monthly publication, devoted to the current and banking history of the state.

On the 14th of November, 1894, in Little Rock, Mr. Wait was married to Miss Isabelle Evans Smart, who was born in South Carolina, in 1874, a daughter of the Rev. Richard D. Smart. Her father, a native of South Carolina, devoted his life to the work of the Methodist Episcopal ministry. Mrs. Wait was educated in a private school in Charleston, South Carolina, and by her marriage became the mother of six children: Alice St. Claire, born in Washington, D. C., Christmas Day, 1896; Robert E., Jr., born January 8, 1900, in Little Rock; William Smart, born in February, 1909, at Little Rock; and Frank Evans, born December 23, 1911, at Little Rock. Two girls died in infancy.

In politics Mr. Wait follows an independent course, voting according to the dictates of his judgment rather than party ties. In religious faith he is an Episcopalian, belonging to Christ church of Little Rock and served as junior warden and member of the vestry for twenty years. He was for twelve years president of the Young Men's Christian Association of the city and was reelected one of its directors on the 16th of January, 1918. He has ever stood loyally for all those interests which make for public progress and improvement and for one year he was president of the old Little Rock Board of Trade before it was consolidated with other organizations into the present Chamber of Commerce. During the World war he did most active and effective work in support of government interests. He acted as secretary of the first Liberty Loan committee in Little Rock, was chairman of the second Liberty Loan organization in Little Rock and Pulaski county and from November, 1917, until the close of the year 1918 was chief assistant to Moorhead Wright, state director for war savings and handled the office work for the state War Savings Stamp campaign. He has ever been actuated by a definite purpose that has made his labors directly resultant. His plans have ever been carefully formulated and promptly executed and obstacles and difficulties in his path have seemed but to serve as an impetus for renewed effort on his part. There are few men better qualified to speak with authority upon questions of finance and none are more familiar with the history of banking in Arkansas than Mr. Wait, his labors as secretary of the association being of immediate value to the organization.

SAMUEL S. FAULKNER.

In the passing of Samuel S. Faulkner on the 26th of May, 1917, Helena lost a representative citizen. For many years he was president of the First National Bank here and was actively identified with the city's material progress and prosperity. For four years they resided in New York city and in 1862 came to Helena, where the father, Thomas B. Faulkner, engaged in business. The sympathies of England being with the north upon the outbreak of the Civil war, and Thomas B. Faulkner being an Englishman, he felt compelled to leave the south and therefore returned to New York city. He was a man of keen business ability and achieved more than substantial success in life.

He married Miss Louise Pettit, a daughter of T. J. Pettit, owner and proprietor of the Nichols Hotel here. Mrs. Faulkner is very fond of music and belongs to several musical societies.

For thirty-five years Samuel S. Faulkner was a zealous churchman. For twenty-two years he was treasurer of the Episcopal church, for a quarter of a century he was a vestryman, and for eighteen years he was a trustee of the permanent fund of the church for the diocese of Arkansas. He was also superintendent of the Sunday school of St. John's church for twenty-five years. He was a great humanitarian and no worthy person appealed to his aid in vain. He was a member of the State Board of Charities for some time, having been appointed a member of the body by Governor Donaghey in 1910. Fraternally he was identified with the Knights of Pythias and was past grand chancellor of that order in Arkansas and was past master and grand receiver in the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Mr. Faulkner was likewise a Mason, was past master of his lodge, past high priest of his chapter and a member of the Knights Templars. A public-spirited and progressive citizen he was ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities, as well as the privileges of citizenship and to that end was a dominant factor in the furtherance of every movement for the development and improvement of the community. He was instrumental in the organization of the Helena Business Men's League and served as first treasurer of that body, later becoming president. During the years of his residence here he wielded a great influence for good and was a man universally liked and admired for his splendid business acumen and friendly and cordial spirit. His life was crowned by successful achievement and he well merited the respect and esteem in which he was held by his fellowmen.

J. W. BLACK.

J. W. Black, president of the J. W. Black Lumber Company of Corning, is one of that community's most progressive and substantial business men. He was born near Marion, Williamson county, Illinois, on the 3d of December, 1858, a son of James T. and Elizabeth Black, both of whom are deceased. For many years the father was engaged in farming in that county and he achieved more than substantial success in that connection. The Black family are of American descent for many generations. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Black was celebrated in Williamson county, Illinois, and they became parents of three children, two boys and a girl. J. W., whose name initiates this review, was the oldest child.

J. W. Black remained on the parental farm until he was twenty years of age and the greater part of his education was received by study in his spare time and through personal contact with people of mature years and average education. After leaving the home farm he obtained work with the Lynning & Williams Lumber Company of Williamson county, Illinois, and he remained with them until he reached his thirtieth year. During that time he took advantage of every opportunity offered him to learn the business and there is no phase of it with which he is not thoroughly familiar. Subsequently he engaged in business on his own account at Carrier Mills, Saline county, Illinois, the capital to organize the business having been saved from his earnings. He remained in Carrier Mills until 1894, being active in the manufacture of hardwood lumber and also in general merchandising and he had built up a big business and was achieving well merited success when fire destroyed his buildings and he suffered a great financial loss. In 1895 he came to Corning and practically started all over again. Many a man would have been disheartened, but not Mr. Black. He was more than ever determined to succeed. The following year he started the operation of a small sawmill and from this beginning he has continuously advanced, until he has one of the most representative business enterprises in Clay county. Up to 1912 he cut timber but in that year merged his business into the retailing of pine lumber and building materials, under the name of the J. W. Black Lumber Company. The annual business of the company amounts to over five hundred thousand dollars and it is ever on the increase. This company is one of the largest concerns handling hardwood lumber, if not the largest. Its products are shipped all over the United States and Canada.

In Williamson county, Illinois, in January, 1880, occurred the marriage of Mr. Black to Miss Mary Ellen Gold, a native of that county. To their union six children have been born, three boys and three girls: Charles R., who is manager of the J. W. Black Lumber Company; J. Curtis, a well known physician and surgeon, who is now in charge of the hospital at West Frankfort, Illinois; George L., who is associated with his father in the lumber business; Sina, who is the wife of John Waterman and resides in St. Louis; Stella, who married J. W. Baynham of Caldwell, Kansas, and who is now residing in Success; and Ethel, who is the wife of Monroe Hoffman, associated with his father-in-law in the lumber business.

Politically Mr. Black is identified with the republican party and has firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, holding membership in Corning Lodge, No. 110. He has served as Noble Grand of that organization and he attended the Grand Lodge of the State Odd Fellows as a representative of the local lodge. The religious faith of the Black family is that of the Baptist church and for many years Mr. Black has been active as a member of the board of trustees. He is a man of well proved ability and is calculated to inspire all with his manly qualities and true personal worth. He has been active in the furtherance of many movements which have had a distinct bearing upon the commercial development and prosperity of the city and he is a man universally liked and admired for his splendid business acumen.

MRS. OSCAR H. WINN.

Mrs. Oscar H. Winn, who in her maidenhood was Floy Kimbrough, is a native of Lumpkin, Georgia, and a daughter of Captain Jay A. and Felicia (Stokes) Kimbrough. Her father was one of the most distinguished educators in the south. He was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, and was a son of Duke M. Kimbrough, a well known planter of that state. He was also a direct descendant of Thomas Cantrell, a distinguished soldier of the Revolutionary war, his grandmother having been Mary Cantrell, a daughter of the gallant Captain Thomas Cantrell. Professor Kimbrough served in the Civil war on the side of the Confederacy from 1861 until 1865, becoming a private of the Nineteenth Tennessee Regiment and rising to a captaincy in the Third Consolidated Tennessee Regiment. His wife was a native of Lumpkin, Georgia, and a daughter of Dr. Isaac W. Stokes, one of the leading physicians of that state. Mrs. Kimbrough was a woman of marked literary talent and a poetess of considerable merit.

Mrs. Winn is the only child of Captain and Mrs. Kimbrough and, as indicated, is descended from some of the best of the old families of the south. She was carefully educated and trained for a professional career. Her parents removed to Arkansas during her girlhood, and she acquired her education in private schools in this state and in Kentucky. She was graduated with the Bachelor of Science degree from Searcy College, with the valedictorian honors of her class and was afterward sent to Cincinnati for special postgraduate work, also receiving special training in music and in physical education. In very early womanhood Floy Kimbrough became the wife of G. A. Stevenson, a member of one of Arkansas' most distinguished pioneer families, its representatives having left their impress upon the history of the state in many ways and upon many occasions. Two years after this marriage Mr. Stevenson died. After six years of widowhood Mrs. Stevenson became the wife of Judge Thomas B. Martin, who was for some years chancellor in equity and was the author of Martin's Opinions in Chancery, which has become a textbook and recognized authority on chancery matters in the south. Again death entered the home and some years after losing her second husband, Mrs. Martin became the wife of the Hon. Oscar H. Winn, a prominent member of the Little Rock bar. He was born in Tennessee, but losing his parents when only an infant he was soon afterward brought to Arkansas, where he was reared by his grandparents. He acquired his early education here and completed his studies in the University of Arkansas. Having entered upon preparation for the bar, he pursued a thorough course of reading and was admitted to practice, attaining almost immediately a most creditable position as a lawyer. Steadily he has advanced in his profession until he now stands in the front rank of the leading attorneys at Little Rock. In 1909 he was elected to the house of representatives but served only one term, concluding that politics had no charm for him. He has since devoted his attention to his professional interests and has gained a high position among the ablest Arkansas attorneys.

Mrs. Winn has been prominent in connection with social affairs, by virtue of the patriotic societies with which she is identified. She is a member of the Little Rock Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution and has been a delegate to the national congress of that body. She is also a member of the Memorial Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and she belongs to the Musical Coterie, the Central College Club and the Federation of College Clubs. She was also one of the charter members of Chapter C of the P. E. O. sisterhood at Little Rock and served as secretary of the chapter for three terms.

Mrs. Winn is a member of the Second Baptist church at Little Rock and was formerly secretary of the Ladies' Aid and Music Committee. Owning valuable real estate, together with Mr. Winn's large landed interests, they now devote a substantial portion of their income to worthy charities and in every sense are most valuable citizens, contributing to those forces which make for the material progress and the intellectual, moral and cultural welfare of the commonwealth.

LEVI R. WILCOXON.

Levi R. Wilcoxon, one of the foremost timber experts in Arkansas, is superintendent of the logging department of the Crossett Lumber Company, with which he has been identified since starting out in the business world, working his way upward from a humble position to his present important office through industry and ability. He is one of Arkansas' native sons, his birth having occurred in Ashley county on the 19th of October, 1884, and his parents, Hardy and Julia (Allen) Wilcoxon, are natives, respectively, of Alabama and Ashley county, Arkansas. Mrs. Wilcoxon's parents removed from North Carolina to Arkansas, settling in Ashley county at an early period in its development. As a young man Hardy Wilcoxon came to this county and for a number of years engaged in the grocery business in Hamburg, where he is now living retired, having gained a comfortable competence through industry and the capable management of his interests.

In the district schools of Ashley county, a boarding school of Wilmar and also the high school at that place, Levi R. Wilcoxon acquired his education and when seventeen years of age became an employe of the Crossett Lumber Company, which in 1901 began the erection of its mills here. He first worked as water boy and afterward was assigned to the timber department of the mills, with which he has since been connected. In 1906 he was made assistant logging superintendent and his capable work led to his promotion to the position of logging superintendent, in which capacity he has charge of the vast logging operations of the company, whose mills cut three hundred thousand feet of lumber daily. He is at the head of the lumber camp, a modern little city containing comfortable homes and an up-to-date mercantile establishment, in which one may purchase anything from a paper of needles to an automobile. There is also a machine shop and an ice plant, and an electric light plant and a water system have likewise been installed, everything possible having been done by the company for the comfort and well being of its employes. Lee and Jennie D. (May) Sheffield. Mrs. Sheffield was born in Arkabutla and her demise occurred there in 1891. The father was born in 1865, the last year of the Civil war, and he is residing on his farm near Arkabutla, a highly respected and representative citizen. For many years he was active in the public life of the county and has served in the offices of constable, justice of the peace and supervisor. The paternal grandfather, Benjamin Sheffield, was a native of East Tennessee, and at an early day removed to Mississippi and thence to Cincinnati, Ohio. After residing in that city a short time he returned to Mississippi, where he engaged in farming. Subsequently he came to Arkansas and was residing here at the time of his demise. In the acquirement of his early education John C. Sheffield attended the public schools of Arkabutla and in due time enrolled in Hillman College at Birmingham, Alabama. He was graduated from that institution in 1910 and subsequently took up the study of law. He was a clerk in the offices of various well known attorneys and he received a diploma from the Oklahoma City School of Law and the McKinley School of Law. In March, 1916, he was admitted to the bar and in June of the same year he put all personal interests aside and enlisted in the United States army, serving on the Mexican border. In 1917 he went overseas with the First Division, was sent home in February, 1918, attached to the general staff and returned to France. He was at Verdun with the French forces, in Flanders with the British and at Toul and in Lorraine with the American troops. In all he was in service two years and nine months. Mr. Sheffield entered the army as a private and received his honorable discharge on the 19th of March, 1919, as major of the infantry. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church and fraternally he is past master of the Masonic Lodge and is a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Sheffield is likewise a member of the Knights of Pythias, of which organization he is past chancellor. Her first husband was Cage Rembert and subsequent to his demise she became the wife of John Q. Aycock, master mechanic for the railroad at Dublin, Texas. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church.

In the acquirement of his education John J. Rabb attended the public schools of Helena and Little Rock and his first occupation after putting his textbooks aside was on the home farm. In 1897 he was appointed to the office of deputy sheriff and he was active in that capacity for a period covering sixteen years. About 1902 he had become interested in the real estate business but did not actively engage in that business until 1913, at which time he formed a partnership with Oscar C. Rayburn, the firm of Rabb & Rayburn being one of the most prominent and successful real estate firms in Phillips county. Mr. Rabb devotes his entire time and attention to the business and has clients from nearly every state in the Union. Mrs. Rabb is a woman of much culture and refinement and is gifted with a charming and magnetic personality. She is prominent socially and her friends are legion.

Politically Mr. Rabb has always given his allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. He was elected alderman of the first ward by a large majority. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church,

He is likewise affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of the Maccabees, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Columbian Woodmen and the Woodmen of the World. He has always been very active commercially and socially and has wielded a great influence for good in this community.

GEORGE H. BRENNER.

George H. Brenner of the Gross Undertaking Parlors of Hot Springs, was born in Hutchinson, Kansas, April 21, 1879, and there spent the first seven years of his life, after which he accompanied his parents on their removal to Dayton, Ohio, where he was reared to manhood. He acquired his education in the public schools of that city, passing through consecutive grades until he had completed the high school course. In 1900 he went to Roswell, New Mexico, where he took up the undertaking and embalming business, which he followed in that state until June, 1903, and then came to Hot Springs. Here he entered the employ of Bernard Gross as an embalmer and continued with him in that capacity until the death of Mr. Gross, at which time Mr. Brenner was owning a third interest in the business. He then purchased the two-thirds interest held by Mr. Gross, becoming sole proprietor. He has a well appointed chapel in which funeral services may be held and a most complete undertaking equipment, including a fine automobile hearse. His place of business is at 112 Prospect avenue and he is accorded a very liberal patronage. No funeral director in the world perhaps has shipped the bodies of more prominent people or to more widely separated points than the Gross Undertaking Company, of which Mr. Brenner is now the head. This business was established December 6, 1883, by Mr. Gross and J. B. McCaffery and was continued as a partnership until February 2, 1886, when Mr. Gross became sole owner. The original location was at 620 Central avenue, from which point a removal was made to the present handsome quarters at 112 Prospect avenue. The building is three stories in height—a brick structure—and the first floor contains the offices and reception room, showroom, chapel, morgue and trimming and warehouse rooms. Sleeping quarters are provided on the upper floors for attendants.

Mr. Brenner was united in marriage to Miss Kathleen Ellenbrook and they have two children, George H. and Charles L. O. O. F. lodges.

He is the youngest of a family of three children, whose parents were Robert George and Eleanor (Whitfield) Newell. The father's birth occurred in Brooklyn in November, 1842, and when a young man of about twenty years he enlisted for service in the Civil war, becoming the captain of a company of a New York regiment of volunteers, with which he remained until the close of the war in 1865. He afterward removed westward to Arkansas, settling in Little Rock, and for a considerable period was a traveling salesman in this section of the country. His wife was born in Van Buren, Crawford county, Arkansas, in March, 1853, and their marriage was there celebrated. They became the parents of two sons and a daughter: William, Nannette and Robert W. The father always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party after coming to the south. He departed this life in Little Rock in July, 1902.

Robert W. Newell pursued his education in the public schools of the capital city and in the University of Arkansas and through much of the period that has elapsed since his college days were over he has given his attention to the banking and insurance business. He is now the secretary of the W. B. Worthen Company Bank.

On the 16th of March, 1904, Mr. Newell was married to Miss Emma Allis, who was born at Pine Bluff, Jefferson county, Arkansas, December 1, 1879. She is a daughter of H. G. and Agnes (Siler) Allis and they made their home for an extended period in Little Rock. A's. and of the United Daughters of the Confederacy through Peter Siler, who was quartermaster in the southern army. She is an energetic officer of these different patriotic societies, is a charming hostess and very popular. Both Mr. and Mrs. Newell have many warm friends and are making substantial contribution to the world's work along the various lines into which they have directed their activities.

HON. JOHN RUFUS WILSON.

Hon. John Rufus Wilson, who is now serving his second term as prosecuting attorney of the tenth judicial district, comprising six counties, is one of the representative citizens of Warren. He was born in Bradley county on the 12th of September, 1879, a son of William P. and Charley A. (Watson) Wilson, the former a native of Ouachita county, this state, and the latter of Calhoun county, in which latter county their marriage was celebrated. Soon afterward they located on a farm in the western part of Bradley county, near what is now Banks, and the father is still residing on this farm. Mrs. Wilson died in February, 1917.

In the acquirement of an education John Rufus Wilson attended the public schools of his native county and the Warren high school. He then entered the University of Arkansas, where he was graduated with the L. I. degree in 1903 and he received the B. A. degree from that institution in June, 1904. Subsequently he took up the study of law, the LL. B. degree being conferred upon him in 1906. Mr. Wilson worked his way through college by teaching in the rural schools and working after school hours while in the University of Arkansas, and he has the distinction of being probably the youngest man who ever taught a school in the state of Arkansas. In the days when he was a boy it was customary to hold a mathematics school during the summer months in the rural districts and in this branch of learning young Wilson, then but thirteen years of age, was proficient far beyond his years. One morning, while he was attending the mathematics school, the teacher failed to appear and he was unanimously chosen by the school as professor pro tem. Being assured by the members of the class that they would preserve under him the same amount of decorum as under the regular teacher, he undertook the task and continued as teacher until the close of the term. At sixteen years of age he entered the ranks of the educators of the state as a teacher in the district schools of his county and he taught until his entrance into the State University, and then during the summer vacations, thereby securing the financial means by which to promote his higher education. In December, 1905, upon his examination before the committee, he was admitted to the bar, and in June, 1906, he was admitted to practice by the Arkansas supreme court. Later he was admitted at Texarkana to practice in the federal courts. During his senior year at the University of Arkansas, Mr. Wilson was elected to the state legislature and he served during the 1905 session. On the 28th of June, 1906, he began the practice of law at Warren and has remained here. On the 14th of April, 1917, he was elected a delegate from Bradley county to the constitutional convention which met in 1918, and was elected prosecuting attorney at the primary election of May 28, 1918. He was reelected to that official position in 1920 and is now serving his second term. As prosecuting attorney of the tenth judicial district he has under his jurisdiction six counties: Bradley, Dallas, Cleveland, Drew, Chicot and Ashley. In addition to his official duties Mr. Wilson has a large general practice and is attorney for a number of private corporations and local firms.

On the 24th of April, 1905, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Wilson to Miss Mabel Irene Fowler, whose home was near New Edinburg, in this county. At the time of her marriage she was a teacher in the Baptist Academy at Magazine. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson three children have been born, only one of whom is living: John, whose birth occurred on the 14th of September, 1909. Mrs. Wilson is a woman of high scholarly attainments. She took a special course in dramatic art in connection with her literary studies at Ouachita College. In the latter part of the same year she became a member of the faculty of the Magazine Academy, where she remained until her marriage. For the past seven years she has taken an active and prominent part in club work and in 1921 was unanimously elected president of the Pine Bluff district of the Arkansas Federation of Women's Clubs. She is second vice president of the League of Women Voters of this state, and a member of the committee which drafted the article on education that went into Governor McRae's campaign platform in 1920, the governor pledging his support to the issue. In May, 1921, Mrs. Wilson was appointed by Governor McRae as a member of the honorary educational commission. She was one of the five women appointed on the commission, which is composed of twenty-five members prominent in educational and social work of the state.

Along strictly professional lines Mr. Wilson holds membership in the Arkansas State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Warren Lodge, No. 33; Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R. of Little Rock; and Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Pine Bluff. He is likewise affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Hampton Lodge, No. 35; Warren Lodge, No. 187, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Locust Grove Camp, No. 76, Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he is a member of the board of stewards. Mr. Wilson labors untiringly for anything that tends to promote Warren's welfare and progress and his efforts have been resultant factors for good. He is actuated by a public-spirited devotion that none question and he brings to bear in his public work the same unabating energy and ability that have brought to him success in his professional life, placing him today among the foremost citizens of Arkansas.

EDGAR W. GATES

Edgar W. Gates, general manager and secretary of the Crossett Lumber Company at Crossett, Arkansas, is one of the great industrial organizers of the country. From early youth he has heard and heeded the call of opportunity and his steady progression has resulted from his close application, his thoroughness, his determination and his reliability. Born in Scott county, Iowa, on the 19th of February, 1866, he is a son of Don C. and Cornelia (Hawkins) Gates, both of whom were natives of Vermont, where they were reared and married, continuing to make their home in that state until after the birth of two of their children. In the decade between 1840 and 1850 they became pioneers of Scott county, Iowa, settling on a farm, but subsequently the father was for many years prominently identified with merchandising in Big Rock, that county, where his death occurred in 1891.

Edgar W. Gates was reared in his native state, receiving but limited educational opportunities in his day. He attended the public schools but a short time, completing Ray's third part arithmetic and other studies of similar grades but his knowledge has largely been acquired through broad reading and in the school of experience.

Mr. Gates was twenty years of age when in 1886 he first came to Arkansas, arriving in Thornton with twenty-five cents in his pocket. Though his cash capital was extremely limited he possessed courage, determination and ambition and these constitute a safe foundation upon which to build success. For a year and a half he worked for a dollar and a half per day and much of that time his work was not continuous, so that he frequently made little more than enough to pay his board. He was employed in the mills of the Thornton Lumber Company, founded and owned by A. H. and P. G. Gates, brothers. After nineteen months he became connected with the Eagle Mills, securing a contract at logging but six months later he decided that Arkansas was not a fit country for a white man to live in and made his way westward to Washington. He spent four months in the northwest and then concluded that he had made a mistake concerning his opinion of Arkansas, so that he returned to this state and once more located at Thornton. The business with which he had formerly been identified was being closed out there and six months later Mr. Gates went with the company to Wilmar as superintendent of manufacture, thus continuing with the Gates Lumber Company until 1900.

In the late fall of 1899 the Crossett Lumber Company was organized and in the following year Mr. Gates went to Hamburg, where he opened an office and began buying timber land for the company. The first purchase was a tract of fifty thousand acres and the following year fifty thousand acres more were added to their holdings. The land buying continued over a period of eighteen months before the construction of the mill was begun. In the fall of 1901 the company began operations on the present site of Crossett, twelve miles from the nearest railroad point, and directly thereafter five hundred men, living in tents, were engaged in construction work on the largest sawmill plant in the state of Arkansas. In the capacity of general manager and secretary of this vast business E. W. Gates has proven himself one of the industrial giants and one of the greatest organizers of the southwest, if not of the whole country. In the twenty years during which the mills have been in operation there has never been a whisper of labor trouble. The thousands or more employes of the mill have been paid a commensurate wage and the sick and injured are taken care of. No employe, from the common laborer to the highest official, but may gain an audience with Mr. Gates at any time. The organization is like nothing so much as a big happy family. Were the same policy pursued by all the industrial leaders of the country the question of capital and labor would be forever at rest. From personal experience Mr. Gates knows what it is to struggle with adversity and the lack of opportunity and has also learned from experience how to use his time and talents to the best advantage. He has, therefore, ever been willing to raise and encourage others and his employes recognize the fact that faithfulness and capability on their part means promotion as opportunity offers. In addition to his prominent connection with the lumber industry Mr. Gates has large land and cattle interests in Colorado, Utah and California and heavy lumber interests in Wauna, Washington, where the Crossett Western Lumber Company operates and likewise in the Crossett Land & Development Company, operating in Louisiana.

In 1892 Mr. Gates was married to Miss Rose Kinnebrew of Wilmar, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of three children: Phillip G. completed the work of the sophomore year at Leland Stanford University and is now married and in charge of his father's cattle interests, being also engaged in the cattle business on his own account; Dorothy, the only daughter, graduated from Smith College of Northampton, Massachusetts, with the class of 1920, at which time the Bachelor of Arts degree was conferred upon her; Edward C., a graduate of Cornell University, in which he completed the electrical engineering course with the class of 1921, is now in Bellingham, Washington, with the firm of Stone & Webster, widely known contractors of Boston, Massachusetts. Mrs. Gates presides with gracious hospitality over their pleasant home and is also an active worker and earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Gates is prominently known through fraternal relations, belonging to the Knights of Pythias and to the Masonic order, being affiliated with Crossett Lodge, No. 576, A. F. & A. M.; Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R.; and Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He has also been honored by being made a knight commander of the Court of Honor. His loyalty to the high principles and purposes of the craft is characteristic of the man. He is faithful to any cause which he espouses, any interest which he champions or any obligation which he assumes and this inherent reliability has been one of the salient features in the attainment of the high positions that he occupies in connection with the lumber industry of the southwest. Strong in his ability to plan and perform, strong in his honor and his good name, his life work has been a contributing factor to the material growth and progress of the state, as well as to the upbuilding of his own fortunes.

OZERO C. BREWER.

A native son of Arkansas is Ozero C. Brewer, practicing attorney at Helena. His birth occurred in Murfreesboro, Pike county, on the 17th of February, 1888, a son of Henry Taylor and Emily (Carter) Brewer, likewise natives of Murfreesboro. Both parents are residing there, the father being a retired farmer. Henry Brewer, the paternal grandfather, was born in North Carolina and came to this state in the '40s. He engaged in farming here and achieved substantial success. The maternal grandfather, Henry Carter, was likewise a native of North Carolina and he came to Arkansas in the '30s. He was prominent in the public life of this state, having been a member of the state legislature a number of times and he was a member of the constitutional convention of 1874. He was an extensive land owner and one of the wealthy men of his day. For many years Henry Taylor Brewer followed agricultural pursuits, achieving more than substantial success. He is a self-made man, having acquired his wealth as the result of laudable ambition, stanch determination and intelligently directed efforts. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Brewer eleven children were born, seven of whom are living: Mattie E., the wife of Charles Kelley, a retired farmer and merchant of Murfreesboro; Dr. William R., a well known physician and surgeon at Ola, this state; Cortez, a farmer near Ben Lomond; Roscoe, a farmer residing in Murfreesboro; Mack H., drainage engineer at Silver City, Mississippi; Ozero C., whose name initiates this review; Nelle, the wife of B. Morris, office manager for the Dierks Lumber Company. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Brewer is a stanch supporter of the democratic party and is still active in party affairs.

In the acquirement of his early education Ozero C. Brewer attended the public schools of Murfreesboro and in due time entered Ouachita College. Having completed his preparatory work he enrolled in the University of Arkansas and received his A. B. degree from that institution in 1911. His earliest ambition was to become a lawyer and in 1915 the LL. B. degree was conferred upon him by Harvard. Later in the same year he was admitted to practice in the federal and state courts and he located in Helena on the 8th of August, 1915, and began practice. He was successful from the start and was enjoying an extensive and lucrative clientage when he put all personal interests aside and in August, 1917, enlisted for service in the United States army. He was sent to Camp Travis, where he was stationed one year and he was then sent to France as first lieutenant in the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Field Artillery Brigade, Ninetieth Division. He was active in that connection until the signing of the armistice. Mr. Brewer likewise held the position of assistant staff judge advocate of Base Section, No. 2. His headquarters were in Bordeaux, France, and he had charge of all general court marshal work for Base Section, No. 2. On July 1st he returned to the United States and received his honorable discharge on the 12th of July, 1919, at Camp Dix. JAMES ROBERT RILEY.

James Robert Riley, of the Riley Lumber Company, of Little Rock, was born in Ashley county, Arkansas, February 29, 1880, so that there occurs an anniversary of his real birthday but once in four years. His parents were John R. and Georgia (Taylor) Riley. His father was born near Hamburg, Ashley county, Arkansas, in 1851, and is still living. He was a planter for many years and one of the sterling citizens in that part of the state into which his parents had removed as early pioneers, doing much to upbuild the section in which they located.

James R. Riley acquired his educational training in the public schools of his native county and spent the first eight years of his business life in mercantile pursuits. He felt it incumbent upon him to provide for his own support from an early day and after his eight years of employment in mercantile establishments he spent eleven years on the road as a commercial traveler. Throughout the period he was actuated by a laudable ambition to engage in business for himself and at length he purchased an interest in a lumberyard but remained with the concern for but a brief period. In 1920 he organized the Riley Lumber Company, of which he was elected president. This company under his management has grown to be one of the largest and most important interests of the kind in this section. The plant occupies two full city blocks almost completely covered with buildings, embracing a planing mill and a sash and door factory, while millwork in general is carried on and the millwork's department is one of the best equipped establishments of the kind in Pulaski county. Two railroads, the Rock Island and the Iron Mountain, pass the yard with side tracks, facilitating transportation. Sixty-five people are employed and trucks and wagons assure prompt service. The business ability of the men at the head is backed by a clean character and rigid integrity, qualities which have always been the potent factors in the attainment of Mr. Riley's success.

In 1901 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Riley and Miss Mary Sue Richardson, a daughter of George H. Richardson, a planter and merchant of Ashley county, where the birth of Mrs. Riley occurred. They have become parents of five children: Doris, the eldest, is a graduate of the Little Rock high school and is now a freshman in Central College at Conway, Arkansas. She possesses excellent musical talent and has been placed in the junior class in music. A distinguished honor that has been accorded her is that though only a freshman she has been elected president of the junior class by her college mates, an honor that has very seldom, if ever, been accorded to a "freshie;" Mattie, the second daughter, is a high school student; James R., Jr., is a grammar school pupil; Kathlyn is in kindergarten; and George R. is not yet of school age.

Mr. Riley is a member of the Kiwanis Club, also of the Young Men's Christian Association and of the Gideons, the last named an organization which places Bibles in the guest rooms of hotels throughout the country. Both Mr. and Mrs. Riley are quite active in the work of the Missionary Baptist church, in which he is serving as deacon and treasurer of the first church. For ten years he has been the teacher of the young men's Bible class and in every activity of the church he takes a helpful interest. While he has proven his capability as a business man through the establishment and successful conduct of an important lumber industry he has always found time for his duties and obligations in other connections and has been especially helpful in his efforts to advance the moral standards of the community and promote the growth of the church.

M. NEELY.

One of the most prominent lumbermen in Arkansas is M. Neely, manager of the Howe-Neely Lumber Company at Helena. A native of Indiana, he was born in Goshen on the 8th of August, 1863, a son of William and Susan (Moore) Neely, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of England. The paternal grandfather, John Neely, was born in Ohio and removed to Indiana at an early day. His demise occurred in Goshen, that state, in 1876. For many years he was engaged in farming, achieving more than substantial success in that connection. William Neely was born in Ohio in 1840 and died in Goshen in 1899. He was engaged in farming in Indiana until 1868, in which year he removed to Goshen and retired from active life. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted for service but was rejected because of physical disability. Near Goshen, Indiana, occurred the marriage of Mr. Neely to Miss Susan Moore, who is now living in that city, at the age of eighty years. To their union one child was born, M., whose name introduces this review. Throughout his life the father was a stanch supporter of the republican party and the principles for which it stands. His religious faith was that of the Methodist church and fraternally he was a Mason, having been an exemplary member of the craft.

In the acquirement of his education, M. Neely attended the public schools of Goshen and his first occupation after putting his textbooks aside was in a sawmill there. He had a contract for taking care of the wood from a mill in Goshen. In 1886 he removed to Chicago, acquiring work in the office of a large lumber concern, and the following year he went to Obion county, Tennessee, where for one year he worked as bookkeeper in a local sawmill. In 1888 he located in La Grange, this state, and remained there until 1900, when he came to Helena. In 1915 he engaged in the lumber business with the Howe-Neely Lumber Company and for some time he has been active as manager of this business. The concern handles and manufactures hardwood lumber and operates two mills at Helena. Its products are shipped all over the United States and to England and the business is one of the largest of its kind in the state. Mr. Neely is not only active as manager of this company but handles the lumber interests of the Howe Lumber Company and the Helena Hardwood Lumber Company. He is also prominent in financial circles as vice president and director of the Peoples Savings Bank & Trust Company. Mr. Neely has proved himself a capable business man and well merits the success he has achieved.

On the 25th of December, 1894, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Neely to Miss Hortense Williford, a native of North Creek, Phillips county, this state, and a daughter of Walter and Tabitha Williford. Her parents drove to this state from Alabama and for many years the father engaged in farming here. He became one of the prominent agriculturists of this community and his demise in 1870 came as a severe shock to his family and many friends. Mrs. Williford died in 1900. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Neely one daughter has been born, Ruth, who is the wife of H. K. Young. Mr. Young is associated with the Howe-Neely Lumber Company and is one of Helena's most promising young business men. He is a veteran of the World war, having enlisted in the United States army. He was sent to Camp Lee at Petersburg, Virginia, for training and later went overseas. He was in the Medical Corps and was in active service some ten months. Mrs. Neely is prominent in the club and social circles of Helena and is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in the interests of which she is an active worker.

Although he has never sought nor desired public office on his own account Mr. Neely is active in local affairs and no movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare seeks his aid in vain. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he is a prominent and active member of the Helena Rotary Club. Mr. Neely is a man universally liked and admired for his splendid business acumen and his friendly and cordial spirit and no man stands higher in this community for integrity and sterling worth.

L. E. BERARD.

One of Helena's representative citizens is L. E. Berard, now active in the office of circuit clerk. He was born in Seloncourt, Doubs, France, on the 20th of March, 1875, a son of Joseph and Julia (Coulon) Berard, likewise natives of France. The parents both died in Seloncourt, France, in 1917, within a few days of each other. The father was a watchmaker by trade and lived near the Swiss frontier. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Berard four children were born, three of whom are living. The eldest son, C. A. Berard, died in New York in 1916. He was superintendent of the French Hospital there and a well known man. He received his early education in France but left his native country at the age of ten years and came to America. Subsequently he completed his education in New York city. He was a prominent member of the Masonic craft, having been master of New York City Lodge, No. 17, in 1904, and he was past grand master of that lodge. L. E. Berard, whose name initiates this review, was the second child born to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Berard, and the third child was Marie Louise, who is residing in New York city. The fourth child is Henry, who is living in Lyon, France. He served throughout the World war as a mechanic in an automobile corps and was wounded several times. He is one of France's defenders who was left broken in health and mind by the war. The family was reared in the faith of the Catholic church.

L. E. Berard received his education in the public schools of Phillips county, having come here in 1886. After putting his textbooks aside he engaged in farming for a number of years and then went to Barton as bookkeeper and paymaster in the P. & A. Cotton Mills there. He was likewise postmaster of that community and was active as depot agent until 1906. In that year he was made deputy circuit clerk and was active in that capacity until the 31st of December, 1920, when he was elected circuit clerk. He is now serving his first term and will run for reelection, his chances for success being more than favorable. He has always been active in politics, being a stanch democrat, and he believes every public office to be a public trust. Consequently he devotes his entire time and attention to the duties devolving upon him as circuit clerk and in so doing has won the confidence and respect of all his fellowmen. He is in every sense of the word a self-made man and the success he has achieved is well merited. He has been out in the world on his own account since a young man of eighteen years and has worked his way upward as the result of laudable ambition, stanch determination and intelligently directed efforts. Mr. Berard has not only won gratifying success in a political way but is a reliable and keen-minded business man. JOHN MONTEATH.

John Monteath of Little Rock is an outstanding figure in the cotton market of the south and especially in connection with the cotton trade of Missouri and Arkansas. He was born in Scotland in 1865 and is a son of Hugh and Mary (Walker) Monteath. His father was a friend and warm admirer of the great Gladstone and in politics was a liberal. He died in 1912. Upon the death of his father, Mr. Monteath brought his mother to America and she is living with him in Little Rock.

John Monteath was educated in the public and normal schools of Glasgow and turned his attention to merchandising in his native country. The opportunities of the new world attracted him and in 1888 he came to America to study the white staple from the American end. He lost no time in becoming a citizen of the country that was to be his home and that of his children. He settled first in St. Louis, Missouri, and accepted a position with the Lesser Goldman Company, who established the modern method of buying cotton. For twenty-five years Mr. Monteath remained with that firm and this association with one house covering a quarter of a century is an indication of the character of the man, for one of the well established rules of the firm was to keep in its employ none but loyal, capable and honorable representatives. In 1912 Mr. Monteath severed his connection with the Lesser Goldman Company to accept the management of the Arkansas office of the Alexander Eccles Company of Liverpool, England, one of the largest cotton dealers in the world, with branch houses located in every section of the globe where cotton grows and whose name has been known to the cotton trade for more than a hundred years. His long familiarity with the business, his acquaintance with every phase of the trade, his splendid executive power and his constructive efforts, have made him a prominent representative of this firm of world-wide reputation and the interests of the house have been most carefully guarded by him.

In 1890 Mr. Monteath paid a visit to Scotland in order to wed the sweetheart of his boyhood days. This was the culmination of a romance which had run through the days of both grammar and normal school, from which each graduated. Mary Berwick Clark, who in 1890 became Mrs. John Monteath, is a native of Glasgow and like her husband has become a loyal adherent of the interests and principles of the new world. Their marriage has been blessed with two children: Retta Gertrude, who is the wife of Robert A. Roessel of St. Louis, a well known and popular young attorney at law. Mrs. Roessel is a graduate of Washington University and is a young woman of many intellectual and social attainments; the other daughter, Mary Isabella, is the wife of Gerald Jones of Tucson, Arizona, and is a graduate of Lindenwood College. Her husband, Captain Gerald Jones, is a great-great-grandson of Thomas Marshall, the first chief justice of the supreme court of the United States and named in history as America's greatest legal arbiter. Captain Jones has an enviable war record in connection with the World war and he was for a period provost marshal at Little Rock. He has served as United States district attorney of Arizona and is accounted one of the sterling citizens of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Roessel have become parents of one child, a daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Jones have a son. Mr. Monteath's interest has always centered in his family and particularly dear to him are these two grandchildren.

Fraternally a Mason, Mr. Monteath has reached the Shrine through both the York and the Scottish Rite branches, having become a Knights Templar and a Consistory Mason. In his religious views he adheres to the Presbyterian faith and is active in the councils of the church, having been especially so during his residence in St. Louis. Through trade connections he has became widely known, is now president of the Arkansas Cotton Trade Association and was formerly president of the Little Rock Cotton Exchange. He is likewise an ex-president of the Caledonian Club of St. Louis and for ten years was secretary of that organization. He is a member of the board of governors of the Board of Commerce and a director in the Cottage Home for Business Girls, of which Mrs. Monteath is also a director, and she is a director on the Board of Arkansas State Farm for Women. In business life, in civic affairs, in church work and in every position in which John Monteath has been found he has never failed to do his duty and more than that he has lent his aid in large measure to the development and advancement of all enterprises of public worth.

He afterward removed to Virginia and subsequently became a resident of North Carolina and of Tennessee. His death occurred in the latter state. The maternal grandfather was Isaac Carlock, who was born in North Carolina and after living for a time in Tennessee removed to Missouri, where he continued to make his home until called to his final rest. James Fancher, father of Judge Fancher, was born in North Carolina in January, 1790, and his wife was born in Tennessee in March, 1800. They were married in the latter state and removed to Carroll county, Arkansas, in 1838. Here James Fancher purchased a homestead from a man, for which he paid four hundred and fifty dollars. He lived on this farm throughout his remaining days, save for the period of the Civil war, which he spent as a refugee in Texas. After the close of hostilities he returned to Arkansas, where his death occurred June 8, 1866. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and he gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. In that year he was elected county clerk for a four years' term, filling the office during the period of the Brooks-Baxter war over the governorship. EDWIN RICHARD DIBRELL, M. D.

Dr. Edwin Richard Dibrell was one of the distinguished citizens of Little Rock, whose character as a man, whose ability as a physician and whose benevolence and charity to the poor cannot be overestimated. It was thus that he gained a notable hold upon the affection and regard of his fellow townsmen, causing his demise to be received with a sense of personal bereavement among all by whom he was known. He was born in Van Buren, Arkansas, October 21, 1858, a son of Dr. J. A. and Jane Emily (Pryor) Dibrell, the latter a native of Virginia. The father was born in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1817, and was a representative of an old Virginia family, his father, Edwin Dibrell, having served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. The Dibrell family in the United States is descended from Christoffe Du Breuil, who settled in Manakin town, Virginia, in 1702, having fled to the new world from France during the reign of Louis XIV. The line of descent comes down from Christoffe Du Breuil through Jeane Antoine, Anthony, (who changed the spelling of the name to Dibrell), Edwin, and James Anthony to Edwin Richard Dibrell of this review. Of these Anthony and Edwin were soldiers of the Revolutionary war, the latter being the grandfather of Dr. Dibrell, while his father, Dr. J. A. Dibrell, was a soldier of the Confederate army during the Civil war, serving from 1861 until 1865, after which he devoted his life to the practice of medicine and surgery to the time of his death in 1904.

Dr. Edwin R. Dibrell pursued his early education in the schools of Van Buren, his native city, and afterward attended the United States Naval Academy, prior to entering the Little Rock Medical College, in which he won his M. D. degree as honor man of the graduating class of 1883. He afterward attended and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia and thereafter devoted his time to important and responsible professional duties until his demise. He was alienist at the State Hospital for Nervous Diseases, was advisory physician for the City Hospital and occupied the chair of practice of medicine in the State University for twenty-seven years. He also served as a member of the state board of charities and was president of the Arkansas Medical Society at the time of his demise.

It was in the year 1897 that Dr. Dibrell was united in marriage to Miss Estelle Arrington Tucker, who was born in Little Rock, a daughter of Colonel Sterling H. Tucker, while her mother was a daughter of Dr. A. W. Webb, one of the state's most distinguished men. She is also a granddaughter of Dr. Woods Tucker, who was an own cousin of William Henry Harrison, president of the United States. The Tucker ancestry can be traced back to the Le Tuckere or Tugures of early France. Later generations of the family lived in England and it was from this branch that the Tuckers of Virginia were descended. Colonel Sterling H. Tucker, father of Mrs. Dibrell, was a native of North Carolina. On the Webb side she is a representative of this distinguished family of South Carolina. In 1833 Dr. Woods Tucker came to Arkansas, bringing with him his son, Sterling H., who became Little Rock's leading banker and one of the city's most prominent and popular residents. He died May 10, 1894, after having long been closely and prominently associated with commercial and banking interests in the capital city, being classed for many years as a leading merchant and banker of Little Rock. His ability and integrity were uniformly acknowledged as above par and his social qualities were unrivaled. Both the Webb and Tucker families were represented in the Revolutionary war.

To Dr. and Mrs. Dibrell four children were born: Edwin Richard, who is a graduate of Princeton University; Sterling Tucker, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy and now an ensign in the United States navy on the ship Utah; Frank Strong, a graduate of Phillips-Exeter Academy, at Exeter, New Hampshire, and now a freshman in Princeton University; and Estelle A., a student in the schools of Little Rock.

Mrs. Dibrell was one of the original members of the Arkansas history commission. She belongs to the Ingleside Book Club and other social clubs and is eligible to all the patriotic societies but has connected herself with none, giving all of her time and attention to the rearing of her children. This devotion to the ties of home and family has made her greatly loved and respected by all. She was indeed a faithful companion and helpmate to her honored husband, who departed this life on the 20th of October, 1912, when but fifty-four years of age. A modern philosopher has said: "Not the good that comes to us but the good that comes to the world through us is the measure of our success" and judged by this standard the life of Dr. Dibrell was extremely successful, for each day in his career marked off a full-faithed attempt to help his fellowmen in various ways. He never reckoned his professional activities from the financial standpoint, if one who was unable to make payment therefor, needed his assistance. He was continually extending a helping hand to the poor and needy and he shed around him much of life's sunshine. The profession and the public recognized his superior ability as a physician and all who came into contact with him bear testimony to his high character actuated by the most lofty motives and dominated by the most honorable principles.

WILLIAM ARMOUR CANTRELL, M. D.

Throughout a most active, busy and useful life, Dr. William Armour Cantrell left the impress of his individuality and ability indelibly upon the pages of the history of Arkansas, and it is imperative, therefore, that his life record find place in the annals of the state.

He was born near Nashville, Tennessee, January 23, 1826, a representative of one of the old American families. The Cantrell family is of English origin. The names of large families in the shires of Berks, Derby, Suffolk, Stafford, Norfolk, Wiltes and York are mentioned in the Herald's Visitations List from 1528 to 1624, as belonging to the gentry.

His American ancestry is traced back through five generations to Richard Cantrell, from whom the line comes down through Joseph Zebulon, Stephen and Stephen, Jr., to Dr. Cantrell. Stephen Cantrell, Sr., was born in Abingdon, Virginia, in 1758, and came to Tennessee from North Carolina in 1776, being then in the service of the Continental Commissioners of North Carolina as Captain of the Guard. For his zeal and faithfulness in the discharge of his duties he was awarded a land grant of six hundred and forty acres on Stewart's creek in Davidson county, Tennessee. This land grant was located January 29, 1784, and signed by Richard Caswell, Governor, with the seal of the state of North Carolina affixed, dated October 8, 1787. This land afterward lay in Sumner county, Tennessee, which was created in 1786 by authority of North Carolina, off the east end of Davidson county. At Fort Blount, East Tennessee, Stephen Cantrell, Sr., met and afterward married, in 1782, Mary S. Blakemore, daughter of Major John Blakemore of the famous Donelson expedition. He and William Montgomery were the representatives sent from Sumner county to the first legislature in Tennessee, which met at Knoxville, East Tennessee, March 28, 1796. He was senator from Sumner county in 1797. During the years 1792-93, he was captain of a company of sixty-three Tennesseans, organized for the protection of the country against the inroads of the Indians. He died at his home in Sumner county, Tennessee, February 5, 1827, aged sixty-eight years. His wife, Mary S. Blakemore, was born in North Carolina, March 8, 1765, and died August 2, 1849, aged eighty-four years. Stephen Cantrell, Sr., and Mary Blakemore had eleven children, nine sons and two daughters.

The eldest of these children, Stephen Cantrell, Jr., was born in Sumner county, Tennessee, March 10, 1783, and was married at Nashville, Tennessee, January 2, 1807, to Juliet A. Deaderick Wendel. He was at different times during his life, merchant, commissary and quartermaster during the Creek war, pension agent for Middle Tennessee, county magistrate, mayor of Nashville, president of the Bank of Nashville and finally, a cotton planter on the Arkansas river, where he died of pneumonia September 5, 1854, aged seventy-one years. His wife, Juliet Ann Deaderick, was the daughter of David Wendel, Sr., and Susanna Deaderick, his wife, born in Winchester, Virginia, April 8, 1787. Her grandfather, David Deidrick, Sr., of Wurtemburg, Germany, emigrated to the United States before 1750, and was among the German Pennsylvanians who settled Winchester, Virginia, the oldest town in the Shenandoah valley. His name and that of Samuel Wendel of Dort, Holland, her maternal grandfather, are numbered among thirty-three of the emigrants who built the first Lutheran church in that town. A translation of a Latin document placed in the corner stone of that church is in the possession of the family. David Wendel was a wealthy merchant of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, whose family is one of the best known in that section of the state. Mrs. Stephen Cantrell, Jr., was a niece of George M. Deaderick, in whose honor a street in Nashville is named, and was a cousin of Judge David Deaderick.

Their fifth child, Isadore, was born July 9, 1863, and was graduated from the Little Rock Female College. She was married to Philo H. "He was one of the best known and esteemed men in this vicinity and his nature was so rounded that he overflowed with the milk of human kindness. Generous and good, he cherished no ill feelings against any one, and it was remarked by all who knew him that in thought, speech and action, he was one of the most charitable of men. Beloved by all classes, the humblest as well as the highest in our midst will miss with poignant regret his cheery greeting and sincere sympathy."

Still another biographer wrote of him:

"While the social amenity of his disposition and grace of manner have caused him to be sought by the most polished circles, the earnest simplicity and sympathy of his nature have endeared him to the most humble in rank. Like a full river, bravely bearing its own burdens to the sea; yet dispensing life and refreshment on each side, his course has shown a long succession of private and public services, which prove that the prominent desire of his soul has been to be useful."

He then located in Tate county, Mississippi, for the practice of his chosen profession and was in active practice until his demise in 1906. He was one of the most representative members of the medical profession in the county and state and his demise caused a feeling of deep bereavement to sweep the communities in which he was so well known. His marriage to Miss Mary L. Russwurm was celebrated in Mississippi, she having removed to that state from Alabama with her parents when a girl. Her demise occurred in 1886. To their union five children were born, three of whom are living: Mary, who married J. E.

In 1916, however, he became associated with Dr. Butts and they practiced together until 1917, when the latter entered the service of the United States army. Upon the return of Dr. Butts the partnership was again formed and maintained until February, 1922. Dr. Orr is now practicing independently and is enjoying an extensive and lucrative patronage. JUDGE JAMES GASTON WILLIAMSON.

Judge James Gaston Williamson, one of the leading members of the Arkansas bar, has followed his profession in Monticello for over forty years and in business circles and public affairs he has also figured prominently. His activities have covered a broad scope and he has made his life count as a forceful factor in advancing the interests of his city and state along many lines. His birth occurred in Marshall county, Mississippi, on the 15th of September, 1857, and his parents were Arthur S. and Mary (Meek) Williamson, both of whom were natives of South Carolina. They were reared and married in that state, in which they continued to make their home until 1853, when they removed to Marshall county, Mississippi, and after the outbreak of the Civil war went to Sardis, that state, where the mother died. The father afterward resided with his children in Memphis, Tennessee, until his demise, which occurred in 1871. He had devoted his life to agricultural pursuits and success rewarded his industry and enterprise.

James Gaston Williamson attended the public schools of Sardis, Mississippi, during the reconstruction period following the close of the Civil war, at which time educational facilities in the south were very limited, and he there pursued his studies until 1876, when he came to Monticello. A brother-in-law, Wood E. Thompson, who later became state superintendent of public instruction, was principal of the Rogers Academy at this place and James Gaston Williamson continued his education in that institution, which he attended for two years. During that time he read law under the guidance of Professor Thompson, who had been admitted to the bar but was not active in the work of the profession, and in 1880 he was admitted to practice in the lower courts. Two years later he opened an office in Monticello, becoming associated with William T. Wells under the firm style of Wells & Williamson. On the 26th of April, 1882, Judge Williamson was admitted to practice before the supreme court of Arkansas and he remained a partner of Mr. Wells for more than thirty years, the relationship being severed by the death of the latter about 1911. Since their graduation the Judge has been associated in practice with his two sons, Lamar and Adrian, their interests being conducted under the style of Williamson & Williamson. They have been entrusted with important litigated interests and have built up a large practice, numbering among their clients the Busey Oil Company, the Exchange Bank & Trust Company of Dermott, the Union Bank & Trust Company, the Gates Lumber Company, the Jerome Hardwood Lumber Company, the Dermott Land & Lumber Company, the Citizens Bank of McGehee, the Tillar Mercantile Company, the Monticello Cotton Mills, and the Bewley-Porter Lumber Company. He was made secretary of the corporation and for the past ten years has served as president, in which capacity he is controlling one of the most efficiently operated cotton mills in the south. He is also a leader in financial affairs and was one of the organizers of the Union Bank & Trust Company, which was formed in 1915 by consolidating the Monticello Bank & Trust Company with the Citizens Bank. At the time of the merger he was serving as president of the Monticello Bank & Trust Company and is now a member of the board of directors of the new organization.

In February, 1886, Judge Williamson was united in marriage to Miss Lulu Jackson, a daughter of Captain James A. Jackson of Monticello, who defended the cause of the Confederacy during the Civil war and who was a prominent attorney of this place. He is now deceased. Three children were born to Judge and Mrs. Williamson, but one has departed this life. Those who survive are Lamar and Adrian, both of whom are members of the law firm of Williamson & Williamson.

Judge Williamson has served his fellow citizens in various capacities and has always done able and efficient work. In 1885 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, of which he was a member for one term, and at various times he has served as special chancellor of the courts of the second district, comprising five counties, and he was also a member of the state constitutional convention. For twelve years he was mayor of Monticello and during his administration many needed public improvements were secured, including the installation of an electric light plant and water and sewer systems, the water system being one of the finest in the state. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, whose teachings guide him in his daily life. His interests and activities have touched the various phases of life which are factors in public progress and improvement and he has never used his talents unworthily nor supported a dishonorable cause. His life has been an exemplary one in all respects and he is a man whom to know is to esteem and admire.

JEREMIAH FREEMAN MUNDAY.

The demise of Jeremiah Freeman Munday, which occurred on the 21st of January, 1919, deprived Arkansas of one of its honored pioneer settlers and removed from Russellville a most progressive and public-spirited citizen and a self-made man whose success was won entirely through his own efforts. He was a native of North Carolina, his birth having occurred in Lincoln county on the 28th of December, 1842, and his parents were Spencer and Susanna Munday, who were also natives of that state, in which they spent their lives.

In the public schools of North Carolina, Jeremiah Freeman Munday acquired his education and in that state he enlisted for service in the Civil war, gallantly defending the Confederate cause for four years. He participated in many severe engagements and was twice wounded, at one time receiving an injury to his hip, while on another occasion his hand was disabled. In 1871, when twenty-nine years of age, he came to Arkansas, having at that time very limited funds, and his first position was in the hardware store of J. H. Battenfield at Russellville, after which he entered the service of J. L. Shinn, with whom he remained for fourteen years. It was during that time that he began editing the Democrat, devoting his evenings to that task, and subsequently he engaged in general merchandising as a member of the firm of Cardon & Munday, with which he was connected for fifteen years, and they also made investments in land and other realty. With the proceeds gained from his mercantile interests Mr. Munday purchased lots on Main street and thereon erected two brick store rooms, which are now owned by his widow, and he also acquired two hundred acres of bottom land. He was an enterprising and progressive merchant and through the capable management of his business affairs he won a substantial measure of success, while the integrity of his methods gained for him the respect and confidence of all with whom he was associated.

On May 28, 1873, Mr. Munday was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Shinn, a native of Pope county. Her birth occurred on the 13th of November, 1853, and her parents were Nathaniel D. and Hester (Brooks) Shinn, natives of North Carolina. They were married in that state and in pioneer times came to Arkansas, the father becoming the owner of a farm in Pope county, and during the period of his residence in this state he lived within twelve miles from the home which he had first established here. He was an exceptionally capable business man and at the time of his death was the owner of nine hundred acres of valuable land, all of which he had accumulated through his own efforts. He was the discoverer of anthracite coal in this region, finding a vein upon his land. Since his demise the home farm has been sold by his children. He was a sincere and earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and early became identified with the Masonic fraternity. In his political views he was a stanch democrat and his fellow-townsmen, recognizing his worth and ability, called him to public positions of honor and trust. Previous to the Civil war he was chosen county judge of Pope county and after the close of that conflict he was again elected to that office, serving in all for two terms. He also represented his district in the state legislature and in both connections he made an enviable record, characterized by devotion to duty, incorruptible integrity and ability of a high order. He devoted much time to reading and study and was well informed on many subjects. He was one of the most prominent men in public affairs in the state and in the upbuilding and development of Pope county he took an active and helpful part. To Mr. and Mrs. Shinn were born nine children but only two are living: Mrs. Munday; and A. Bedford, a farmer residing near Carnegie, Oklahoma. Mr. and Mrs. Munday became the parents of three children, of whom two survive: Gertrude, who married Dr. R. L. Smith, a leading physician of Russellville, by whom she has five children, Dorothea, Robert F., Louis M., Jane and Helen; and Charles D., who was formerly connected with the lumber industry at Amarillo, Texas, but is now engaged in the grocery and meat business there.

Mr. and Mrs. Munday became charter members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, at Russellville, and he took a most active and helpful part in its work, acting as a steward and trustee. He also became a teacher in the Sunday school, of which he served as superintendent for a period of twenty-five years, and his labors were effective forces in promoting the moral progress of his community. He was a democrat in his political views and for one term was mayor of Russellville, giving to the town a businesslike and progressive administration and supporting those measures and projects looking toward advancement and improvement. Earnest, self-denying labor was his lot in early manhood, but with ambition and the ability to work his way upward, he steadily advanced along lines of general usefulness as well as individual success. The joy of generous giving was his and at his death he left the following bequests, which have since been paid by his widow: One thousand dollars to the Galloway Female College at Searcy, Arkansas; five hundred dollars to Hendrix College, at Conway, Arkansas; and two hundred dollars to the Henderson-Brown College, at Arkadelphia, Arkansas. His benevolence reached out broadly to his fellowmen and his cooperation was ever given to those things which promote intellectual, social and moral progress, as well as material prosperity. Long acquaintance with Mr. Munday meant stronger friendship, for his life in its various phases stood the test of intimate knowledge and close association, and he enjoyed to the fullest extent the confidence and high regard of his fellow-townsmen.

To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Adams four children were born, three of whom are living: Skipwith, whose name introduces this review; Mary, who received her education in the schools of Arkadelphia; and Margaret, who was likewise educated in Arkadelphia. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and politically the father has always given his allegiance to the democratic party.

After a postgraduate course in the Louisiana State University, he taught one year at the Winfield (Louisiana) high school and was principal for one year of one of the Little Rock schools. He subsequently put aside his educational work and took up the study of law. In 1912 the LL. B. degree was conferred upon him by the University of Arkansas and he was admitted to the bar in the same year. He immediately located in Helena for the practice of his chosen profession and he has remained here. In 1917 he was a member of the state legislature. He did not attain success in a single leap but slowly forged his way upward until he now holds an enviable position in a profession where success depends upon individual merit. Although he has many interests outside of his profession, it is to his profession that he devotes the greater part of his time and attention and he is prominently identified with the Arkansas State and American Bar Associations.

On the 25th of December, 1913, Mr. Adams was united in marriage to Miss Lottie Fones Reaves, a native of Little Rock and a daughter of Edward T. Reaves, a well known resident of that community. FRANK C. SEYMOUR.

Among the large business enterprises which have been important factors in Wilmar's upbuilding and development along commercial lines is that of the Gates Lumber Company, of which Frank C. Seymour is serving as secretary and assistant manager, and broad practical experience well qualifies him for the responsibilities devolving upon him. He was born at Ithaca, New York, June 16, 1877, a son of George P. and Addie A. (Squires) Seymour, the former born in Flint, Michigan, June 10, 1845, and the latter in Ithaca, New York, February 1, 1850, both coming of Revolutionary war stock. The Seymour family is of English ancestry and was established in America by Andrew Seymour, who settled in Virginia several years prior to the war for independence, and his son John served throughout that conflict. He became the father of Theron Seymour, who was the grandfather of the subject of this review and who married a Miss Locke. Her grandfather, Josiah Locke, was a captain of militia in the Revolutionary war. George P. Seymour, the father, was a veteran of the Civil war, in which he participated as a member of the One Hundred and Forty-Second New York Volunteer Infantry. While in the service he lost his hearing. He devoted his active business life to railroad work, serving for forty-two years in the auditor's office of the Wabash Railroad and being one of the company's most trusted and valued employes. He is deceased. The mother is now a resident of South Pasadena, California. She is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and a representative of an old and highly respected family.

In the acquirement of an education Frank C. Seymour attended the public schools of Ferguson, Missouri, and the high school at St. Louis, that state, and his initial business experience was obtained as office boy in the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company. He was but fourteen years of age when he entered its service and remained with that corporation until he reached his twenty-first year, when he became identified with the Banner Lumber Company of St. Louis, Missouri. In 1901 he was sent by the Sawyer & Austin Lumber Company to Pine Bluff, Arkansas, as manager of the retail department of its business at that point and two years later he joined the Bluff City Lumber Company of Pine Bluff, going in its interests to Jonesboro, where he established a branch yard. Its business in that city was conducted under the style of the Jonesboro Lumber Company and Mr. Seymour was placed at its head, continuing to act in that capacity for three years, when the firm disposed of its line of yards. He then accepted the position of bookkeeper with the Jonesboro Transfer Company but left its employ at the end of a year and in 1906 went to Redlands, California, as secretary and manager of the Whitson & Wheeler Planing Mill Company, being thus occupied for about nine months, when his wife's death occurred. Her remains were taken to Jonesboro for interment and Mr. Seymour decided to reside there for a time, reentering the service of the Jonesboro Transfer Company, with which he continued until January, 1908, when he resigned his position. Coming to Wilmar, he became bookkeeper for the Gates Lumber Company, with which he has since been connected, working his way steadily upward through merit and ability until he was made assistant manager in 1916, in which capacity he is now serving, and he is also secretary of the company. Having devoted the greater part of his life to the lumber industry, he is thoroughly familiar with every phase of the business and his well directed efforts and careful supervision of the interests of which he has charge have constituted important elements in the attainment of the success which is now attending the operations of the company. He is a stockholder and director of the firm and is also a stockholder and member of the board of directors of the Wilmar Mercantile Company.

Mr. Seymour has been married twice. On the 14th of February, 1905, he wedded Miss Ann V. Thorne of Jonesboro, Arkansas, who died in 1907, leaving an infant son, Nathan Frank, who died in 1908, when but eighteen months old. In 1907 Mr. Seymour was united in marriage to Miss Margaret McClure of Wilmar, a daughter of John D. C. McClure, who for many years was identified with the Gates Lumber Company at this place but is now a resident of South Pasadena, California. Mr. and Mrs. Seymour have six children: Frances, George McClure, Mary Jane, John McClure, Frank C., Jr., and Emma.

Mr. Seymour is an active and earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is serving on its board of stewards and also as one of its trustees. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he is prominent in public affairs. He has been city recorder for the past nine years and is also a member of the present board of aldermen of Wilmar, making a highly creditable record in both connections. The cause of education has ever found in him a stanch advocate and he is serving as secretary of the school board, in which office he is doing all in his power to improve school facilities and standards in his district. He is connected with the Sons of the American Revolution and is well known in local fraternal circles, being a member of Wilmar Lodge, No. 122, of the Knights of Pythias; Wilmar Camp, No. 15896, of the Modern Woodmen of America; Holly Camp, No. 192, of the Woodmen of the World; and Cabanne Valley Council, No. 1204, of the Royal Arcanum. He is also affiliated with the Masonic order, belonging to Wilmar Lodge, No. 518, F. & A. M.; and Monticello Chapter, No. 115, R. A. M., and he and his wife are identified with the Order of the Eastern Star, being connected with Hazel Chapter, No. 355. His career has been marked by steady advancement and the secret of his success lies in the fact that he has never been afraid of earnest labor and that his diligence and close application have ever been supplemented by integrity and reliability. In matters of citizenship he is public-spirited and progressive and his interest and cooperation can always be aroused in behalf of any project for the welfare of community, county or state.

TROY WILSON LEWIS.

The subject of this sketch is a representative of two old and well known southern families which trace their ancestry in America back to pre-Revolutionary days. His grandfather, Wilson Lewis, was a plantation and slave owner of Mississippi and resided near Hazelhurst in Copiah county. One of his sons and two of his brothers were killed in battle while serving in the Confederate army during the Civil war. His youngest son, Wilson Lewis, father of Troy W. Lewis, was born at Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Mississippi, January 29, 1854. He was educated in the Mississippi schools and at King's College for the practice of medicine but did not enter upon the active work of the profession because of his dislike for the subject. When prospectors brought news into the south of the discovery of gold in the Black Hills of South Dakota Wilson Lewis determined to go there and cast his fortunes with the prospectors but got no farther than central Texas before the boom of the gold bubble was shattered. He remained in Texas and spent the balance of his life as a planter near Grandview in that state. As a democrat he was always interested in the welfare and the progress of the community in which he lived but was never an office seeker. He read Latin and French and received much pleasure from the small library he was able to build up in a country at that time very sparsely settled. He died at Grandview, February 18, 1886, and is still survived by his widow, who bore the maiden name of Florida Agnes Goen.

Her father, grandfather of our subject, bore the name of Lewis Goen and was a native of South Carolina. He went to California in 1849 with the argonauts who crossed the plains on horseback in search of gold on the Pacific coast. He was amply rewarded for braving the perils of the plains and the agonies of Death Valley, for he found the bright metal in quantity. Returning by sailboat by way of Cape Horn to New York city with his bags of gold dug from the eastern foothills of the Rocky mountains, he sought the first opportunity to again brave the many privations of frontier life, settled in central Texas, purchased a vast tract of virgin soil, stocked it with cattle and built a home. He married Elizabeth Quinn, daughter of another Texas pioneer residing in Washington county, and spent his remaining days in Johnson county, Texas, as a rancher and cattle man. He was captured in 1863 by the Federal troops and sent to St. Louis, where he was held as a military prisoner until about the close of the war, when he was, with others, paroled and returned to Texas, where he continued to reside until his death in 1883. He reared a family of nine children, five by his first wife, Elizabeth Quinn, and four by his second wife, Emily Virginia Lane, whom he married in 1868. His marriage to Elizabeth occurred early in 1853 and of her his daughter Florida Agnes Goen was born January 30, 1859.

Wilson Lewis and Florida Agnes Goen were married in Grandview, Texas, on the 29th of July, 1880. They became the parents of two sons: Troy W., whose name introduces this sketch, was born January 30, 1882; and Hardy Washington Lewis, who was born April 8, 1884, both at Grandview, Texas. Hardy now resides in San Antonio, Texas. He entered railroad work early in life, rapidly rising to the position of general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and some time acting vice president of that order. He is a senior member of the firm of Lewis-Patten Company of San Antonio, dealers in general farm and road machinery. He was a federal director in the United States Employment Service and a director of the United States Department of Labor for Texas during the World war. He was also a member of the Texas State Council of Defense and was made chairman of its division of labor. He is a member of the Methodist church and a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. He is a member of the Shrine. He married Miss Duly Talley of Smithville, Texas, and they have two children, Eunice and Wilson.

Troy Wilson Lewis was educated in the Grandview (Texas) high school, one of the leading high schools of the state and affiliated with the State University, finishing with the class of 1896. Immediately entering the Grandview Collegiate Institute (suspended and surrendered charter in 1908) he pursued the science and arts courses with the class of 1901 under a strong faculty presided over by President W. Burrus Head, now in charge of Stone & Webster Engineering interests in Texas, and Dean Richard Augustus Hearon, now chairman of the Graduate School, Southern Methodist University, Dallas, and afterwards took special and graduate work in the Extramural College of the University of Texas and the University of Chicago. He pursued his preliminary law studies privately and under the direction of Judge E. B. Mentz of Houston, Texas, now deceased. He was later admitted to the bar and has maintained a law office in Little Rock since 1912. Some time after opening his law office in Little Rock, seeing the opportunity and being ambitious to attain the highest degree of academic efficiency in his chosen profession, under circumstances then open to an active practitioner, he became a student in the law department of the State University of Arkansas at that time conducted at Little Rock, from which institution he received the Bachelor of Laws degree in 1915, while in 1916 he received the degree of Doctor of Civil Law from the Arkansas Law School upon the completion of special graduate research in law. He is admitted in the United States supreme and Arkansas supreme courts and has remained throughout his professional career an earnest student of the principles of jurisprudence and has always displayed notable ability in applying those principles to questions involved in litigation. He has displayed great argumentative strength in many legal cases before both the trial and appellate courts, in which he has won various victories. His mind is analytical and logical; he is earnest and dignified and has marked strength of character.

Although a busy practitioner Mr. Lewis has found time in which to enrich his mind in the classical languages through research seminars. Being prevented by the World war from going to the University of Edinburgh for graduate work in public law and philology, he resumed academic studies as a graduate student in the Little Rock College, from which he received the degree of Master of Arts in 1917. In 1918 the degree of Doctor of Philosophy was granted to him by that college for completed research work and thesis in Indo-European Comparative (Classical) Philology. He is also a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and a fellow of the American Geographical Society.

Mr. Lewis married Miss Daisy Burgess of Itaska, Texas, early in 1903, but she died the following year. He then taught school in Kansas, Missouri and Texas for three years and traveled extensively over the United States as a commercial salesman for a national concern. On the 3d of March, 1907, he was united in marriage to Miss Jessie Olivia Jones Wise at the Christian church in Kansas City, Missouri. Her father, Hon. Joseph S. Wise, born in Ohio, was a college man who lived for some time with his family in Lafayette county, Missouri, but is now deceased. Her mother, whose maiden name was Harriet Wilson, was a native of Kentucky and has also died. Both her father and mother are interred in the family cemetery in Lafayette county, Missouri. Mrs. Lewis was born in Hardin, Ray county, Missouri. Following the completion of her high school course she attended Odessa College, from which she received the degree of Bachelor of Arts (Magna Cum Laude). She was both a teacher and afterward first assistant principal of the Oak Grove (Missouri) high school, and principal of the Grain Valley and Bates City schools. Mrs. Lewis early in life united with the Christian church, which fellowship she continues to enjoy.

Mr. Lewis is a member of the Immanuel Baptist church. He is also a Freemason and has received the degrees of the Royal Arch chapter and the council; he has attained the Knights Templar degree in the commandery. He was made secretary for Arkansas, Correspondence Circle, Quatuor Coronati Lodge, No. 2076, London, England, early in 1920. He is also a member of the Mystic Shrine. He was active in several capacities during the World war both with the national conscription act and the department of justice. He was appointed United States naturalization attorney early in 1918 and assigned to duty with the National Army organizations, serving throughout the war in the seventh naturalization district, which included eight states. Politically he is a democrat. His interest in the public good has found expression in many tangible ways, not the least of which is in upholding the legal and moral status upon which the progress and good name of every community must depend.

ELI WHITNEY COLLINS.

One of the progressive business men of Jonesboro is Eli Whitney Collins, of the Jonesboro Amusement Company, operating the Grand, Empire and Liberty theatres. In the acquirement of an education Eli Whitney Collins attended the public and high schools of Jonesboro and was graduated from the latter institution in 1901. Then followed some eighteen successive years of active work in the field of music and drama. Mr. Collins has toured the United States many times as a member of various theatrical organizations, chief among them being: The Man of the Hour, Bought and Paid For, The Wolf, and Paid in Full. In 1912 he became manager, working for Robert Sherman, the well known eastern producer for many years. In addition to his activities as stage director and manager Mr. Collins is a dramatist of some importance, having written many plays that have enjoyed prosperity in the country's foremost theatres. His, The Girl Without a Chance, was one of the biggest financial successes of the past decade and his Brute of Berlin was highly successful during the late war. Other popular plays from Mr. Collins' pen are: The Last Roundup, The Lure of the City, Little Sister of the Streets, and When Crook Meets Crook. He also contributed the book and lyrics for one of New York's most successful musical shows, My Sunshine Girl. Upon the death of his father he returned to his native town as administrator of the estate of R. L. Collins and he has remained here, having purchased, in 1920, the interest of M. R. The paternal grandfather, Elisha Burke, was a native of Ireland who came to this country at an early day and located in Phillips county

He remained there but a short time, when he removed to St. Louis, Missouri, where he secured a position in a job printing office. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he was quick to offer his services and enlisted in the Missouri State Militia, receiving a commission as lieutenant. In 1869 he set out for Arkansas, and made the trip to Harrison from Springfield, Missouri, on foot. Arriving in Boone county he determined to enter the newspaper business on his own account and he established the first sheet in this part of the country. That was but one of the many trials experienced by the newspaper publisher in those early days. While residing in Philadelphia, Mr. Newman was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Carr, a native of Ireland, and to their union but one child was born, John R. His birth occurred in St. Louis, Missouri, on the 19th of October, 1859. In the acquirement of an education John R. Ohio, and served in the Civil war as sergeant of Company C, in a Union regiment, enlisting at Fort Smith, Arkansas. He was wounded during an engagement in Newton county, this state, and later won a second lieutenancy. At the termination of that time he entered the newspaper business with his father and after his father's death assumed entire charge of the publication. He launched the Daily Times, which has a circulation of six hundred and he continues to publish the Harrison Times, an eight page weekly, having a circulation of fifteen hundred. Dr. Alvin Leonidas Jobe, physician and surgeon of Little Rock, was born in Fayetteville, Lincoln county, Tennessee, October 21, 1881, and is a son of John Marion Kelley and Mary Emma (Gault) Jobe, both of whom were natives of Tennessee, the former born in Lewisburg, in 1861, and the latter in Fayetteville, in the same year. They were married in Fayetteville, in 1879, and became parents of five sons and three daughters, all of whom are living with the exception of one son, who died at the age of fourteen years. The father has always devoted his life to the occupation of farming and his political endorsement has even been given to the democratic party. He and his wife still make their home at Lewisburg, Tennessee, to which place they removed during the infancy of Dr. Jobe.

The latter was a resident of Lewisburg to the age of twenty years and pursued his early education in the public and high schools of that city, while later he attended Hudgins' and Armstrong's Preparatory School of that place. Dr. Jobe, following America's entrance into the World war, was one of the active organizers in Little Rock of Hospital Unit T, a work undertaken in June, 1917. He was commissioned a captain in that unit on the 10th of November, 1917, and was appointed adjutant for the purpose of recruiting the personnel of the unit on the 27th of November. This unit was then sent to Fort McPherson, Georgia, for training and equipment for overseas. When the unit was mobilized in Little Rock in January, 1918, Dr. Jobe was placed in command and retained the command until they reached Liverpool, where he was detached and sent to the aviation department at Lincoln, England, where he was chief medical officer to the American detachment and so continued for a few months, when at his own request, that he might get nearer the front, he was sent to Romorantin, France, and was there detached and sent to Camp Hospital, No. 37, Air Production Centre, No. 2, this being the largest in France. He was then placed on the surgical staff and continued there from October 12, 1918, until August 23, 1919. When he sailed for home, landing at New York on the 5th of September, 1919, he at once returned to Little Rock and resumed the practice of his profession. On the 16th of September, 1919, he received a commission as major of the Medical Officers' Reserve Corps, being thus liable to military call.

DR. ALVIN L. JOBE

Dr. Jobe gives his political endorsement to the democratic party, which he has supported since age conferred upon him the right of franchise but he has never sought nor desired public office. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a member of the Winfield Memorial church.

JUDGE JOSEPH W. ALFORD.

Judge Joseph W. Alford, a representative of the Hot Springs bar, who since 1914 has engaged in practice in this city, was born on a plantation near Murfreesboro, Pike county, Arkansas, May 14, 1857, and is a son of Madison Alford, who was a native of Alabama and who was a veteran of the Mexican war. He became a Methodist minister and for many years resided in Texas, from which state he removed to Arkansas in pioneer times, settling in Pike county. He and four of his sons were in the Confederate army during the Civil war and following the close of hostilities he returned to the plantation, devoting his attention to the management thereof and to the active work of the ministry. He was a slave owner prior to the war and one of his slaves remained with him throughout the entire war period and continued with the family to the time of his death. Madison Alford died at the age of seventy years.

Judge Alford, of this review, was a lad of but fourteen years at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war and he worked in the fields while his elder brothers were in the service, having the entire management of the plantation. He was educated in the public schools and he remained on the farm until 1881, when at the age of twenty-four years he came to Hot Springs. Here he assisted in laying the first water and gas mains of the city. Soon afterward he was elected to the office of constable and while serving in that capacity he devoted his leisure hours to the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1914. He at once entered upon the active practice of his profession and has since served as justice of the peace and notary public. He is a lawyer of ability, carefully and systematically preparing his cases and presenting his cause with clearness and force in the courts.

When but eighteen years of age Judge Alford was married to Miss Nancy Higgins, who was born and reared in his home neighborhood, their acquaintance dating from early childhood. They have become parents of five children, three daughters and two sons. Judge Alford is a Mason and has attained the Knights Templar degree of the York Rite, exemplifying at all times in his life the beneficent spirit and high principles of the order.

HON. EDWARD E. ALEXANDER.

One of the leading criminal lawyers in Arkansas is the Hon. Edward E. Alexander, a resident of Blytheville. He is a native of Missouri, his birth having occurred on a farm near Fruitland on September 17, 1882. He is the son of Oliver and Lillie Lucretia (Woods) Alexander, both natives of Cape Girardeau county, that state. For a number of years the father was engaged in farming near Fruitland and he and his wife are living retired in that town.

In the acquirement of his early education Edward E. Alexander attended the common schools of his birthplace and subsequently enrolled in the Jackson Military College at Jackson, Missouri. He then attended the Southeastern Normal School at Cape Girardeau and in 1905 enrolled in the law department of the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. He was graduated from that institution with the LL. B. degree in 1907 and was admitted to the bar of that state. In the fall of the same year he came to Blytheville, took the law examination for admission to the bar of Arkansas, and has practiced here since. Although Mr. Alexander has a large general clientage, practicing in all state courts and in the United States supreme court, he specializes in criminal law and has won a reputation in that connection. In 1914 he was elected to the Arkansas state legislature and served one term, 1915 through 1916, and in 1917 he was elected to the senate. He was a member of the latter body for two terms and is the author of the Alexander Road Law, which is quoted by the United States supreme court and by courts throughout the country. He was a candidate for congress in 1919, having been one of five candidates, but he was defeated by a small majority.

On the 30th of June, 1908, occurred the marriage of Mr. Alexander to Miss Quincy C. Tipton of Cottonwood Point, Missouri. To their union one son has been born, Quincy Oliver, whose birth occurred July 28, 1909. Mrs. Alexander is a woman of much culture and is prominent in all civic, social and club affairs.

Fraternally Mr. Alexander is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He belongs to Blytheville Lodge, No. 1211, of the latter order and is now district deputy grand exalted ruler. He has likewise served as exalted ruler of the local lodge at various times. Both Mr. and Mrs. Alexander are members of the Baptist church, to the support of which they are generous contributors. Along strictly professional lines he holds membership in the Arkansas State and Mississippi County Bar Associations and as a public-spirited citizen with the welfare of the community ever at heart, he is actively identified with the Chamber of Commerce. During his years of residence in the state Mr. Alexander has wielded a great influence for good and no man stands higher for integrity or more sterling worth.

RUFUS L. COLLINS.

In the passing of Rufus L. Collins, Arkansas lost a representative and progressive citizen. He was born April 20, 1860, in Craighead county, Arkansas, one and one-half miles north of Jonesboro, a son of Martin and Eliza (Loftis) Collins. The father was born in Spartanburg, South Carolina, and emigrated to this state in 1854, driving across country in wagons. He was united in marriage while on that trip, to Miss Eliza Loftis, whose people were also of the party en route to the new state. To their union the following children were born: Memory, of Walcott, this state; Rufus L., whose name initiates this review; Anne, who married John W. Sharpe and died about 1897, leaving six children; and Albert M. of Jonesboro, who now occupies the old family homestead. Mr. Collins' demise occurred on the 9th of August, 1864. His widow died in 1888.

The boyhood, youth and early manhood of Rufus L. Collins were spent in humble, rural surroundings and he was but four years of age when he was left fatherless. He was reared to adult age by his fond and brave little mother, who, left a widow with her little brood, fought the big fight for existence on the little farm left by her husband. The children received all the education possible in what was then almost a wilderness, and they tramped many miles to the primitive schools. Upon arriving at man's estate, Rufus L. Collins continued farming and was active along that line until an accident deprived him of his right leg and compelled him to seek less strenuous labor. This loss was sustained through the fall of a spirited horse and might have proved a death blow to a man less energetic than Rufus Collins. At the time of this accident he was married and the father of two children. But Mr. Collins, with that hardihood which was so characteristic of Arkansas pioneers, resolved that this physical handicap should not deter him and it was this unflagging determination that won for him the success he achieved in life. In 1885 he entered local politics as a candidate for tax assessor and was elected to that office by a flattering vote. Not long after assuming the responsibilities of that office he discovered that his lack of education was destined to prove a severe handicap in his chosen line and for many months he diligently applied himself to textbooks, availing himself of every opportunity of securing that education which the limitations of his surroundings had forced him to do without in his youth. So successful was he in his position of public service that he was three times elected tax assessor, serving a total of six years. Between the years 1892 and 1896 he engaged in farming and stock dealing, but in the latter year again entered politics, making the race for sheriff. He was elected to that office by a large majority and was reelected in 1898. In 1908 he entered the race for county clerk, was elected over several strong competitors, and in 1910 again sought and received this office at the hands of the Craighead county voters. Mr. Collins served Jonesboro in many capacities, having been twice elected to the board of aldermen and to the board of education. He was always intensely interested in educational affairs. He was a firm believer in the future of northeast Arkansas and became a pioneer in bottom farming, acquiring a large wooded tract, which he cleared and brought to a tillable condition. That land was located in the St. Francis basin. In 1915 Mr. Collins was prevailed upon to accept the appointment as chief of police and he served in that capacity for two years, when he resigned to accept an offer from the National Union Insurance Company of Pittsburgh. In 1918 he was appointed as deputy state oil and gas inspector by Governor Brough, whom he had valiantly supported in his successful race for the governorship.

On the 28th of February, Mr. Collins was suddenly taken ill while on a north bound Cotton Belt train, this attack resulting in his death. He was taken off the train at Paragould and hurried to the Walker hotel, where he died some twenty minutes later. Physicians were unable to explain the direct cause, some of them being inclined to credit it to a severe burn which he received while testing a car of gasoline at Helena, Arkansas, on the 16th of February, and which became infected, causing much suffering. Mr. Collins' body was returned to Jonesboro and the funeral services were read by his close friend, Dr. E. E. Dudley. His body lay in state in the magnificent First Baptist church of Jonesboro, of which he was a devout member, and for the construction of which he had given much labor and money.

On the 6th of October, 1880, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Collins to Miss Martha A. Thomas, a daughter of Isaac and Julia Thomas. Her father was a gallant and faithful soldier in the Confederate army and made the supreme sacrifice on the 1st of January, 1862. His widow survived him for many years. Mrs. Collins was born and reared in Craighead county. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Collins the following children were born: Mrs. Oney B. Grover of Los Angeles, California; John A., of Paragould; Eli Whitney, extended mention of whom is made elsewhere in this work; Amber, of Los Angeles, California; Martha, now Mrs. Seymour Andrews of Chicago, Illinois; Bertha, now Mrs. Carl Landenburg of Burbank, California; Gladys, who is the wife of Irl P. Gibson of Hope, this state; Glenna, now Mrs. Prince Parkhurst of Jonesboro; and Julia Mae Collins, who lives in the Jonesboro homestead with her mother. Two children are deceased: William, who died at the age of eighteen months of infantile paralysis; and Mildred, who was burned to death in 1908, when but five years of age. Glenna and Gladys are twins.

A contemporary writer has said of Mr. Collins: "It is doubtful if any citizen of this section ever boasted more friends than did Rufus L. Collins. He was cheery, happy and ever ready to extend a helping hand to a fellowman. Rufus L. Collins' life was full and complete. From an humble start he rose to a position of high esteem in the hearts of all who knew him and to high estate as a man and a citizen. His passing was genuinely mourned by thousands who counted him as their friend. He fulfilled the highest mission in life, that of having made the world a better place because he had lived in it."

DaCOSTA WALKER, M. D.

There is perhaps no city in the United States of equal size with Hot Springs that has as many capable and eminent physicians. The reason for this is obvious. The hot springs of the region which have given to the city its name and which have splendid curative properties annually draw thousands of visitors, many of whom must be under the care of physicians. If one would win success in Hot Springs in the practice of medicine his ability must be of a pronounced order, and thoroughness and persistency of purpose must be numbered among his marked characteristics. Meeting all these requirements Dr. DaCosta Walker now enjoys an extensive patronage in his adopted city.

He came to Arkansas from Illinois, his birth having occurred in Johnson county, that state, April 3, 1881, and in 1884 he was brought to Hot Springs by his father, Dr. J. J. Walker, who was a native of Tennessee and removed to Illinois in the '60s, there residing until he came to the southwest in the year indicated. He had graduated from Rush Medical College and following his removal to Hot Springs opened an office, becoming one of the early physicians of this city. He was associated for some time in practice with Dr. Gebhardt and won success in his profession. As his financial resources increased he purchased considerable property here and was one of the men of affluence in Hot Springs at the time of his death, which occurred on the 9th of April, 1903. At one time he was a member of the board of health at Hot Springs. He belonged to the Knights of Pythias, and along professional lines he was identified with the American Medical Association. He married Maggie Fleming, who survives him and still makes her home in this city. They were the parents of two children who are yet living, the daughter being Pearl, the wife of W. G. Williams, now of California.

Dr. Walker, whose name introduces this review, was educated in the schools of Hot Springs and in Bethel College, a Baptist institution at Russellville, Kentucky—, his mother's birthplace. He afterward entered upon preparation for his professional career as a student in Rush Medical College at Chicago in 1899 and subsequently matriculated in the Memphis Medical College, now the University of Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the class of 1903. He afterward returned to Hot Springs and took up his father's practice. He has since successfully followed his profession in this city and is now a member of the medical staff of St. Joseph's Infirmary Hospital. He specializes in genito-urinary and is regarded as a physician of eminent ability. He, too, has amassed considerable property here and his real estate holdings return to him a gratifying income.

Dr. Walker was united in marriage on the 6th of February, 1921, to Miss Toka Stewart, and they are highly esteemed in the best social circles of the city, having many warm friends here. Dr. Walker is identified with the Knights of Pythias lodge and belongs to the County and State Medical Societies and to the American Medical Association. He holds to high professional standards, ever closely observing the ethics of the profession, and his liberal practice is incontrovertible evidence of his ability.

W. F. GORDON.

W. F. Gordon, who is now living retired in Harrison, figured for many years as a prominent business man of his section of the state by reason of his activity as a merchant and banker. His entire life record has been marked by that steady progress which results from individual effort intelligently directed. He early learned the value of industry and determination, and as the years have gone by he has steadily pursued his way until his objective was reached.

Mr. Gordon came to the southwest from Iowa, his birth having occurred in Iowa City on the 21st of March, 1851, his parents being James Allen and Rachel A. (Ford) Gordon, the former a native of Virginia, while the latter was born in Ohio. The father engaged in farming as well as carpentering and contracting, and in later life he removed to Indiana, thence to Illinois, but his death occurred in Indiana. Mrs. Gordon departed this life in Yell county, Arkansas. Mr. Gordon was a stanch supporter of the democratic party, and he and his wife reared their family in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church. They were parents of the following named: Milton, now deceased, who came to Arkansas and located in Conway county, where he engaged in farming until called to his final rest; James Madison, who died in Illinois when about fifteen years of age; Jane Gordon Boyles, who died at Darwin, Clark county, Illinois; John B., who followed farming in Conway county, Arkansas, to the time of his death; Martha, the deceased wife of J. G. Housley; Myrta M., who died at Casa, Arkansas, as the result of a railway accident; twins, a boy and a girl, who were born in Ohio and died at birth; and W. F., whose name initiates this review.

In the acquirement of his education W. F. Gordon attended the public schools of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. In his early days, when a resident of Ohio, he walked a distance of three miles to a primitive log schoolhouse, crudely equipped, while the methods of instruction were largely in keeping with the exterior. Later, however, he had the benefits of advanced instruction in Indiana and Illinois, and when his textbooks were put aside he obtained work on a steamboat on the Wabash river, spending six years in that connection. He then removed to Illinois, where he began clerking, spending several years as a salesman in Darwin, Clark county. From that state he removed to Missouri and afterward came to Arkansas, settling in Woodruff county, where he engaged in farming, devoting his attention largely to the raising of corn and cotton. After a period of two years spent in Woodruff county, he removed to Conway county, where he carried on general agricultural pursuits and also conducted a country store, post office and cotton gin at Opello for six years. In 1886 he took up his abode in Harrison, where he engaged in marchandising, becoming one of the pioneer business men of the town. He carried a well selected line of goods, and his enterprise and thorough reliability brought to him a very substantial patronage. He also became a prominent figure in financial circles as organizer of Gordon's Bank, of which he was chosen cashier and director. He remained active in the banking business until 1907, when he disposed of the institution to the Citizens Bank and retired from active business. His entire career had been one of steady advancement, and the steps in his orderly progression are easily discernible. Obstacles and difficulties in his path seemed but to serve as an impetus for renewed effort on his part and throughout his entire career he has readily recognized the opportunities which have been offered and has utilized these opportunities with good effect in the attainment of success. Aside from his banking interests he became a director of the Missouri and North Arkansas Railroad and still fills that position, being the second oldest director of the road. His cooperation has always been regarded as a valuable asset in the successful management of any business enterprise, and his position as a forceful factor in commercial and financial progress in his section of the state has always been an enviable one.

In 1877 in Missouri, Mr. Gordon was united in marriage to Miss Josie Lockhart Welch, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of W. R. and Elizabeth (Lockhart) Welch, the former a well known physician. Both parents were natives of Alabama, from which state they removed to Tennessee at an early day, and during the Civil war Dr. Welch rendered valuable military aid. He subsequently came to Arkansas, settling in Woodruff county, where he remained active in professional circles until about five years prior to his death, which occurred in Pope county, Arkansas, in 1885, he being at that time seventy-seven years of age.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Gordon has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party, possessing firm belief in its principles as factors in good government. For some time he filled the position of alderman in Harrison, and he has been chairman of the waterworks improvement district No. 1 and a member of the city board since 1916. He is still active in this connection, and his public service is regarded as of value to the community which he thus represents. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Gordon is today one of the best known men in northwestern Arkansas and is a stanch supporter of all plans and projects that have to do with the benefit and upbuilding of Harrison. He was a dominant factor in securing the establishment of the railroad and railroad shops here, and his influence has ever proven a vital element in the success of public projects. All who know him attest the worth of his work and the worth of his character, and he is justly accounted one of the honored and representative residents in Boone county.

CRAWFORD L. VINES, M. D.

Dr. Crawford L. Vines, a physician and surgeon of Pine Bluff, was born on a farm near El Dorado, Arkansas, in 1884, his parents being Washington and Terza (Smith) Vines. The father was born in the Edgefield district of South Carolina on the 22d of September, 1841, and was the third in order of birth in the family of four children whose parents were Neely and Sarah (Porterfield) Vines. The Vines family on leaving South Carolina removed to Union Parish of Louisiana in 1847 and there Mrs. Sarah Vines died in the year 1865, while Neely Vines died in the same parish twenty years later. Washington Vines, father of Dr. Vines, served with the Confederate army during the Civil war, becoming a member of Company C, Nineteenth Louisiana Infantry, under General Cleburne. He was wounded in the battle of Chickamauga but spent most of the time on active duty and proved his valor and courage on many a battle field. After the war he removed to Texas and later became a resident of Union county, Arkansas, where he acquired a large acreage. In connection with the cultivation of his land he operated a sawmill and grist mill and thus was actively identified with the substantial material development of the region in which he lived. In 1865 he married Terza Smith, who came to Arkansas from Alabama with her parents, Thomas and Lucinda Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Washington Vines had a large family, as follows: Sarah, Ida and J. Ellen, all deceased; Jordan; Joannah; Franklin, who is a practicing physician; Terza, who has departed this life; Crawford L.; Minor; and Anna Lee, the wife of Walter Patterson. During the later years of his life the father of this family was a minister, taking up active work as a clergyman in 1880 and preaching in Union county, Arkansas. He was also a devoted member of the Masonic fraternity and his life was ever actuated by high and honorable principles, making him a man worthy of the warmest esteem and confidence of all who knew him.

Dr. Vines was educated in the high school at Junction City, Arkansas, and at Ouachita College, thus completing his literary course before entering upon preparation for his professional career. At length he became a student in the medical department of the University of Tennessee and later continued his studies in Tulane University at New Orleans. Having thus qualified for active practice, he opened an office in Farmerville, Louisiana, and later removed to Crossett, Arkansas, where he continued until 1918, when he came to Pine Bluff. In the intervening period of four years he has built up a good practice, the public recognizing the fact that he is competent to cope with many of the intricate and involved problems which continually confront the physician.

In 1911 Dr. Vines was united in marriage to Miss Gordie Dawkins, a daughter of James Dawkins. They are popular in the younger social circles of Pine Bluff, having gained many warm friends here. They belong to the Methodist Episcopal church and Dr. Vines is also a faithful follower of the teachings of Masonry.

JOHN M. GOLDEN.

Although one of the younger representatives of the Dermott bar, John M. Golden has already demonstrated his ability to cope with the intricate problems of the law and zealously devotes his energies to his profession. He has been practicing as a member of the firm of Buckner & Golden. Colonel Buckner died March 8, 1922. Following his death Mr. Golden was joined by his brother, A. Z. Golden, and the firm is now Golden & Golden. John M. Golden was born in Scott county, Mississippi, December 11, 1892, and is a son of Alexander and Jennie (Clark) Golden, both natives of Lee county, Mississippi. The father has devoted his life to agricultural pursuits and resides on the home farm in Scott county, Arkansas. The mother died on September 10, 1910.

John M. Golden completed a course in pedagogy at the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi, and on the 8th of April, 1917, enlisted for service in the World war, being sent to the Officers' Training School at Camp Logan H. Subsequently he was transferred to the Three Hundred and Forty-sixth Infantry, which formed a part of the Eighty-seventh Division, and was stationed at Camp Pike for a year. On the 25th of August, 1918, the regiment was ordered overseas and landed in Liverpool, England, on the 5th of September, going from there to Winchester, England. From that point they proceeded to Havre, France, and were later sent to St. Sarine, where they were in training for a month. Mr. Golden was then transferred to an officers' training school, where he remained for six weeks and was next ordered to return to St. Nazaire, France, where his regiment was stationed until the signing of the armistice, being sent out from there on detached duty at various times. At St. Nazaire they embarked for the United States on the 3d of April, 1919, and landed at New York on the 13th of that month, being demobilized at Camp Dix, New Jersey, on April 15th, Mr. Golden receiving his discharge as a first lieutenant. On the following day Mr. Golden started for home and entered the law department of the State University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1920. In the spring of that year he came to Dermott and became associated with Colonel R. A. Buckner, one of the foremost lawyers in Arkansas, their interests being conducted under the firm style of Buckner & Golden. Mr. Golden is an earnest and discriminating student, thoroughly familiar with the principles of jurisprudence, and in the preparation of cases he is careful and painstaking. He is strong in argument, logical in his deductions, and conforms his practice to the highest standards of the profession.

On the 15th of April, 1921, Mr. Golden married Miss Zelma Hatten of Wiggins, Mississippi, and their religious faith is indicated by their membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. They are deeply interested in its work and Mr. Golden is serving on the board of stewards and is also president of the Epworth League. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, being affiliated with Sebastapol Lodge, F. & A. M. He paid his own way through the university, teaching school for two years and working in other capacities in order to secure the means of defraying his tuition. He is an industrious, persevering young man, who is surmounting all obstacles and difficulties in his path in order that he may reach the goal of his ambition, and in a profession demanding keen intellect and more than ordinary ability he is rapidly coming to the front.

BEN A. BROWN.

A prominent and prosperous business man of Pocahontas is Ben A. Brown, cashier of the Pocahontas State Bank. He was born in Randolph county on the 4th of September, 1869, a son of William A. and Elizabeth (Wilson) Brown, both deceased. The father was a native of Tennessee, came to this state and located in Randolph county in 1857. Having acquired good farm land here, he engaged in agricultural pursuits and was active in that connection many years. He achieved more than substantial success. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he served in the Confederate army in the Arkansas infantry and cavalry. He was discharged from the army, with the rank of lieutenant. Mr. Brown was one of the pioneer settlers of this county and contributed in a marked degree to its development and improvement. In 1865 in Randolph county was celebrated the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Brown. She was born in Arkansas, her parents having come from Georgia to Randolph county in 1841. They were prominent among the early settlers here. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Brown five children were born, three boys and two girls, of whom one boy and one girl are living. Ben A., whose name introduces this review, was the third in order of birth.

Ben A. Brown attended the common schools of Randolph county and up to the age of twenty-two years he lived on the home farm, assisting his father in its cultivation. For four years he was active as deputy circuit clerk and was then elected circuit clerk, in which capacity he served from 1896 to 1900. He again held the office of deputy circuit clerk in 1900 and in 1904 he was elected county and probate judge of Randolph county. He was active in that office until 1906, but in 1905 entered the employ of the Pocahontas State Bank as cashier. Since the termination of his office he has devoted his entire time and attention to his duties at the bank and he has won many friends for the institution. At the time Mr. Brown became associated with the bank the capital and surplus totaled some twelve thousand, five hundred dollars and the average deposits were fifteen thousand dollars. He has been a dominant figure in the growth of the institution and the capital and surplus of the bank are now sixty thousand dollars, with deposits averaging around two hundred and seventy thousand dollars. Mr. Brown is also identified with the Randolph County Abstract Company of Pocahontas as a director.

At Maynard, Arkansas, on the 20th of September, 1899, occurred the marriage of Mr. Brown to Miss Jessie H. Lehman, a daughter of John M. C. Lehman a prominent citizen of that community. Mrs. Brown is a woman of much culture and refinement and she is socially prominent.

Politically Mr. Brown has always given his allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Randolph Lodge, No. 71, F. & A. M. and Randolph Chapter, No. 76, Royal Arch Masons. He is likewise affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, being a charter member of the local lodge which was established in 1894. He has been a member of the Pocahontas school board for the past twenty-five years. During the World war Mr. Brown gave generously of his time and money in the furtherance of the government's interests and he was not only active as chairman of the War Savings Stamps committee and the fuel commission, but he made many speeches throughout the county in behalf of the various drives. Mr. Brown has gained distinctive prestige as one of the representative business men and sterling citizens of Pocahontas and he well merits the esteem in which he is held by his fellowmen.

ELMER O. OWENS.

Numbered among the prominent and successful members of the Arkansas bar is Elmer O. Owens, who has practiced his profession in the county of his nativity since 1911. Not only has he gained prominence in legal circles but as a business man and public-spirited citizen he is well known. Mr. Owens was born in Marion county, this state, on the 29th of May, 1876, a son of J. S. and Mary (Flippin) Owens. His maternal grandfather, Perry Flippin, was born in Tennessee, but came to Marion county along with the first white settlers of this state. He made the trip overland, experiencing the many hardships of those early days and on arriving in Marion county he secured a homestead on which he resided until death. He was a brother of the well known Judge Flippin. J. S. Owens, the father of our subject, was a native of Alabama, where his birth occurred on the 19th of February, 1851. He came with his parents to Arkansas at an early day, making the trip overland with oxen, and on arriving here homesteaded eighty acres, which he cleared himself. He put up many log improvements and soon became one of the successful and progressive farmers of the community. He achieved much popularity among his fellowmen and for four terms served them as county judge and represented the county in the state legislature for one term. In his spare time he had studied law and he was admitted to the bar a short time before his death. Mr. Owens was twice married, Mary Flippin having been his first wife. But one child was born to this union, Elmer O. Owens, whose name initiates this review. Mary Flippin was a native of Tennessee. Her death occurred in Arkansas when her son was but two years of age. Some time later Mr. Owens was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Duren, a native of Arkansas, and to them eight children were born: Dottie, who is the wife of W. T. Young of Pyatt, Arkansas; Grover T., a member of the state senate from Little Rock; Arkie of Pyatt; Louise of California; Frank, a contractor of Denton, Texas; Margaret, the wife of Dr. S. A. Deenen of Stuttgart; Addie, a resident of Camden; and Brun, a locomotive engineer residing in Bakersfield, California. The political allegiance of Mr. Owens was always given to the democratic party and he was a Master Mason. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Christian church, in which faith their family was reared.

In the pursuit of an education Elmer O. Owens attended the common schools of Marion county and after graduating from the high school at Yellville, taught school for a period of seven years in the country schools of Marion county. At the termination of that time, however, he determined to enter the mercantile business and as a result removed to Rush, where for four years he was successful in the conduct of a general merchandise store. In his spare time he had studied law and subsequently the year 1906 saw his admittance to the bar but he did not begin active practice until 1911. He sold out his mercantile business and then engaged in real estate but finally in 1911 located in Yellville, where he established law offices. A man whose natural abilities would secure him prominence in any community it was not long before he became widely known as a leading member of his profession and built up an extensive and lucrative clientage, handling much important litigation before the courts. In the same year that he entered upon the legal practice in Yellville, Mr. Owens was elected state representative and served in that capacity for one year. In 1915 he was elected a member of the state senate, his term of office expiring in 1917, since which time he has devoted his entire attention to his professional duties.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Owens has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party, in the activities of which he has taken an active part. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is likewise a Master Mason. He is a Noble Grand of the former organization. The abilities of Mr. Owens as a lawyer and the excellent reputation which he enjoys as a member of that profession have given him creditable standing among the attorneys of Yellville and Marion county. His practice almost from the beginning has been very satisfactory and he has achieved a gratifying degree of success. He is well known in legal, business and fraternal circles of the community and is one of its valued citizens.

HILDRED MEADE MARTIN, D. D. S.

Dr. Hildred Meade Martin is devoting her attention to a calling which is unique among the professions, in that it demands capability of a trifold nature. One must not only possess a broad understanding of the scientific principles of dentistry, with ability accurately and successfully to manipulate the delicate little instruments which form the dentist's equipment, but must also have that executive ability which brings the financial reward of labor—a reward which the dentist certainly merits, for his work is of an extremely responsible character. Meeting all these requirements Dr. Martin has steadily progressed in her chosen life work. She is a native daughter of Kansas, her birth having occurred in the Sunflower state near Ottawa, in 1887. She is a daughter of J. F. and Julia (McFarland) Meade and spent her girlhood days under the parental roof, pursuing her education after leaving the common schools at Shawnee, Oklahoma, and eventually entering the Western Dental College of Kansas City, Kansas. She began practice in Fort Smith in 1912 and through the intervening period has built up a business of most extensive and gratifying proportions. She is the only lady dentist in Arkansas and is the acknowledged peer of the masculine representatives of the profession. In 1916 she became the wife of F. L. Martin. She continues in practice with a well equipped and carefully appointed office and that her work is highly satisfactory to the public is shown by the liberal patronage accorded her.

PHILIP DODDRIDGE McCULLOCH.

A representative citizen of Marianna, Lee county, is Philip Doddridge McCulloch, who was born in Rutherford county, Tennessee, at Murfreesboro, on the 23d of June, 1851, a son of Dr. Philip Doddridge and Lucy Virginia (Burrus) McCulloch, both natives of Tennessee. On the paternal side he is descended from Scotch ancestors, members of the McCulloch family having come to America at an early day, settling in North Carolina. Alexander McCulloch, the progenitor of this branch of the family in this country, located near old Halifax, North Carolina, prior to the Revolutionary war and was for some years a member of the council there. He had a son, Benjamin, whose son, Benjamin, was the paternal grandfather of our subject. He married Sarah Lytle, a daughter of Captain Lytle, an outstanding figure in military circles during the Revolutionary war.

Dr. Philip Doddridge McCulloch was born near Murfreesboro, Rutherford county, Tennessee, on the 15th of January, 1825. He was educated in the private schools of that day, completing his classical course in the University of Nashville at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1842. He studied medicine, graduating in medicine and surgery from the Louisville Medical Institute of Louisville, Kentucky, in the class of 1846. He then returned to Murfreesboro, where he practiced his profession until 1853, when he removed to Trenton, Gibson county, Tennessee, there practicing until 1877. In that year he removed to Hot Springs, Garland county, Arkansas, continuing the practice of his profession there until his death, which occurred on the 26th of December, 1893. His body was taken by his family to Trenton, Tennessee, his old home. In the family plot in Trenton cemetery, beside the buried dead of his family, he was laid to rest with Masonic honors by the old Masonic lodge of which he had so long been a member and master. His entire surviving family and a large concourse of old friends were present. During the Civil war he was organizing surgeon at Trenton, having been appointed to that position by Governor Harris, and he was a member of a company at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, for service in the Mexican war but was not called. Dr. McCulloch was one of the most prominent physicians and surgeons of his day and his surgical practice extended throughout several counties. It was written of him after his death: "He possessed every virtue of a noble Christian man. He was a citizen without wrong, a Christian without hypocrisy, and a man without guile."

Dr. McCulloch was married on the 15th of November, 1846, to Lucy Virginia Burrus, a daughter of Lafayette and Eliza (Reedy) Burrus, the latter a sister of Colonel Charles Reedy, who was a congressman from Tennessee. Mrs. McCulloch died on the 11th of July, 1866. She was educated in the Ward Institute at Nashville, Tennessee, and was a woman of much culture and refinement. By her marriage to Dr. McCulloch she became the mother of eight children, including Philip Doddridge McCulloch of this review; R. H., who came to Arkansas in 1868, was a successful farmer and secretary of the National Farmers Union of the United States for some time, but is now deceased; Lida is the widow of J. T. Hogg of El Dorado; Mattie married William Hick of Trenton, Tennessee, and is deceased; Edgar A. is chief justice of the supreme court of Arkansas; Sallie, Lucy V. and Alma all died in infancy. The mother of these was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. The Doctor joined the Presbyterian church after her death, having been reared a Presbyterian. On the 15th of June, 1870, Dr. McCulloch married Lizzie Whitney Lewis, who died childless December 5, 1871. He was again married November 15, 1877, his third union being with Maggie Gilbert, who survives him. By his last wife he had two children, Gilbert and Ben. The latter is deceased. Gilbert is now living at Bauxite, Arkansas, and is connected with the American Bauxite Company, as manager of one of its departments. Dr. McCulloch was a whig previous to the Civil war and subsequently became a stanch supporter of the democratic party. He was an exemplary member of the Masonic craft and at the time he left Trenton was deputy grand master of the grand lodge of Tennessee. After locating in Hot Springs he became grand commander of the Arkansas Knights Templar Commandery. He was a past master, past high priest, past thrice illustrious master of the various local orders of Masons to which he belonged, and was a Scottish Rite Mason.

In the acquirement of his early education Philip Doddridge McCulloch attended private schools of Tennessee and later enrolled as a student at Andrew College. Subsequently he took up the study of law at Trenton and was admitted to the bar in August, 1872. He began the practice of his chosen profession in Trenton and remained there until the 26th of February, 1874, when he came to Marianna, Arkansas. For two years after locating here he was associated with H. N. Hutton and then practiced independently for some time. In 1884 he formed a partnership with E. M. McCulloch, his brother, and remained in that association until 1904, when his brother was elected to the supreme court of Arkansas. He retired from active practice in 1914. He owns extensive farm lands in Lee county and likewise is proprietor of several business houses in Marianna.

Mr. McCulloch has always been a stanch supporter of the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. In 1878 he was elected prosecuting attorney of the first judicial district of Arkansas and served in that capacity three terms, totaling six years. In 1884 his term of office expired and for several years he was chairman of the Lee county central committee. He was a member of the state democratic committee two years and was elected a democratic presidential elector for the first congressional district in 1888, and voted in the electoral college for Cleveland for president and Thurman for vice president. He was active in the campaign for President Cleveland, for Governor Eagle and was nominated and elected to congress in 1892. He was reelected to the office five successive terms and retired from public life in 1903.

On the 20th of December, 1876, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. McCulloch to Miss Belle Mills, a daughter of W. W. Mills, a native of Paris, Kentucky. To their union six children have been born: Mills, Heber and Mabel, deceased; Louise, the wife of J. W. Reed of Marianna; Doddridge; and Philip, deceased. Doddridge McCulloch, born in Marianna on the 15th of July, 1886, received his early education in the Rockville Academy at Rockville, Maryland, and was graduated with the B. A. degree from the University of Arkansas in 1907. Subsequently he took up the study of law, enrolling in the University of Virginia, and was graduated from that institution with the LL. B. degree in 1909. In that same year he was admitted to practice in all courts and he practiced in Marianna until 1911, when he accepted a position on the editorial staff of the West Publishing Company at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he remained for three years. He then returned to Marianna, resuming his law practice, and is now one of the prominent attorneys of Lee county and is active in public life. He was elected to the legislature in 1917, reelected in 1919 and again in 1921. He likewise served in a special session under Governor Brough.

The religious faith of Mr. McCulloch has always been that of the Presbyterian church and he is a generous contributor to its support. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being a trustee, and for years he was master of the blue lodge, high priest, eminent commander and grand orator of the grand lodge of Arkansas. He was likewise grand junior warden of the grand commandery of this state and grand principal sojourner of the grand chapter of the Royal Arch Masons. He is likewise affiliated with the Mystic Shrine. During his residence in Marianna Mr. McCulloch has wielded a great influence for good and everyone who knows him is his friend.

H. E. HIXSON.

H. E. Hixson, editor of the Stone County Record, has been active in newspaper circles since 1913. He is one of the substantial citizens of Mountain View and Stone county is proud to number him among her native sons. His birth occurred on the 7th of October, 1883, a son of Joseph and Mary (Nelson) Hixson, the former a native of Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, and the latter of Izard county, this state. The paternal grandfather, William Hixson, removed to Missouri from Canada and came to Arkansas after his son, Joseph, had located in Stone county. The maternal grandparents, J. G. B. and Caroline J. (Bishop) Nelson were natives of South Carolina and in later life came to Arkansas, locating at Bickle's Cave. He served in the Confederate army four years and participated in many of the important engagements of that conflict. He was captured at Chickamauga and imprisoned at Camp Douglas until the close of the war. Joseph Hixson went to Missouri with his parents when a small boy and upon the outbreak of the Civil war enlisted in the Confederate army, serving the whole period under Price. He was a gunner in the heavy artillery and was wounded when some ammunition exploded. At the close of the war he came to old Izard county and taught school in the rural districts for some time. Later he engaged in the mercantile business at Sylamore, his store being the only one of that kind in the community. After spending several years in the conduct of that business he removed to Melbourne and for a number of years was active as county surveyor. In 1870 he came to Mountain View, was county surveyor here for some time, later held the office of postmaster and owned extensive land interests. Surveying was his hobby and he was well known throughout the state in that connection. He was a great reader and learned surveying through his own efforts, becoming thoroughly familiar with every phase of it. Subsequently he engaged in newspaper work in association with W. H. Nelson and they established the Expositor. In everything with which he was connected Joseph Hixson achieved substantial success and upon his demise in 1903, at the age of sixty-eight years, Mountain View lost a pioneer and representative citizen. On the 1st of May, 1872, was celebrated the marriage of Joseph Hixson to Miss Mary Nelson and to their union six children were born, three of whom are living. Two died in infancy. The living children are: Maude, who is the wife of S. W. McClune of San Antonio, Texas; Sepha, the wife of Barney Chambers of Mountain View; and H. E., whose name introduces this review. Nellie was the wife of John Hayden of Newport, and her death occurred in August, 1920. Mrs. Hixson survives her husband. Throughout his life Joseph Hixson gave his stanch support to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and held membership in Mountain View blue lodge, No. 202, of the Masons. He was a charter member of Sylamore Lodge, No. 31, of the Odd Fellows. His religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he was superintendent of the Sunday school for many years.

In the acquirement of an education H. E. Hixson attended the common schools of Mountain View and in due time attended the local high school. After putting his textbooks aside he began teaching in the rural schools of the county and at Bigflat and Jamestown and for some time he was principal of the school at Lexington, Stone county. In all he engaged in educational work seven years. At the termination of that time he entered the mercantile business and became associated with H. J. Patterson, the firm operating under the name of the Stone County Mercantile Company. After two years in that partnership Mr. Hixson sold his interest and in 1913 bought the Ozark Times. Later he consolidated it with the Stone County Record, W. H. Nelson becoming his partner. Mr. Nelson was owner of the latter sheet. In 1914 Mr. Hixson bought his partner's interest and has since continued to edit and publish the Stone County Record on his own account. The policies of the paper are democratic and this paper has done much to further the interests of the party in the county. It is published weekly and has a circulation of some seven hundred. Mr. Hixson does job printing also. He is a man of varied business interests, being part owner in the Sands & Company Mercantile Store in Mountain View and also of the Gem of Ozark, a moving picture theatre.

On the 30th of April, 1911, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Hixson to Miss Lillian Foster, a native of Baxter county. To their union one child has been born: Inez, who is living at home. Mrs. Hixson is a woman of culture and refinement and she takes an active interest in the club and social affairs of this community. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hixson are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and take an active part in church work.

Politically Mr. Hixson gives his allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being secretary of the local lodge, and he is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, in which organization he is an escort. In the line of his newspaper work he holds membership in the National Press Association and the Arkansas Press Association. Mr. Hixson is one of Mountain View's most public-spirited and representative citizens and there is no movement for general development and improvement that seeks his aid in vain. The high and honorable principles that he employs in the conduct of his various business interests have won for him the confidence and respect of his fellowmen and Mountain View is indeed fortunate in having him for a citizen.

JAMES EDWARD JONES, M. D.

Dr. James Edward Jones, a representative of one of the pioneer families of Arkansas, is numbered among the leading physicians and surgeons of Grant county and since 1914 he has been engaged in practice at Sheridan, where his professional labors have been attended with a gratifying measure of success. He is a native of this state, his birth having occurred in Ouachita county on the 6th of November, 1883, and his parents were James W. and Mary M. (Dean) Jones, both natives of that county. The maternal and paternal grandfathers of Dr. Jones removed to Ouachita county with their parents when about ten years of age, the Dean family coming from Alabama and the Jones family from Mississippi, and they were numbered among the earliest settlers of that part of the state. The paternal grandfather was but thirty-eight years of age at the time of his death, which was caused by an accident and occurred prior to the outbreak of the Civil war. The maternal grandfather participated in that conflict as a member of the ordnance department of the Confederate army. James W. Jones, the father of James Edward Jones, became one of the leading agriculturists and most influential men of Ouachita county and was the owner of five hundred and sixty acres of valuable land. He died November 19, 1921. The mother's death occurred on the 6th of April of that year as the result of an accident. They became the parents of ten children, all of whom are living.

In the acquirement of an education James Edward Jones attended the public schools, the Southern Arkansas Normal School at Holly Springs, and in 1906 entered the medical department of the University of Nashville, Tennessee, where he attended two courses of lectures. Following this he became a student at the College of Physicians & Surgeons at Little Rock, Arkansas, in which he pursued a year's course, completing his professional training in the medical school of the university of Kentucky, from which he was graduated with the class of 1910. On the 4th of August of that year he came to Grant county, first locating at Erin as local surgeon for the Clio Lumber Company of Pine Bluff, in which capacity he served until the 1st of May, 1914, when he came to Sheridan, where he has remained, and in the intervening period of eight years he has built up a large practice.

On the 21st of July, 1921, Dr. Jones was united in marriage to Miss Clara M. Reid of Fredonia, Kentucky, and they have become the parents of three children: James Reid, Mary Kathryn and Dean. The Doctor is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and he has filled important offices along the line of his profession, serving as city and county health officer during the entire period of the World war, also as a member of the local draft board and as examining physician for Grant county of that board. He is a member of the Grant County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the Southern and American Medical Associations and of the first named organization he has been president and secretary, serving for two terms in each office. For four terms he has been a delegate to the State Medical Society and was recently elected to serve in that capacity at the next convention of that body, which is to be held at Little Rock, Arkansas, in May, 1922. He has also been councilor of the seventh district of the Arkansas Medical Society and is one of the foremost representatives of the medical profession in the state. He is also well known in fraternal circles, and is a Mason in high standing, belonging to Sheridan Lodge, No. 260, F. & A. M.; Sheridan Chapter, No. 160, R. A. M.; Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R., at Little Rock; and Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine of Pine Bluff, while he is also a member of Pine Bluff Lodge, No. 149, of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He has never been content with the second best but impelled by the spirit of progress he has steadily advanced until he has gained a position of distinction in the ranks of his profession and his pronounced ability and adherence to high standards have won for him the unqualified respect of his fellow practitioners and also of the general public.

EUGENE SLOAN.

Eugene Sloan, one of the foremost attorneys of Jonesboro, was born in Powhatan, Lawrence county, in September, 1892, a son of the Hon. Clay and Katherine (Matthews) Sloan, both of whom were born in Lawrence county. On the paternal side he is descended from Scotch-Irish ancestry, the progenitor of the family in this country having been Fergus Sloan, who came from County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1742. He settled near Statesville, North Carolina, and the present family is descended from that branch. Grandfather James F. Sloan came to Lawrence county, this state, in 1817, as a young man, his former residence having been in Missouri. His widow later married M. D. Baber, who was a colonel in the Confederate army. She is making her home at Walnut Ridge and is eighty years of age. The father of Katherine Matthews Sloan, Benjamin F. Matthews, started to California during the gold rush of '49, but was held up because of a flood and sickness in Lawrence county, this state and decided to locate there permanently. He immediately became a prominent figure in the public life of that county and for some time during the Civil war he held the office of sheriff of Lawrence county. Clay Sloan, who was born August 20, 1861, became the financial head of the family, upon the death of his father when he was twelve years of age, and for many years he supported his mother and two smaller brothers. His father had left the family no means of support except a little patch of land and a small country store. Clay Sloan attended school as best he could, his spare time having been spent in working for his neighbors. He was an ambitious lad and not afraid of work and he came to be one of Lawrence county's most influential citizens. At the age of twenty years he graduated from the Arkansas College at Batesville, having worked his way through that institution, and directly thereafter he entered political life. He served as clerk in the county, circuit and probate clerk's office for some four years, when he was elected county, circuit and probate clerk. On January 2, 1891, he was elected to the Arkansas state legislature and at the expiration of his service in the house he was elected to the senate. Becoming president of that body, he served as acting governor of the state for some time and after four years of service in the senate he was elected state auditor for four years. Subsequently he was candidate for congress but was defeated for nomination before the convention. Since that time he has devoted his attention to his farming and stock raising interests.

In the acquirement of his education Eugene Sloan attended the public schools of Powhatan and Black Rock and later entered Arkansas College at Batesville. He received his A. B. degree from that institution with the class of 1912 and subsequently entered the law department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, from which university he was graduated in 1915 with the LL. B. degree. Returning to Arkansas he took the law examination before the supreme court on July 5th and was admitted to the bar on that date. He then entered the law offices of Lamb, Caraway & Wheatly, where he practiced until the 1st of January, 1916, when he formed a partnership with Messrs. Lamb and Turney, the firm becoming Lamb, Turney & Sloan. That association was maintained for two years, when Mr. Turney went to St. Louis as assistant general counsel for the Cotton Belt Railroad and Judge C. D. Frierson resigned as chancellor of this district and took Mr. Turney's place in the firm. The firm continued active practice as Lamb, Frierson & Sloan for a short time, when Mr. Sloan withdrew to become general attorney of the Jonesboro, Lake City & Eastern Railroad and established an office of his own, looking after private practice as well. In April, 1918, he formed a partnership with his cousin, Horace Sloan, extended mention of whom is made elsewhere in this work, and that firm, known as Sloan & Sloan, was in existence until the 1st of January, 1922. Since that time Mr. Sloan has practiced independently. In 1918 he made the race for and was elected city attorney, was reelected in 1920 and is now serving his second term.

On the 27th of May, 1919, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Sloan to Miss Beatrice Lynch of Jonesboro and to their union two children have been born: Patricia Margaret and Clay Lynch.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Presbyterian church, to the support of which Mr. Sloan is a generous contributor. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Jonesboro and has served as exalted ruler of this lodge, holding that office in 1920 and 1921. He was likewise a delegate to the national convention held in Los Angeles in 1921. During his college days he became affiliated with Phi Sigma Kappa, a collegiate fraternity and Phi Delta Phi, a legal fraternity. Along the line of his profession Mr. Sloan is a member of the Arkansas State Bar Association. During the World war he was active in every movement for the furtherance of the government's interests and took a prominent part in all drives. He was chairman of the United War Works drive and served on the executive committee of most of the Liberty Loan drives. Owing to the loss of one arm, caused by the accidental discharge of a gun when he was ten years of age, Mr. Sloan was prevented from military service during the war. Mr. Sloan's devoted attention to the interests of his clients, his unquestionable integrity and his broad and comprehensive knowledge of civil law, have all combined in establishing him among the attorneys of recognized prestige in Craighead county and throughout the state.

THE CROSSETT LUMBER COMPANY.

It is a trite saying that there is always room at the top and yet comparatively few men seem to feel the stimulus of this statement, or they are lacking in the energy and determination which enables them to place their business in a point of leadership. Back of the Crossett Lumber Company are men who have made theirs the largest lumber manufacturing plant in Arkansas, with a daily output of three hundred thousand feet of pine lumber and forty thousand feet of oak lumber. The business was incorporated in May, 1899, and the following eighteen months were spent in the purchase of timber land and in other preparatory work, during which time one hundred thousand acres of standing timber were acquired. During all this time nothing was done toward the erection of mills, but in 1901 the mills were built and in October, 1902, the company began operation of a plant that is today not only unsurpassed but also unequalled in the state. The company owns two hundred and forty-three thousand acres of timber land in fee simple, one hundred and twenty-three thousand acres of which is uncut virgin timber with nine hundred million timber feet and with three hundred million recut timber feet additional. Within a few days or almost within a few hours after the initial work was begun for the construction of the mill there were five hundred men, living in tents, who were busily employed in furthering the work, but the task that confronted the Crossett Lumber Company was not only the building of mills in which to manufacture lumber—it meant the building of a town. It confronted a gigantic housing problem, in the necessity of furnishing adequate accommodations for the workmen and their families and the equally important problem of providing opportunities for the intellectual, social and moral progress of the community. These questions were studied from the standpoint of the practical business man, who possesses, moreover, a broad humanitarian spirit. The men composing the company recognized the fact that the wage earner must be contented, and throughout the period of city building the men who were to occupy the homes and to do the work in the mills voted on the plans that were put into execution. Today the people of Crossett are housed in approximately six hundred buildings of three, four and five rooms with rentals at four and a half, six, ten and fifteen dollars per month, respectively, the range in five-room houses allowing for certain variation in equipment and desirability as to location. A majority of the houses are of the double type, permitting congenial sociability between neighbors or the housing under one roof of larger families. The four and five-room houses are equipped with bathrooms and all three types have electric lights at a flat rate of twenty cents per light per month. The houses are set on standard lots of ninety by one hundred and sixty-five feet, fronting upon broad concrete sidewalks, of which there are in all three miles within the town limits. With such ample ground space surrounding each home there is a notable lack of the crowding often prevalent in industrial cities, while in addition opportunity is afforded for private gardening sufficient to provide each tenant with a considerable proportion of his table requirements. Today the town boasts a splendid Young Men's Christian Association housed in a large and well lighted building, a three-story structure containing the Masonic quarters, post office, restaurant, drug store, dental office, barber shop and Red Cross room, a city hall that appears more like an attractive residence than the home of politics, two excellent church buildings and school buildings which are indeed a credit to the city. The schools furnish education in domestic science and manual training in addition to the usual branches of public school study and there is a thoroughly equipped hospital in the city, with experienced physicians and surgeons. Public park and playgrounds afford the recreational features and an airdome permits of the display of moving pictures. That Crossett's inhabitants possess a love of beauty is manifest in the flowers, shrubs and trees which have been made to adorn the yards of the various homes.

The Crossett Mercantile Company, conducting a large general store, supplies everything demanded along these lines. There is a thoroughly equipped garage capable of handling repair work for any kind of a car and, in fact, there seems to be nothing that is of aid to clean, bright living and high standards that does not find expression in Crossett.

While every consideration has been shown to the man with a family the comfort of the unmarried men has not been overlooked. For them there is a choice of rooms with or without baths, at Rose Inn, an attractive, homelike hotel, appearing much like a well ordered club. Should the individual prefer less pretentious quarters the company boarding house is near by—a large building with well-kept rooms, hot and cold water and bathing facilities. All men on the payment of a nominal fee of fifty cents monthly have access to the Y. M. C. A., which affords congenial company, reading rooms supplied with newspapers, books and periodicals, billiards, bowling alleys and shower baths. The building is electric-lighted and steam-heated and is open day and night throughout the year. On Thursday of each week it is turned over to the women of Crossett to be used for social activities and many delightful entertainments are held there during the year. "One of the outstanding features and perhaps the most interesting of all is the complete and thoroughgoing manner in which personal comfort, health and well-being of the workers in the woods and logging camps are looked after. There are two of these camps located within twenty-five miles of the town on the company's logging railroad. As in town, there are regular types of houses of different sizes, renting at a dollar and a quarter per month per room, including electric current for lights, fan and iron. Certainly there is a novelty in considering the comfort of the housewife who 'at the front' of the sawmill operation, out in a big woods, may enjoy the conveniences of an electric iron for light laundering and add to her personal comfort with the aid of a fan at an exceedingly low rate. Both camps are under the eye of the health department, which insists on scrupulously clean yards, proper drainage and all necessary precautions to prevent sickness. Each home is surrounded by ample yard space affording plenty of garden room. Truck raising, together with a wide choice of edibles afforded by the camp commissary and with ice and fresh meat brought daily from town, make possible a well rounded market. Single men in camp are provided with individual houses of the one-room and sleeping porch type located conveniently close to the boarding house and their rental price is one dollar and a quarter per month including complete care-taking by a hired attendant, who looks after the entire group. The privacy which this type of home supplies, together with outdoor sleeping on a screened porch, is most unusual in camp life. These are just a few of the factors which make for enthusiasm in the work of the men attached to this department. Perhaps an additional reason, however, is the task system as applied by a superintendent who thoroughly understands his men, and which enables the employe to increase his daily wage from ten per cent to as high as forty per cent."

Another feature of this ideal community is the Bank of Crossett and from the beginning the company has encouraged thrift among its employes. "The investment company is owned and controlled by the employes, any of whom may take stock, paying for it at the rate of two per cent monthly with a minimum subscription of five hundred dollars. By this method, a small portion of each month's wages may be laid aside and allowed to accumulate as a cash reserve against a rainy day. Over one hundred thousand dollars of capital stock has already been so paid and it has always earned regular and liberal dividends. The opportunity to make financial progress is open to every one who will avail himself of it. A system of bonus payments to employes who have served the company for one year or longer is conducted under the name of the Loyalty Fund. Checks are issued at the close of each fiscal year. A one-year employe on the basis of two dollars and fifty cents per day at four per cent receives thirty dollars bonus. One-half per cent is added for each year of service up to ten years, when the bonus totals ten per cent of the year's pay, which on the basis of three hundred working days, is seventy-five dollars. Figured at three dollars and fifty cents per day, the amount would increase fifty per cent and so on up the scale."

As to the government of Crossett it is a typical American town, a regular incorporated municipality, electing its own mayor, council, school board and other civil officers.

Of course the big feature in Crossett is the lumber mills for the manufacture of both pine and hardwood lumber and it is needless to say that these are models of their kind, supplied with the latest improved machinery and every facility for manufacture as well as every facility for safeguarding the workmen, and the fact that in eighteen years of the entire period of the existence of the mills there has never occurred a strike is proof of the justice maintained by the management and the loyalty of the employes, who seem to feel a sense of personal responsibility as to the success of the business and who find keen pleasure in its continued growth. They know that at any time they can have audience with the president of the company and present to him any real or fancied grievance that may be theirs. Everything possible has been done to guard against accident in the mills and the slogan "safety first" is everywhere apparent. All foremen are trained in first aid and there is a splendidly equipped hospital with an excellent staff of nurses and physicians. This is indeed "an industrial community in which the mental and physical welfare of the wage earner is fully recognized as vitally essential to the prosperity of the business enterprise."

COLEN L. McKENZIE.

Colen L. McKenzie, now deceased, was for many years one of the successful farmers of Nevada county and a representative citizen of that section. He was born in Moore county, North Carolina, on the 9th of August, 1823, and was the eldest son of Kenneth and Elizabeth (Fry) McKenzie, both natives of North Carolina. The parents were married in that state and removed from there to Henderson county, Tennessee, where they resided until 1832, when they went to McNairy county, that state, where the father's demise occurred on the 9th of April, 1850, when he was eighty-two years of age. Soon after his death his widow removed to Houston county, Texas, and resided there with her youngest son from 1857 until her death, which occurred when she was eighty-nine years of age. Kenneth McKenzie was a soldier in the War of 1812 and participated in many of the most important battles of that conflict. Although the greater part of his life was devoted to agricultural pursuits, he was in early manhood a wagoner, plying his trade from Fayetteville, North Carolina, to various places throughout the state. He was quite old when he married. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and in politics he was a whig. His parents came from Scotland to America prior to the Revolutionary war, locating in North Carolina. To Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth McKenzie five children were born: Colen L., whose name initiates this review; Margaret Ann, who married Michael Bryant, of Miller county, this state; Eliza J.; Daniel, of Houston county, Texas; and Isabella P., who married George R. Brashears, of Houston county, Texas, all of whom are deceased.

Colen L. McKenzie received his education in the common schools of McNairy county, Tennessee. Being the eldest son he considered it his duty to care for his parents in their old age, and accordingly he remained with his father until his death. He was a wagoner from the time he was twelve years of age until he reached the age of eighteen, operating principally between Montezuma and Chickashaw Bluff, now Memphis, Tennessee. Two years later he commenced to learn the blacksmith's trade, at which he worked until 1869, at Montezuma, McNairy county, Tennessee. In 1859 he went to Red River county, Texas, and in 1861 removed to Ouachita county, Arkansas, remaining there until 1876, when he came to Nevada county, where he made his home until his demise in August, 1900. During his residence in Ouachita county he operated a water saw and grist mill and cotton gin, and was also interested in farming. After locating in Nevada county he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits, also operating a mill and cotton gin until a few years prior to his death, when his remaining years were devoted to farming and stock raising. He always kept a well equipped blacksmith and wood working shop on his farm. There being no public repair shop or professional mechanic in the community at this time, most of the work of this nature in the surrounding country was done at his shop. Mr. McKenzie owned two hundred and twenty acres of land in Ouachita county, and one hundred acres in his home farm, cultivating over one hundred acres. At the time of his death he was interested in real estate in Prescott and was the owner of several farms in Nevada county.

In 1851 Mr. McKenzie married Miss Margaret Jones, of Montezuma, Tennessee, who died in 1864 in Ouachita county, being at that time but thirty-five years of age, and in December, 1865, Mr. McKenzie remarried, Miss Mary L. Umstead becoming his wife. To the first union the following children were born: Kenneth, who died in infancy; Virginia B., whose death occurred at the age of twelve years; Joseph D., who died at the age of thirteen years; Mary E., who was nine years of age at the time of her demise; and Colen M., who died in infancy. The second Mrs. McKenzie was a native of Gibson county, Tennessee, and a daughter of Wyley Umstead, a prominent citizen of that locality. She became the mother of seven children: Ina A., the wife of Green Wylie, who died in April, 1911; Elizabeth, who died at the age of six years; William W., who died in January, 1897, while attending Hendrix College; Henry B., an attorney at law at Prescott, Arkansas; Aurora Isabella, now the wife of I. B. Graydon of Little Rock, Arkansas; and two who died in infancy. Mrs. McKenzie died December 30, 1914.

The religious faith of the family was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. McKenzie was a union labor man in politics. Fraternally he was a Mason and was conceded to be an exemplary member of the craft. In his passing Nevada county lost a representative and influential citizen and one who always had the interests of the community at heart. His friends throughout the county were legion.

ROBERT EMMETT WILEY.

In the legal profession mention should be made of Robert Emmet Wiley of Little Rock, whose high character, close and discriminating study and thoroughness and energy in the preparation of his cases have brought him an enviable reputation as a lawyer, so that he is today widely known in general practice, being also at this time assistant attorney for the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry and a native son of the state of Arkansas, having been born in De Witt, Arkansas county, March 5, 1872, a son of Alexander Carr and Delia Virginia (Quertermous) Wiley. His grandfather in the maternal line was David B. Quertermous, who raised a company in De Witt, Arkansas, for service in the Confederate army and was made captain, serving till the close of hostilities, and who was also a soldier of the Mexican war with the First Kentucky Infantry. His father, Alexander Carr Wiley, was a native of Illinois, but removed to Arkansas in 1866 and resided there until his death in 1911, being engaged principally in newspaper publication. When the country became involved in civil war he enlisted from his native state in the One Hundred and Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served with the Federal army in the rank of first lieutenant for three years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Delia Virginia Quertermous, was born in Paducah, Kentucky, March 7, 1851, of Virginia ancestry, and she came with her parents to De Witt, Arkansas, a year or two later. There her marriage to Alexander C. Wiley was celebrated on January 21, 1871.

Of this union Robert E. Wiley was the eldest in a family of five sons and one daughter. He attended the public schools of his native town and afterward the Stuttgart Normal College at Stuttgart, Arkansas county. His professional education, however, was received in Washington, D. C., where he took the regular law course at Columbian University (now George Washington University) and graduated in the class of 1896 with the degree of LL. B. The following year he took the postgraduate course and received the LL. M. degree from the same institution. Immediately after completing his law course he took up his abode in Little Rock in 1898 and has practiced here continuously since, his practice extending also to other places. There are few counties in the state where he has not appeared professionally. His course has been marked by steady progress which has brought him to a notable and enviable position at the bar. The confidence of his professional brethren is shown by his election to the presidency of the Little Rock Bar Association, in which position he served during 1920. He also belongs to the Arkansas State and the American Bar Associations. As a member of the state board of examiners for admission to the bar of the supreme court, he prepared and advocated the enactment of the present law governing admissions to the bar in Arkansas and became the first chairman of the central board of examiners under the new law. During the World war he gave loyal and energetic service in all the war work activities in his home city and county as well as in other parts of the state, being specially active in the government organization of Four-Minute men.

In Washington, D. C., on the 11th of October, 1899, Mr. Wiley was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Sands Stocks, a native of Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, and a descendant of Sir Edwin Sandys, an early treasurer of Jamestown colony in Virginia and the chief organizer of the first house of burgesses in the new colony. Mr. and Mrs. Wiley have one child, Geneva Bell.

They hold membership in the First Methodist Epicopal church, South, of Little Rock, where Mr. Wiley serves as a member of the official board. He is interested in all activities for social betterment and is a member of the board of directors of the Arkansas Children's Home Society of Little Rock, an institution for the care and training and placing of homeless and neglected children, to which cause he has given most earnest and helpful support. He is also a member of the board of directors of the Arkansas Girls Industrial School, a state institution for social betterment located in Saline county. In politics he is a democrat. Fraternally he is a Knight Templar and a Scottish Rite Mason, and also a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, and is past master of two blue lodges in Little Rock. He belongs to the Little Rock Country Club, the Spring Lake Swimming Club and the Old River Fishing Club, associations that indicate much concerning the nature of his recreation and diversion. Life, however, is to him purposeful and earnest and he is continually in harness for the advancement of his community and state, while in his law practice his client's cause receives most loyal and painstaking attention in line with the highest ethics and standards of his profession.

CHARLES THOMAS COLEMAN.

Charles Thomas Coleman, of the Little Rock bar, was born at the home of his maternal grandparents in Tuskegee, Alabama, April 3, 1870. His father, Charles Coleman, was born in Columbus, Georgia, in 1841. After obtaining a collegiate education, he studied medicine in Philadelphia and had just begun to practice in Columbus when the Civil war broke out. He joined the Columbus Guards and served during the war. He was wounded in the charge on Missionary Ridge at Chickamauga, in which engagement he lost an eye. After the war he studied law and practiced in Columbus. He married Anne Foster, of Tuskegee, in 1869. Three children were born of this union: William Franklin, Charles Thomas and Hughlett. On account of ill health, he moved to Orlando, Florida, in 1879, where he died in 1881.

Charles T. Coleman was educated in the public schools of Orlando and at Rollins College. He studied law at the University of Virginia, where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1890. He moved immediately to Little Rock for the purpose of practicing his profession. As he was only twenty and the statute required lawyers to be at least twenty-one years old, he had his disabilities removed by a decree of the chancery court and applied to the supreme court for license. The court wrote an opinion, in which it held that the statute prescribing the qualifications for admission to the bar, which provided that the applicant must be twenty-one years of age, must be construed as an exception to the general statute authorizing chancery courts to remove the disabilities of minors; but the court held up the decision until Mr. Coleman attained his majority, and, by courtesy, permitted him to practice during the interim.

On April 20, 1897, Mr. Coleman was married to Miss Emma Rose, the daughter of Judge U. M. and Margaret T. Rose, of Little Rock. Three children were born to them: Charles Rose, Margaret Gibbs and Anne. Emma Rose Coleman died March 2, 1907. On April 28, 1915, Mr. Coleman was married to Miss Cassie Newton, the daughter of Colonel Thomas W. and Amanda Reider Newton, of Little Rock.

For many years Mr. Coleman was a member of the firm of Murphy, Coleman & Lewis, composed of Colonel George W. Murphy, Charles T. Coleman and William M. Lewis. After the death of Colonel Murphy and Mr. Lewis, Mr. Coleman became a member of the firm of Coleman, Robinson & House, composed of Charles T. Coleman, Senator Joseph T. Robinson, J. W. House, Jr., and Walter G. Riddick.

Mr. Coleman is a member of the American Bar Association, the Arkansas State Bar Association and the Little Rock Bar Association. He was president of the Arkansas State Bar Association in 1913-1914, and president of the Little Rock Bar Association in 1919-1920. He has written a number of legal brochures, the most notable being the "Origin of Trial by Jury."

FRANK HORSFALL.

Frank Horsfall, a member of one of the old and prominent families of Arkansas, is superintendent of the State Agricultural School at Monticello, in which capacity he has served for the past twelve years, and he is numbered among the foremost educators of the southwest. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred two miles east of Hazen, in Prairie county, on the 19th of November, 1878, and his parents were Thomas M. and Margaret (Jackson) Horsfall, both natives of England. As a young man the father emigrated to the United States and the mother came to this country during her girlhood. They were married at Memphis, Tennessee, in 1871, and about a year later they came to Arkansas, settling on an undeveloped tract of land on the edge of the prairie. The father paid a dollar and a quarter per acre for the property, which comprised eighty acres, and devoted his energies to the task of clearing and developing his land, which he converted into a productive farm. As time passed and he prospered in his labors he purchased additional land until he acquired a large acreage, but during his later years he sold a large portion of his holdings. In Masonry he attained the honorary thirty-third degree and for many years was grand lecturer of the Grand Lodge of Masons, being one of the most prominent representatives of that order in the state. Both Mr. and Mrs. Horsfall were college bred and were numbered among the honored pioneers of their district. The paternal grandfather, the Hon. Thomas Horsfall, was a member of parliament and his son, Thomas M., was a first lieutenant in the Queen's Guards during the reign of Queen Victoria of England, coming to America after receiving his discharge. The maternal grandfather, Murray Jackson, was chief engineer for the emperor of Austria, who bestowed upon him a gold snuffbox as a mark of appreciation of his services in connection with special construction work on the Danube river. The demise of Thomas M. Horsfall occurred on the 9th of March, 1921, and his wife died on the 24th of August of the same year. They were members of the Episcopal church and their lives were guided by its teachings.

In the public schools of Hazen, Arkansas, Frank Horsfall acquired his early education, afterward serving a two years' apprenticeship at the Springfield (Mo.) nurseries, and he then entered the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1900, with the degree of B. S. in horticulture. He spent the season of 1899-1900 with the United States geological survey, making topographical maps of Washington, Benton, Madison, Ouachita and Calhoun counties, Arkansas, and in the fall of the latter year he became a student at the University of Missouri, pursuing a special course in horticulture under Professor J. C. Whitten. On the 1st of March, 1901, Professor Horsfall became assistant horticulturist at the Missouri State Fruit Experimental Station, with which he was connected until October 1, 1909, and while serving in that capacity he formed a fruit growers' association consisting of sixty-seven members. This proved of great benefit to the farmers, enabling them to secure much better prices for their fruit, as they had previously been receiving but fifteen cents a crate for peaches, which through the efforts of the organization brought an average of ninety-five cents, while apples were advanced from thirty cents to a dollar and a quarter per barrel. He also promoted dairy and canning interests and in 1905 inaugurated the cooperative shipping of live stock and his efforts were greatly appreciated by the farmers of Missouri. On the 1st of October, 1909, he became superintendent of the State Agricultural School at Helena, Oklahoma, resigning on June 30, 1910, and on the 1st of July he entered upon the duties of superintendent of the State Agricultural School of Arkansas at Monticello. He brought to his duties broad experience, untiring energy and boundless enthusiasm and has inspired the teachers and students at the institution with much of his own zeal and interest in the work. The principal object of Professor Horsfall has been to train pupils for practical farm work and as a result eighty-five per cent of the students and eighty-nine per cent of the graduates return to the farm with a zest for the work which they have never before experienced. Their creative spirit is aroused and they cease to regard their work as a laborious task but as an interesting problem, in the solution of which they are intensely interested, while the financial results from this attitude are extremely encouraging. During the twelve years of Professor Horsfall's connection with the school it has been running to its full capacity, the ratio of the sexes being about three boys to two girls. The latter are given a thorough course in domestic science, art and other branches of learning and leave the institution fully equipped to maintain an attractive home and to secure from life all that is most worth while. Professor Horsfall has brought the school up to a high standard and while a large percentage of students return to the farm, the course prepares them for entrance into any college in the country.

On the 9th of July, 1902, Professor Horsfall was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Vaux of Fayetteville, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of four children: Frank, Jr., a sophomore in the University of Arkansas; James Gordon, who is attending the State Agricultural School at Monticello, being now in his senior year; William Robert, who is a freshman in high school; and Margaret Edith, an eighth grade pupil.

Professor and Mrs. Horsfall are members of the Episcopal church, of which he is one of the wardens, and he is also serving as superintendent of the Sunday school. He has made a close study of the science of horticulture, of which he has gained an expert knowledge, being regarded as an authority in the field in which he is specializing. His intelligently directed efforts have been resultant and effective forces in promoting the welfare and prosperity of the farmers of this state and in raising agricultural standards of Arkansas. His life has ever been guided by high ideals and his contribution to the world's work is one of great value.

DAN McDONALD.

In the death of Dan McDonald, Arkansas lost one of her most representative citizens. A self-made man, his life was crowned with successful achievement and his demise in 1904 came as a severe shock to his family and many friends. A native of Tennessee, he was born near Obion on the 12th of August, 1851.

Dan McDonald received his education in the common schools of his native state and resided on the home farm with his parents until he became of age. He then engaged in the logging business in Tennessee with Mr. Reeves and they were active in that business for some time. He came to Arkansas about 1892 and, together with Mr. Reeves, bought a large tract of land, which he began to clear of the timber. He had two or three mills under operation. The association was continued for several years when the partnership was dissolved, Mr. McDonald retaining the mills and farm, which he operated in connection with a brother. At the time Mr. McDonald came here he had less than three hundred dollars and prior to his demise he was financially independent. He left a large estate, composed of valuable real estate and timber land, and for five years after his demise his widow operated the mills.

At Troy, Tennessee, in 1882, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. McDonald to Miss Emma Wilson, a native of Mississippi. She removed to Tennessee with her parents as a child, however, and was reared and educated in that state. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. McDonald two children were born: Mary, who is the wife of J. T. Eddins, a successful planter here, and the mother of two children: Mary, who is attending school; and Joseph, five years of age. David, the other child of Mr. and Mrs. McDonald died in 1912, at the age of tweny-three years. Mrs. McDonald is prominent in the club and social circles of Helena and is a consistent member of the Methodist church, in the interests of which she is an active worker.

Throughout his life Mr. McDonald was a stanch supporter of the democratic party and although he was not active in political affairs he was ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities, as well as the privileges, of citizenship and to that end he took an active part in the furtherance of every movement for the community's development and improvement. Fraternally he was identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. For many years he wielded a great influence for good in this community and was one of Helena's most progressive and representative citizens.

J. W. WILLIAMSON.

One of the representative citizens of Guion, Izard county, is J. W. Williamson, who was born in this county on the 14th of February, 1862, a son of P. P. and Catherine (Moser) Williamson, the former a native of Mississippi and the latter of North Carolina. The paternal grandmother Williamson was a native of Tennessee and lived to be ninety-six years of age. Her demise occurred at the home of her son, P. P. Williamson. Samuel Moser, the maternal grandfather, was a native of South Carolina and engaged in farming there for some time. In the early '40s he came to Independence, this state, and was one of the pioneers of this section of the country. He devoted his life to farming and achieved more than substantial success in that connection. The nearest trading point to the homestead was Jacksonport and supplies were transported by oxen, by which method Grandfather Moser came to this state. He was of German nationality and his demise occurred when he was ninety years of age. He was one of the highly respected and beloved citizens of the community in which he resided. P. P. Williamson and his wife came to Independence county in 1849. They brought with them, in addition to their household goods, two saddle horses and a negro servant. Mr. Williamson purchased land in the county and to him fell the great task of clearing it and putting it into cultivation. He traded in land and slaves on an extensive scale and upon the outbreak of the Civil war went to Texas, taking with him the slaves he then owned. He made the trip to Texas on horseback at five different times and at the close of the war, being deprived of his slaves he was financially crippled. He then started farming in Independence county and traded land and stock. He was associated with W. E. Maxfield in the mercantile business at Batesville, the firm being known as W. E. Maxfield & Company, and he achieved substantial success in that connection. Subsequently, however, he came to Izard county and engaged in farming and stock raising here until his demise in 1906, in his eighty-sixth year. His wife died in 1902, at the age of eighty-one years. To their union four children were born: Thomas J., a prominent merchant and farmer of Texas; Kitty, who is the wife of W. P. Dobson, a well known physician of Cushman; Oma, who is deceased and was the wife of A. C. Dixon of this county; and J. W., whose names initiates this review. The religious faith of the mother was that of the Presbyterian church and politically the father gave his stanch support to the democratic party.

In the acquirement of his education J. W. Williamson attended a subscription school near the home farm. The schoolhouse was made of logs, had split logs for benches, a dirt floor and no windows. The distance to the school was two or three miles and Mr. Williamson walked it for three months out of the year. He remained with his parents on the farm until he was of age, at which time he started farming on his own account on his father's farm on the White river near Guion. He has since engaged in general farming and stock raising and for two years specialized in breeding Poland China hogs. He is well known throughout the county as a representative and progressive farmer and a business man of keen discrimination. He is third vice president of the Gray Grocery Company of Batesville, a director of the First National Bank there, has an interest in the Harrison Grocery at Harrison, is director of the Monett Wholesale Grocery Company at Monett, Missouri, and has an interest in the Kensett Grocery at Kensett, this state. On the 12th of December, 1911, he organized the Izard County Bank, of which he was elected president and now holds this important position. The bank was organized with a capital of five thousand dollars and today has a capital of ten thousand dollars. The surplus averages fifteen hundred dollars, and deposits average twenty thousand. In every undertaking with which he has been connected Mr. Williamson has achieved more than gratifying success and Guion and Izard county are indeed proud to number him among their foremost citizens.

Mr. Williamson was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Laster, a native of Independence, and to their union eight children have been born: Emmett, who is engaged in farming in this county; Oma, who is the wife of E. L. Collier, cashier of the Izard County Bank; Daisy, the wife of Walter McKinney, a successful hardware merchant in Phillips county; Ida, the wife of J. M. Cotten, who is a traveling salesman, with headquarters in Memphis, Tennessee; Ray, manager of the Golden Rule Store at Guion and one of the community's most promising young men; Collie, who is attending Arkansas College at Batesville; Mary, who is likewise attending Arkansas College; and one who died in infancy.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. Williamson has served the local church as deacon for many years. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and although he does not take an active interest in political affairs, he is ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities of citizenship and is a dominant figure in the furtherance of any movement he deems essential to the public welfare.

J. NICK THOMAS.

J. Nick Thomas, president of the Thomas Land Company of Blytheville and one of this community's live wire citizens, was born in New Providence, Tennessee, on the 22d of December, 1872, a son of Dr. R. SAMUEL BAKER FULLERTON.

Among the leading lumbermen in Arkansas is Samuel Baker Fullerton, who is secretary of the Bradley Lumber Company of Arkansas at Warren. This company is one of the largest sawmill plants in the state, employing four hundred men, with an operative office and sales force not excelled for efficiency by any lumber organization in Arkansas. Mr. Fullerton was born in Atchison, Kansas, on the 14th of February, 1889, a son of Samuel H. and Lucy (Cook) Fullerton, extended mention of whom is made in the sketch of Robert W. Fullerton appearing on another page of this work.

In the acquirement of an education Samuel Baker Fullerton attended the Smith Academy of St. Louis and Culver Military Academy, this being supplemented with training under private tutors and in private schools in various parts of the country. After completing his studies his father took him in hand and proceeded to make a practical lumberman of him. He was sent to the Louisiana plant, at Fullerton, that state, and there he rolled up his sleeves and went to work, for his experience was not acquired by observation but by practical application to the task at hand. Mr. Fullerton worked in the woods, in the mill, in the office and in every department necessary to the manufacture of the finished lumber and he was identified with his father's extensive lumber operations in Louisiana and Texas and on the Pacific coast until 1916, in which year he, together with his brother, Robert W., bought the Bradley Lumber Company of Warren from a Missouri holding company and reorganized it as the Bradley Lumber Company of Arkansas, Samuel Baker becoming secretary of the concern. In the intervening years the Fullerton brothers have done credit to their able preceptor, Samuel H. Fullerton, their father, and have placed their product on a high plane, establishing a market demand for their lumber greater than the mill's capacity to turn out. Previous to their taking over of the plant the Bradley Lumber Company was operated solely as a soft pine plant, but now, having acquired extensive hardwood holdings, the plant is manufacturing both soft and hardwood lumber and for the past two or three years the company has specialized in oak flooring, in which it has been signally successful. One of the distinguishing features of its progressive business methods is in the mercantile end of the lumber company. It has built and equipped one of the finest, if not the finest, store buildings to be found anywhere in the state, outside of the larger cities. Its up-to-date fixtures, cash system and without exception the finest appointed meat market in the state, make the Bradley Commissary one of the show places of Warren.

On the 20th of August, 1921, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Fullerton to Miss Mary Styron of Monticello. She is one of the well known young matrons of this community and takes an active part in all club and social affairs. Although the greater part of Mr. Fullerton's time is devoted to the business matters under his control he is never too busy to give his aid to the furtherance of any movement for the development and improvement of the community and he is readily conceded to be one of the public-spirited and representative citizens of Warren.

He has also been closely identified with the lawmaking body of the state and in these various connections has contributed in large measure to the task of upholding the legal status of the commonwealth.

Judge Kerwin was born in Witherspoon, Arkansas, in 1875 and is a son of Daniel and Ellen (Hollister) Kerwin. His father was born in County Wexford, Ireland, in which section of the Emerald Isle the Danes settled when they invaded that country, calling the place Weisford. It was for many centuries the seat of culture in Ireland, and all historians speak of the inhabitants there as a charming and cultured people. From the earliest time it has had a cosmopolitan population, some of Danish extraction, others Norman, many of English descent and with a decided French strain, as indicated by the names of Devereaux, Molyneaux, LaFortune, Delaplaine and others. The Kerwins are of an ancient family of that locality and many of the family are found there today.

Daniel Kerwin, however, resolved to try his fortune in the new world and, crossing the Atlantic, made his way to Memphis, Tennessee, while later he came to Arkansas, settling near Witherspoon. In 1881 he removed to Pine Bluff, where he resided until his death. His wife was born in Napoleon, Arkansas, and they became the parents of three sons and a daughter: Daniel; John; Anna May, the wife of George F. Hill; and Edwin J. All are living except Daniel who died some years ago.

In the schools of Pine Bluff, the Annunciation Academy and Dr. Junius Jordan's Academy, Edwin J. Kerwin pursued his early education. Later he became a student in the Christian Brothers College at St. Louis, which he attended for two years, and then, returning to Pine Bluff, he became stenographer in the law offices of J. M. and J. G. Taylor, where during spare time he read law. He was admitted to the practice of the law in 1904, since which time he has continuously engaged in practice save for those periods demanded by official service. He has worked his way steadily upward in his chosen profession, displaying the greatest thoroughness in the preparation of his cases, while his presentation of a cause is always clear, cogent and logical. In the latter part of 1902 he aspired to represent his county in the general assembly of Arkansas and was elected, making for himself an enviable record. He enjoyed the reputation at that time of being an able debater and one of the best orators in his native state, which latter reputation he still enjoys. He was responsible for the defeat of the movement to repeal the railroad commission bill, and for his services in this regard, although his first term and one of the youngest men in the general assembly, he was handsomely remembered by those whom he served, and as a testimonial of appreciation he was presented a gold headed cane and gold headed umbrella, properly inscribed, by the business men of the city of Little Rock and a handsome engraved gold watch by his own constituency—the business men of Pine Bluff. He was also the author of a bill regulating child labor and the author of a bill to compel a twice a month pay day to employes. He deeply and thoughtfully studied every vital question which came up for consideration in the legislature, and his analytical mind was of great value in this connection, enabling him to delve to the root of any matter and to readily recognize every point pertaining thereto. In 1903 he was elected county and probate judge of Jefferson county and at that time was the youngest judge in the state. In 1909 he was appointed by Governor George W. Donaghey to fill out the unexpired term of Mr. Tucker of Jefferson. In 1911 he was again elected to the office. In the session of 1909 he led the fight on the floor of the house for the completion of the new state capitol. In the session of 1911 he was the first temporary speaker in the new state capitol, which was January 7, 1911. At the last meeting of the representatives and senators in the old state house in Little Rock one question was determined by them in joint session, whether the thirty-eighth general assembly should meet in the old state house or the new. It was decided for the latter and Judge Kerwin was chosen as chairman for this last historical meeting. The first bill introduced in the new state capitol, in the house chamber, was H. B. No. 1, making October 12, Columbus Day, a legal holiday, and it was Judge Kerwin who drew the same up and introduced it. He has long been prominent in politics and has served as chairman of the democratic county committee and the county conventions of his party and was also a member of the state democratic central committee. Since his retirement from office he has concentrated his energies upon his professional duties and now has a large and distinctively representative clientage.

In 1904 Judge Kerwin was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Ruth Kirby, a daughter of M. R. and Anna (Larkin) Kirby of Quincy, Illinois. To them have been born five children: Margaret Ellen, Mary Virginia, Anna Isabelle, Esther Marian and Helen Eleanor.

Judge Kerwin is a member of many fraternal organizations but devotes the greater part of his time to the Knights of Columbus. He was the first state deputy elected in Arkansas in 1909 and served two terms. He was returned to this responsible position by the order's membership again in 1919 and served two years. At the present time he is the acting past state deputy of the order and master of the fourth degree of the state and will serve until 1924. He organized the Pine Bluff council in 1906 and was the first grand knight elected.

During the World war Judge Kerwin served as special agent of the department of justice and was also government appeal agent for the exemption board of Jefferson county. He was likewise the direct representative of the adjutant general's office of the war department on matters pertaining to registrants. He acted as chairman of the Four-Minute men during the war and was one of the state speakers for the five Liberty Loans and also speaker for the Red Cross in all drives made by them. He also acted in similar capacity in the drives for sale of War Savings Stamps. During the third and fifth Liberty Loans Judge Kerwin had charge of two trains for the government on speaking tours of one week each throughout southeastern Arkansas. He was likewise chairman of the publicity committee of the county Council of Defense and labored unceasingly to promote federal interests during this momentous period. He has long figured prominently in public connections, and he accompanied Governor Donaghey and Hon. W. J. Bryan throughout Arkansas in the speaking campaign of 1910, favoring the adoption of the initiative and referendum to the constitution of Arkansas. He has a marked influence over public thought and opinion, and this is all the more powerful from the fact that it is well known he is most loyal to his convictions and to any cause which he espouses. No one doubts the integrity of his position, no matter how much they may differ from him in belief, and there are few men who so signally marshal their personal powers to such effective end as he. His gift of oratory, his analytical mind, his keen perception and his cogent reasoning have all been brought to bear in his presentation of vital questions before the public, and today he is accounted one of the most respected influential and honored residents of the state.

JAMES WALTER HILL.

For the past thirteen years James Walter Hill has been general manager of Lee Wilson & Company's store at Armorel and he is conceded to be one of the most practical and progressive business men in this section of the state. He was born in Huntington, Tennessee, on the 31st of March, 1884, a son of John C. and Mary A. (Baber) Hill, extended mention of whom is made in the sketch of A. B. Hill, appearing elsewhere in this work.

James Walter Hill attended the public schools of his birthplace and in due time became a student at the Southern Normal University. Completing his studies there in 1903, he came to Arkansas and entered the employ of Lee Wilson as a clerk in his store at Marie, this county. Two years later he went to Memphis, Tennessee, and took a course in the Nelson Business College, subsequently returning to his employment with Lee Wilson & Company. He was actively identified with the Marie store until 1908, at which time he came to Armorel as manager of the business at this point. For some thirteen years he has been active in the capacity of general manager and no man is more thoroughly familiar with every phase of the business than he. He is devoted to his work and under his able management the enterprise has grown to immense proportions. The high and honorable principles which he employs in its conduct have won for him the confidence and respect of his fellowmen and he is readily conceded a place among the foremost business men in Mississippi county.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Hill has given his political endorsement to the republican party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church and fraternally he is identified with Blytheville Lodge, No. 1211, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

AARON P. PATTON.

Aaron P. Patton, one of the leading members of the Jonesboro bar, was born in Van Buren county, this state, on the 11th of July, 1885, a son of John and Corinne (Couch) Patton, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Georgia. Their marriage was celebrated in this state, both having come here as children with their parents. John Patton, deceased, was one of the well known farmers of Van Buren county. His widow is still living on the old farm. The father was a dominant figure in the upbuilding of this state and at his demise Arkansas lost one of her pioneer and progressive citizens.

Aaron P. Patton received his early education in the district schools of his native county and later enrolled in the University of Arkansas, from which institution he was graduated with the B. A. degree in 1910. Following his graduation he was principal of the Magnolia high school one year and in 1911 he took up the study of law, entering the law department of the State University at Little Rock. He received his LL. B. degree from that institution in 1912, was soon thereafter admitted to the bar, and subsequently formed a partnership with J. F. Koone, under the style of Koone & Patton. The firm began practice in Clinton, this state, and built up an extensive clientage. In 1914, however, the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Koone being elected prosecuting attorney and Mr. Patton came to Jonesboro. Since coming here he has had various professional associates but since May, 1920, has practiced independently. In addition to his extensive private practice he is attorney for the Wumberley Wholesale Grocery Company and other large concerns.

On the 22d of June, 1920, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Patton to Miss Marguerite Burton of Jonesboro. She is well known in this community and is prominent in the club and social affairs of Jonesboro. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, of which Mr. Patton is secretary of the board of stewards. Fraternally he is identified with Jonesboro Lodge, No. 498, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and along strictly professional lines he is a member of the American Bar Association and the Arkansas State Bar Association. Politically Mr. Patton gives his allegiance to the democratic party.

MINOR GREGORY.

In a history of the substantial development and progress of Woodruff county it is imperative that mention be made of Minor Gregory, who for a long period was one of its most active and influential residents, controlling extensive business interests, and his labors contributing not only to individual success but to the general prosperity as well.

A native of Woodruff county, he was born on the 28th of August, 1851, and his life was one of great activity and usefulness during the sixty-five years that elapsed ere he was called to his final rest on the 16th of March, 1916. He was a son of Nathan and Mary (Bland) Gregory, the former a native of Georgia and one of the early settlers of Tennessee, whence he came to Woodruff county, Arkansas, prior to the Civil war. He was exempt from military service on account of the condition of his eyes. He engaged extensively in farming, having large landed interests in Woodruff county, and he died at the age of seventy-three years. His wife, a native of Virginia, died at the age of forty-five years. Their family numbered four children, who reached maturity: William, Sarah Jane, Minor and Francis, all now deceased.

Minor Gregory obtained his early education in the public schools, and following the death of his mother, which occurred when he was nineteen years of age, his father sent him to the Virginia Military Institute, where he continued his studies for four years, returning to Woodruff county when twenty-three years of age. Here he soon became a prominent factor in the business development and progress of the community, devoting his attention at different times to farming, banking, merchandising and railroad interests. At an early day he became active in mercantile circles in connection with E. G. Thompson, their business being carried on under the name of the Thompson & Gregory Company. Later he was a member of the E. H. Conner Company and one of the large stockholders in the business. He was president of the Woodruff County Bank and held much of its stock at the time of his death, and he was also the president of the Augusta Railroad Company. Whatever he undertook he carried forward to successful completion. He overcame obstacles and difficulties in his path by determined effort and these seemed to serve but as an impetus for renewed activity on his part. From time to time he made judicious investments in land and was the owner of a large amount of cultivated farm property in Woodruff county. Throughout his entire life he seemed to readily recognize the opportunities and possibilities of any business situation and he therefore most wisely and carefully made his investments and so managed his interests as to win a most gratifying measure of success.

In the year 1885 Mr. Gregory was united in marriage to Miss Helen Montague, a native of Gloucester county, Virginia, and a daughter of Charles W. and Mary Indiana (Baytop) Montague, who were also natives of Gloucester county. They were married in the Old Dominion and in 1870 removed to Augusta, Arkansas. The father was a lawyer by profession and was nearly fifty years of age when he came to Arkansas, after which he largely lived a retired life, putting aside professional cares because of the condition of his health. However, he taught in the public schools of Augusta for several years and both he and his wife remained residents of Woodruff county until called to their final home. The death of Mr. Montague occurred when he was seventy-three years of age and his wife reached the advanced age of eighty-six years ere her demise. In their family were three children: Charles C., a farmer, living near Gregory, Arkansas; Mrs. Gregory; and Mrs. J. B. Kittrell, who died leaving a family of six children.

The town of Gregory was named in honor of Minor Gregory—a well merited recognition of his ability, his progressiveness and his public spirit. Politically he was always an earnest democrat and fraternally he was a Mason, attaining the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite at Little Rock, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he crossed the sands of the desert. He exemplified in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft, which recognizes the brotherhood of mankind and the obligations thereby imposed. His course at all times measured up to high standards of manhood and citizenship and the sterling worth of his character was recognized by all with whom he came in contact. To Minor Gregory and his wife was born one son, William Nathan, a native of Woodruff county, who took up the various business interests of his father after the latter's demise. He is a director of the Woodruff County Bank and is identified as well with the E. H. Conner Mercantile Company and the Augusta Railroad Company. Fraternally he is connected with the Masonic order, in which he has attained high rank, belonging to the Mystic Shrine at Little Rock. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, while his religious faith is indicated in his membership in the Baptist church of Augusta.

TOM M. MEHAFFY.

Tom M. Mehaffy is one of the foremost lawyers of the state. Of few, indeed, can it be said, more truly that he is a self-made man. In his youth Colonel Mehaffy enjoyed but scant educational advantages, but possessing a naturally gifted mind, coupled with extraordinary energy, he has, by dint of his own force of will, risen to eminence, ranking as one of the best informed and most successful lawyers at the Arkansas bar. He is a man of simple tastes and of the widest, most democratic sypmathies. He is an enthusiastic champion of the rights of the masses and of the soundness of the people's wisdom to manage prudently and justly their own affairs. For more than a quarter of a century he has resided in Little Rock, continuously practicing his profession and at all times holding to the highest professional ethics and standards.

Mr. Mehaffy comes to this state from Mississippi, his birth having occurred in Ripley, Tippah county, October 3, 1859, his parents being Thomas L. and Ruth B. (Bradley) Mehaffy, both of whom are dead. The father was born at Stone Mountain, Dekalb county, Georgia, and was a mechanic. His political endorsement was given to the democratic party and at the outbreak of the Civil war he joined the Confederate army as a private, serving until his death in 1863. The father died during the early boyhood of the son, who, with his widowed mother, came to Arkansas in 1868, when a lad of but nine years, the family home being established in Saline county. The boy there continued his education, which had been begun in the public schools of his native state, and later he devoted eight years of his life to teaching in Saline county, imparting clearly and readily to others the knowledge that he had acquired. He regarded this, however, merely as an initial step to other professional labor, for it was his desire to become a member of the bar and he devoted the hours that are usually termed leisure to the reading of law until he had so thoroughly mastered the principles of jurisprudence as to win admission to the bar in 1888.

Mr. Mehaffy located for the practice of his profession in Benton, Arkansas, and there remained until his removal to Little Rock in 1895. While advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, no dreary novitiate awaited him. He made steady progress, his practice growing in volume and importance until today he stands among the representative members of the bar in Arkansas. With his removal to Little Rock he formed a partnership with George W. Murphy and for several years this connection was maintained, during which time the firm enjoyed an extensive practice, representing many large interests, especially in the field of corporation law. In 1905 Mr. Mehaffy entered into partnership with H. M. Armistead and later the firm of Mehaffy, Williams & Armistead was established. Still later the firm of Mehaffy, Williams, Cockrill & Armistead was established, which continued until 1909, when the firm of Mehaffy, Williams & Mehaffy was organized. Mr. Williams died in 1910 and then C. C. Reid joined the firm, its name becoming Mehaffy, Reid & Mehaffy and later Judge W. R. Dunham moved to Little Rock and became a member of the firm, the name then being Mehaffy, Reid, Dunham & Mehaffy. In 1919 Mr. Reid retired, since which time the firm has been Mehaffy, Dunham & Mehaffy, comprised of Tom M. Mehaffy, his two sons and Judge Dunham. The court records bear testimony to the importance of their work in both the state and Federal courts. Well versed in the learning of his profession and with a deep knowledge of human nature and the springs of human conduct, with great shrewdness and sagacity and extraordinary tact, Mr. Mehaffy is in the courts an advocate of great power and influence. Judges and juries always listen to him with attention and deep interest.

In June, 1884, Mr. Mehaffy was united in marriage to Miss Anna A. Poe, who was born and reared in Saline county, a daughter of James M. Poe, now deceased, who was a leading planter and prominent citizen of that section of the state. During the period of the Civil war he fought as a Confederate soldier, with an Arkansas regiment. Mrs. Mehaffy died in Little Rock, May 17, 1917, her death deeply regretted by many friends as well as her immediate family. By her marriage she had become the mother of six children: James W., who was married in 1911; Charles W., who was married in 1917; Carl; Helen; Patrick; and Lucille.

Mr. Mehaffy has always been a stanch supporter of democratic principles and has done not a little to shape the political history of the state. In 1889 he was elected to represent Saline county in the general assembly and proved an active and valuable working member of the house, his record in that connection leading to his nomination and subsequent election to the state senate from the ninth senatorial district in 1892. During his term of four years he did important committee work and was made chairman of the judiciary committee. The analytical tendency of the lawyer was manifest in his work in the general assembly, for he delved to the root of all the vital questions which came up for consideration and ever sought the benefit and upbuilding of the commonwealth, rather than the advantages of the few. Moreover, he takes a deep interest in everything relating to the progress and upbuilding of the city in which he makes his home. He acted as president of the constitutional convention of 1917 in a most acceptable manner and during the period of the World war served as chairman of one of the questionnaire boards. He has served for several years as a member of the board of education of Little Rock and his cooperation has been an effective force in bringing success to many important public interests. He is a consistent member of the Winfield Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is prominent in Masonry, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. Thomas M. Mehaffy stands as one of the forceful and resourceful men of the state, ready at all times to meet any emergency and make the best of his opportunities, not only along the line of his profession but for public benefit as well. Thus in many ways he has left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the history of the state.

CLYDE ROBINSON.

Prominently known in agricultural, financial and business circles is Clyde Robinson of Blytheville. He was born in Blytheville on the 4th of September, 1876, a son of Thomas Holston and Mary Allen (Wagner) Robinson, the former a native of Winchester and the latter of Mississippi county.

The Wagner family originally lived in Tennessee, but came to this state shortly prior to the Civil war. Thomas H. Robinson served throughout the Civil war under Captain Charles Bowen, one of the outstanding figures in the public life of the state at that time and who was sheriff of Mississippi county when the only means of transportation to Little Rock was by horseback. Directly following the close of the war Thomas Holston Robinson came to Blytheville, having been one of this town's pioneer merchants. For many years he was prominently identified with the business life of the community and was active in the conduct of his mercantile establishment until his demise in 1889. He was one of the five men who organized the first Masonic lodge here and was an exemplary member of the craft.

Clyde Robinson received his education in the local schools and after completing his preliminary education enrolled in the Southern Normal University at Huntingdon, Tennessee. Leaving school at the age of twenty years he returned to Pecan Point and accepted a clerkship with R. Semmes & Company, general merchants. After a short time in that connection he determined to go into business on his own account and established a mercantile business. Subsequently he located in Barfield and was active in the conduct of a store there until 1906. He was elected circuit clerk and moved to Osceola in 1908. When the rapid upbuilding and development of Blytheville attracted his attention he realized the opportunities offered in a growing town. He then came here and in 1909, together with other prominent citizens, organized the Peoples Bank of Blytheville, of which institution he was made president. He was active in that capacity until the 10th of January, 1922, when he resigned. He is still a member of the board of directors of the bank, however. Mr. Robinson is president of the J. C. Cobb Undertaking Company, a growing concern, and is chief executive of the Clyde Robinson Cotton Company. They are heavy exporters of cotton, shipping direct to Liverpool, England, and they likewise have a heavy domestic trade. For the past fifteen years he has been engaged in farming on an extensive scale and has large interests in both Mississippi county, Arkansas, and Pemiscot county, Missouri.

On the 3d of August, 1903, Mr. Robinson was united in marriage to Miss Mary Phillips of Point Pleasant, Missouri. To their union three children have been born: Thomas Holston, Sam Phillips and Mary Elizabeth. Mrs. Robinson is prominent in all club and social affairs and is a member of the Catholic church.

Mr. Robinson has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. In 1912 he was appointed by Governor Donaghey to fill an unexpired term in the state legislature and at the expiration of that term he was regularly elected to the office, serving his second term. Fraternally he is identified with Blytheville Lodge, No. 1211, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; and the Modern Woodmen of America.

LEONIDAS KIRBY, M. D.

Dr. Leonidas Kirby is one of the leading and most prominent representatives of the medical fraternity in Harrison, Arkansas, where he has practiced his profession since October 1, 1871. His birth occurred in Greene county, Missouri, on the 1st of December, 1850, his parents being B. F. and Serena (Bender) Kirby, who were natives of Kentucky and Tennessee respectively. The maternal grandfather, Dr. Samuel Bender, was born in Maryland in 1795; was graduated in medicine in 1822 from Transylvania University of Kentucky and Washington University of Missouri in 1854; and was one of the most noted physicians and surgeons of southwestern Missouri. He died at Greenfield, Missouri, in 1868. The paternal grandfather, who was born in Warren county, Kentucky, in 1802, was a farmer who pulled teeth, bled people and rendered other free services in a medical way. He moved to Dade county, Missouri, in 1840.

B. F. Kirby, the father of Dr. Kirby of this review, was graduated from what is now Washington University of St. Louis, Missouri, in 1854. He engaged in general practice at Dadeville, Dade county, Missouri, to the time of his death, which occurred July 5, 1856. During the period of the Mexican war he served under General Kearney as a private, going first to California and thence to Mexico. His political allegiance was given to the whig party, while fraternally he was identified with the Good Templars at Dadeville, Missouri, which lodge he organized. To him and his wife were born two children: Loretta, the wife of J. O. Nicholson, a retired merchant, now of Van Buren, Arkansas; and Leonidas, of this review. Following the death of her first husband Mrs. Kirby became the wife of Allen Scott, a farmer of Jasper county, Missouri, by whom she had three children: Izora Scott, who won the degree of Ph. D. in Columbia University, New York, and is a teacher of Latin in the public schools of Brooklyn, New York; C. L., who was graduated from Drury College of Springfield, Missouri, with the degree of Master of Arts and is now superintendent and principal of the Berryville high school of Berryville, Arkansas; and Ben, who follows farming in Jasper county, Missouri. Mrs. Serena Scott was buried near Diamond, Missouri.

Leonidas Kirby obtained his education in the public schools of Dadeville and Greenfield, Missouri, and prepared for a professional career in the Washington University Medical School of St. Louis, Missouri, which institution conferred upon him the degree of M. D. in 1876. Prior to that time, however, he had read medicine under the direction of his maternal uncle, Dr. O. C. Bender, and had practiced in Harrison, Arkansas, prior to attending medical lectures. After his return from the medical school he was the only graduate practitioner in Boone county for a period of two years. He has been a general practitioner of medicine and surgery, manifesting marked skill that has brought wide demand for his services. He is a member of the Boone County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association and for one year served as president of both the county and state organizations.

On the 23d of November, 1873, at Harrison, Arkansas, Dr. Kirby was united in marriage to Miss Rhoda V. Crump, a native of Virginia and a daughter of Beverley Crump, a planter who was also born in that state and who came to Arkansas in 1858.

Dr. and Mrs. Kirby have six living children, as follows: Nora, the wife of Dr. E. L. Evans, a general medical practitioner of Springfield, Missouri; Franklin B., who is a graduate of Arkansas University, A. B. degree, also of the Washington University medical department of St. Louis, Missouri, and is now associated with his father in the practice of medicine; Leonidas, Jr.; L. B., who won the degree of Ph. G. from the St. Louis College of Pharmacy and is now proprietor of a drug store at Harrison, Arkansas; Dr. H. H., who is a graduate of Washington University of St. Louis, Missouri, and is a surgeon of St. Luke's Hospital of Little Rock, Arkansas; and Dr. A. C., A. B. of Arkansas University, who has also been engaged in medical practice in Little Rock, Arkansas, since completing his professional course by graduation from Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri. The last named served in the United States army for a year and a half, being stationed at Camp Jackson and holding the rank of first lieutenant.

In his political views Dr. Kirby is a republican, while his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Christian church. Fraternally he is well known as a York Rite Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine, has served as master of Boone Lodge, No. 314; as high priest of Harrison Chapter, No. 85; as eminent commander of St. Aldemar Commandery, No. 10; thrice imperial master of Haggai Council, No. 41; as deputy grand commander of the state; and grand master of F. & A. M., 1921 and 1922. In professional, fraternal and social circles his reputation is an enviable one, for his life has been actuated by high principles in every relation. His sons are representatives of the three generations of Kirbys and of four generations through the Bender family to engage in the practice of medicine and may be said to be "to the manner born," upholding the high professional standards of their forbears as well as maintaining their reputation for professional skill and ability.

ALLEN COURTLAND PRICHARD, M. D.

Hot Springs has been signally favored in the class of men who represent the medical profession here. The ability of her practitioners as well as the curative properties of the spring waters have drawn thousands of visitors to Hot Springs from all parts of the country. The profession is one in which only merit and ability can win and that Dr. Prichard has gained a most creditable position as a physician and surgeon is proof of his comprehensive knowledge of the science of medicine and his adaptability in applying its principles to the needs of suffering humanity. His life's story is an interesting one.

He was born in Wayne, West Virginia, December 12, 1882. He is a son of Senator B. J. Prichard, president of the Wayne County Bank and a prominent coal and oil operator. In West Virginia he spent the period of his boyhood and youth, supplementing his public school education by study in the Oakview Academy and in Marshall College of Huntington, West Virginia. Reviewing the broad field of business with its limitless opportunities along agricultural, industrial, commercial and professional lines he at length determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work and with this end in view entered the Eclectic Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1904 he became a student there and spent three years in completing his course. In 1913 he removed to Booneville, Arkansas, where he practiced for a time and afterward opened an office in Paris, Arkansas, where he remained until 1910, when he came to Hot Springs. Through the intervening years he has successfully practiced here, demonstrating his ability to cope with the intricate and involved problems that have to do with the restoration of health. He keeps in touch with the most advanced methods and scientific investigation of the profession, and his labors have been attended with splendid results.

Dr. Prichard entered the Coast Artillery and served as company clerk in the One Hundred and Twenty-second Company. He afterward organized the Ambulance Company, No. 1, of Hot Springs, and assisted in the organization of a company of the Third Arkansas from Hot Springs. He was mustered in as commander of an Ambulance Corps, known as Company No. 1, on the 5th of August, 1917. This unit was brigaded with the Thirty-ninth Division and sent to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana. Dr. Prichard served as adjutant and supply officer of the ambulance section, One Hundred and Fourteenth of the Sanitary Train, and he was also connected with the secret service. He sailed for France in August, 1918, and acted as surgeon for the Fourth District, Machine Gun Section, in France, having oversight over three battalions. In April, 1917, he had been commissioned a first lieutenant and on the 8th of August, 1917, he was commissioned a captain. In December, 1917, he was commissioned major and was ordered to report to the commander of the medical corps,

A. E. F., but was in a hospital at the time. He went overseas with the One Hundred and Forty-second Machine Gun Company of the Thirty-ninth Division and was commander of the Machine Gun Infirmary both in the United States and in France. He was the first doctor to enlist and go to France from Hot Springs. He received his discharge January 31, 1918, from the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs because of injuries sustained during the service. He then resumed his practice in this city, and the liberal professional support given him is an indication of his capability and high standing.

On the 2d of January, 1905, Dr. Prichard was married to Mrs. Violet E. Pruitt, of Washington, D. C., and their children are: Belvard, seven years of age; and Allen, who is in his second year.

Dr. Prichard is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and along professional lines is connected with the Eclectic State and National Societies. He has served on the Arkansas medical board, of which he was president in 1920, and his colleagues and contemporaries as well as the general public accord him high professional standing.

CHARLES T. BLACK, M. D.

One of the leading physicians and surgeons of Arkansas is Dr. Charles T. Black, who is now residing at Thornton. Both parents came to this state at an early age and Mrs. Black's demise occurred here in December, 1904. Mr. Black was for thirty years pine expert for the Stout Lumber Company of Thornton and he is now living retired here.

Charles T. Black received his early education in the public schools of Hampton, Calhoun county, and he later attended the Arkansas College at Batesville for three years. WILLIAM D. COLE.

William D. Cole, who is now serving as mayor of Conway, was born in Ripley, Mississippi, on the 5th of May, 1873, a son of William D. and Mollie (Hunt) Cole, both natives of that place. His paternal grandfather, W. R. Cole, engaged in the mercantile business in Ripley in 1840, when he came to Arkansas. He resided here until his demise in 1885, when he was eighty-four years of age. He devoted the greater part of his life to the mercantile business and achieved more than substantial success in that connection. Daniel Hunt, the maternal grandfather, was born in North Carolina but emigrated to Mississippi at an early age. He was an extensive planter and large slave owner. His demise occurred in Mississippi. William D. Cole, Sr., engaged with his father in the conduct of the mercantile establishment in Ripley, which was the outgrowth of the business established by the grandfather. Returning from service in the Civil war in 1865, he took over the business himself. The enterprise was conducted under the name of Cole & Company. He remained in Ripley, where he had a large and extensive trade, until 1880, in which year he came to Conway. He opened an establishment here, which he conducted under the same firm name, and remained in active business life until 1898, when he retired. His demise occurred in 1919, at the age of seventy-one. Mr. Cole was also interested in farm land in a small way and he bought some cotton. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cole six children were born: Sarah, the wife of B. L. Harton, cashier of the Bank of Conway; William D., whose name initiates this review; E. N., a mail clerk on the St. Louis Railroad; C. M., a salesman, residing in Phoenix, Arizona; R. T., now manager of Cole & Company in Conway; and Thomas, who died at the age of seventeen years. Mrs. Cole is still living, making her home in Conway. Mr. Cole was a veteran of the Civil war, having entered the service in 1863 as a member of the Seventh Regiment Mississippi Cavalry under General Forrest. He was captured two months prior to the close of the war and was imprisoned in Mobile until after hostilities ceased. After receiving his discharge he returned to Ripley, where he resumed his place in mercantile circles.

William D. Cole, whose name introduces this review, received his education in the public schools of Conway and upon putting his textbooks aside became a clerk in his father's store. In 1898 he took charge of the entire business and his close application to his business interests brought to Cole & Company a steadily increasing patronage. In 1917 he disposed of his interests in that concern and turned his attention to other affairs, being one of the organizers of the Faulkner Bank and Trust Company, in which he is now a stockholder and also a director.

In 1907 Mr. Cole was united in marriage to Miss Nell East, a native of Clark county, this state, and a daughter of W. B. East, active head of the First National Bank in Arkadelphia. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cole two children have been born: Nell, thirteen years of age; and Josephine, aged nine years. Since attaining his majority Mr. Cole has given his political allegiance to the democratic party. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. The paternal grandfather, John Pryor, was born in Illinois and in early life entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church. He came to Arkansas about 1875 and resided here until his demise. He was in active service with the Confederate army during the Civil war. John Parr, the maternal grandfather, was born in Arkansas and was one of the pioneers of Lawrence county. He was a farmer and planter and achieved more than gratifying success in life. Andrew J. Pryor came to Arkansas as a small boy with his parents. He received his education in the public schools of Illinois. Upon attaining manhood he engaged in general farming and stock raising and subsequently moved into Walnut Ridge, where for several years he was active in the conduct of a dray and express business. He was a man of varied interests and was for some time a heavy stockholder in the R. L. Muse Lumber Mill. His demise occurred in March, 1919, when he was in his fifty-second year, and in his passing Walnut Ridge lost a most representative and public-spirited citizen. His widow is still living. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pryor two children were born: Hanley H., who died in infancy; and Gertrude. The religious faith of Mr. Pryor was that of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally he was identified with the Columbian Woodmen. His political allegiance was always given to the democratic party and he was a firm believer in the principles of that party as factors in good government.

In the acquirement of her education Mrs. Webb attended the public schools of Walnut Ridge and in due time was graduated from the local high school. She then entered the business world and for two years worked as typesetter for D. A. Lindsey of the Times Despatch. Subsequently she went to Little Rock. She has become widely known in this connection throughout the county and state and has won an enviable position among the foremost journalists of Arkansas. The Tribune is conducted on independent lines, is published weekly and has a circulation of some twelve hundred and fifty, with every day witnessing a substantial increase. In addition to publishing the paper Mrs. Webb does all kinds of commercial printing and has built up a fine business along that line. She is a woman of innate business ability and keen discrimination, has succeeded where many women of less strength of character and determination would have failed, and she well merits the success she is enjoying.

On the 9th of October, 1910, was celebrated the marriage of Gertrude Pryor to Clyde S. Webb, a native of this state. He resided in Little Rock for some time and at the time of his demise was conducting an automobile business in Walnut Ridge. in the public life of the county and state and was a stanch supporter of the democratic party. His religious faith was that of the Baptist church. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Webb one child, Doris, was born.

Mrs. Webb is a woman of much culture and refinement and she is prominent in the club and social affairs of Hoxie. She holds membership in the local Chamber of Commerce and also in the Walnut Ridge Chamber of Commerce and there is no movement for the betterment of the community that seeks her aid in vain.

S. EVERLY SIMONSON.

One of Arkansas' adopted sons, who has contributed most to the development and improvement of Mississippi county and the state, is S. Everly Simonson, a resident of Luxora. He is well known in farming, mercantile and lumber circles and is one of this county's most substantial business men. He was born in Farmersville, Montgomery county, Illinois, on the 22d of October, 1871, a son of Michael and Elvira Virginia (Steidley) Simonson, the former a native of Norway and the latter of near Petersburg, Virginia. Michael Simonson came to the United States as a young man and located near Springfield, Illinois. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he put all personal interests aside and enlisted in Company D, Thirty-third Regiment, Illinois Infantry, with which he served three years. After the war he engaged in farming and stock raising in Montgomery county, Illinois, and became one of the most successful agriculturists of that county. He took an active part in every movement for the upbuilding of the county and state and well merited the place he achieved among the most influential men of his day. His demise occurred February 21, 1879, while the mother died October 21, 1898. Their religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church and for many years the father served that church as a steward.

In the acquirement of his early education S. Everly Simonson attended the district schools near the home farm and later became a student at the Bushnell Normal School in McDonough county. His father died when he was but seven years of age and at the age of seventeen years he took charge of the farming operations, on his own account. The responsibilities were heavy for so young a lad, but he was capable and ambitious and became very successful as a farmer. He resided on the home place until 1902, in which year he came to Arkansas. At various times during the two or three years previous to this move, he had made several trips to different sections of this state with a view to locating here eventually. Even as a school boy he had looked to Arkansas as a most desirable state in which to live. Therefore, in 1902, he came to this state, in company with Judge J. Otis Humphrey, a United States district judge of southern Illinois, residing in Springfield, and they bought three sections of land in a wild section of Mississippi county, the nearest farm being a distance of four miles. Wolves and catamounts were so plentiful in the vicinity of the homestead that it was a hard and dangerous task to guard the calves and other small animals. The cattle were also prey to the numerous bears and panthers in the timber. Within the first year Mr. Simonson and Judge Humphrey increased their land holdings to eight and one-half sections and a few years later doubled this amount. In the year 1911 they sold twelve sections of land to Frank O. Lowden, then a member of congress and later governor of Illinois, and subsequently Mr. Simonson bought for Governor Lowden three additional sections adjoining the original tract, making a tract some five miles long by three miles wide in Township 14, Range 10, near Luxora. This land is rapidly being improved and developed in an unusually attractive and systematic manner. In 1912 this tract was transferred to Mrs. Florence Pullman Lowden, wife of the ex-governor, Mr. J. D. Hightower being the resident manager. In 1909 Mr. Simonson purchased for Governor Lowden the old South Bend plantation on the Arkansas river, which was originally known as the Jordon plantation and later as the Taylor plantation, Dr. Taylor having married Mrs. Jordon, a widow. This famous plantation was still later sold to Smith & Wainwright and from this firm Mr. Simonson purchased it for Mr. Lowden. Later additional properties were bought, one the Clay plantation, which was formerly owned by Henry Clay, and today Mr. Lowden owns twenty-two thousand acres fronting twenty-two miles on the Arkansas river.

In 1919 Mr. Simonson purchased the interest of his partner, Judge Humphrey, and other lands adjoining or near by the original tract, and today he has holdings of some sixty-three hundred acres on which he has built several hundred houses and barns. About four thousand acres have been cleared and put under cultivation and many miles of drainage ditches run through the land. Many miles of good roads also run through the property, thereby increasing its value. Assisted by his brother, C. M. Simonson, Mr. Simonson has brought his land to a highly improved state and is conceded to be a pioneer in the modern development of this section of the state. He has been an aggressive builder and Mississippi county owes him a debt of gratitude. A few years after taking up his residence in this state, Mr. Simonson was selected by County Judge L. D. Roselle to organize the Grassy Lake and Tyronza river drainage district, No. 9, which at that time was the largest drainage district project under consideration in the United States. The work was finally accomplished after terrific opposition had been overcome and the drainage system, consisting of over three hundred miles of dredge canals, was completed at a cost of slightly over one million dollars, nearly one-half million dollars less than the engineer's estimation. Mr. Simonson was chairman of the board that supervised the work. The other members of the board were Wilson Burchfiel and W. B. Calhoun. The office of drainage investigations at Washington, D. C., sent, at different periods after the completion of the work, three of their drainage experts to check up on the work and see just what had been accomplished. All agreed that this was the best planned and the most economically constructed drainage district in the United States and it was selected as a model for all other drainage districts located in territories of similar topography. The Morgan Engineering Company of Memphis, Tennessee, was in charge. The success of this work proved so convincing that Mississippi county continued to drain her land and now has over one thousand miles of drainage ditches, with ample outlets in the Tyronza and the St. Francis rivers.

About this time Mr. Simonson realized that as drainage progressed a lower interest rate would be needed, for up to that time no lower interest than ten per cent had been known. Being a man of quick decision and action, he induced a large investment company of outside capital at six per cent to come into this district. Mississippi county has developed more rapidly in the last ten years than any other agricultural county in the United States. The census from 1910 to 1920 shows that Mississippi county furnished ten per cent of the increase in population of the entire state of Arkansas and in 1921 produced more than ten per cent of all the cotton in this state, at the same time yielding the largest corn and hay crops of any county in the state.

On the 20th of October, 1920, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Simonson to Miss Eddie Sue Rush of Ripley, Tennessee, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil E. Rush, old settlers of Lauderdale county, Tennessee. She is a woman of much culture and refinement and is a leader in the club and social circles of this community. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Simonson there was born, April 17, 1922, a son, christened S. Everly, Jr.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Simonson has given his political endorsement to the republican party and the principles for which it stands. He was a delegate to the National Republican convention held in Chicago in 1920 and was very active in promoting the interests of Governor Lowden at the convention. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Simonson has, however, been too busy to be much of a lodge man. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

JAMES S. POLLARD.

James S. Pollard, sheriff of Arkansas county, is doing much to maintain law and order through the prompt and fearless discharge of his duties. He is also a veteran of the World war and De Witt numbers him among her respected and representative residents. He was born in Manito, Illinois, in 1887 and is a son of William M. and Anna (Fleming) Pollard. The father, who was born in Mason county, Illinois, was a son of Hugh Pollard, who served as a colonel in the Federal army in the Civil war and afterward became a merchant of Manito. The mother was a daughter of Thomas Fleming, who resided near Waverly, Illinois. For some time the parents of James S. Pollard, resided in Manito, Illinois, and then removed to Arkansas county, Arkansas, settling on a farm near Gillett. There the father departed this life, after which the mother and her children removed to Stuttgart, where she still makes her home. In the family were the following named: C. Ray, who is a contractor at Omaha, Nebraska; Anna, the wife of Will Bonner; Rex, who is deputy sheriff; and James S.

The last named was quite young when brought by his parents to Arkansas and his education was largely acquired in the schools of Stuttgart, while later he attended a business college at Little Rock. He enlisted in the army in 1917, raising a company at Stuttgart, of which he became first lieutenant. He was afterward transferred to the One Hundred and Fourteenth Supply Train and was stationed at Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, and from there went to Detroit, Michigan, on convoy service between Detroit and Baltimore, while later he went overseas and was at St. Florentin, France. He was assigned to the duty of providing the front line with supplies and ammunition and was mustered out with the rank of first lieutenant.

Following his return to his native country Mr. Pollard took up his abode in De Witt and in 1920 was elected sheriff of Arkansas county, which position he is now acceptably filling. He was married in 1921 to Miss Mary Bohon, a daughter of A. R. Bohon of Stuttgart, and they are well known in De Witt, where their circle of friends is constantly growing. Fraternally Mr. Pollard is a Mason of high rank, having taken the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in the Consistory, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. He is also connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and with the American Legion. He has always been a progressive and public-spirited citizen and in the country's hour of peril he manifested the same fidelity to duty which prompted his father to go to the defense of the stars and stripes when the integrity of the Union was threatened. As a public official he is making an excellent record, his name bringing a sense of security to law-abiding citizens and of terror to those who do not hold themselves amenable to law.

H. O. TOMLINSON.

H. O. Tomlinson, manager of the mercantile department of the Stout Lumber Company at Thornton, Arkansas, was born in Calhoun county on the 23d of July, 1889, a son of Henry and Jennie (Mason) Tomlinson. His parents were born in this county, where the father won prominence as a successful agriculturist. His death occurred here on the 4th of February, 1894, while the mother departed this life in 1898.

Thus, at the age of nine years, H. O. Tomlinson was left an orphan and he began to make his own way in the world. In the winter he attended the country schools of the county and he worked at various occupations during the summer months. At the age of fourteen years he put his textbooks aside and secured a position as office boy with the Stout Lumber Company. His conscientious performance of every duty assigned him soon won him promotion and for some time he was a clerk in the lumber sales department. For seven years he held the position of timekeeper, was assistant cashier in the main office for some time, and subsequently became cashier. He was active in that capacity for five years and in December, 1917, he put all personal interests aside and enlisted for service in the World war. He was assigned to the Motor Transport service, attached to the First Army Corps in France. On the 26th of March, 1918, he sailed for France and was in active service in that country until the 28th of June, 1919, when he returned to the United States. He landed in New York on the 9th of July and received his honorable discharge at Camp Pike on the 25th of that month. Returning to Thornton, he again became connected with the Stout Lumber Company, as assistant manager in the mercantile department, and on the 15th of January, 1920, he was placed in charge of the entire department, in which important capacity he is now serving. He is one of the alert, enterprising young business men of Thornton who has achieved success as the result of his own intelligently directed efforts.

On the 22d of January, 1921, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Tomlinson to Miss Lucy Gray Holmes of Cleveland, Arkansas. She is one of the prominent young matrons of Thornton and is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Fraternally Mr. Tomlinson is identified with the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, holding membership in Thornton Lodge, No. 231.

D. O. HARTON.

D. O. Harton is one of the well known business men in Conway, having since March, 1883, been engaged in the mercantile business here. He is a native of Arkansas, his birth occurring in old Van Buren county, now Cleburne county, on the 23d of January, 1849, a son of Dr. John James and Goodin (Love) Harton. His grandfather on the paternal side, Daniel Harton, was born in North Carolina and emigrated to Jackson, Tennessee, in early manhood, where he engaged in farming and also conducted a mercantile business. He resided in Jackson, Tennessee, until his demise. The maternal grandfather, Benjamin Love, was born in Virginia and at an early age removed to Alabama, thence to Tennessee and Mississippi and subsequently came to Arkansas in 1852. He made the trip overland with oxen and crossing the Mississippi at Memphis, Tennessee, came through the St. Francis bottoms and stopped at Marianna, where he acquired land and remained long enough to raise a corn crop. Upon reaching Arkansas he located in old Van Buren county, entered a tract of wooded land, which he cleared himself and upon which he erected some log outhouses, and resided there until his death, at the age of sixty years. He was a great hunter. Dr. John James Harton was born in Springfield, Tennessee, on the 17th of September, 1817. At an early age he determined upon the medical profession as his life work and he commenced study under Dr. R. L. W. Dodge, a well known physician of Little Rock. Later he enrolled in the School of Medicine at Nashville, Tennessee, and in 1840 he came to Arkansas and located near Quitman. He entered some land in that community and then began the practice of his profession. He was one of the first physicians in the state and he built up an extensive practice ranging from fifty to sixty miles over the surrounding country. Dr. Harton was tireless in his devotion to his practice and at all times he kept in touch with the advancement that was daily being made in the profession. He found his greatest recreation in hunting, inheriting the love of that sport from his grandfather, and he found deer and turkey in abundance. He was likewise fond of fishing. The marriage of Dr. Harton to Goodin Love was celebrated in 1848. She was born near Halifax, North Carolina, on the 11th of December, 1828. To their union ten children were born. Seven of the children grew to manhood and womanhood and four are living at this time. Those living are: John James, engaged in farming near Quitman; D. O., whose name initiates this review; Benjamin L., president of the Faulkner County Bank and Trust Company; and Calista, who is living on her father's farm near Quitman. One daughter, Harriett, who was born on the 6th of January, 1852, became the wife of Rev. A. P. Melton. Her death occurred September 30, 1914; Sarah, who became the wife of Robert Williamson, was born on the 23d of October, 1856, and died on the 8th of June, 1890; Sakista, the wife of Henry P. Martin, was born on the 12th of March, 1861, and she is also deceased. Three other children died in infancy. Dr. and Mrs. Harton were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He was a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Sons of Temperance. On the 2d of January, 1887, occurred the demise of Dr. Harton. His widow survived him until August 10, 1913.

D. O. Harton received his education in the common schools of Van Buren county, then primitive log structures with home-made benches, walking a distance of two and one-half miles each day. On the 10th of November, 1870, he went to Springfield and engaged in the mercantile business, remaining there until 1883. In March of that year he came to Conway and established a mercantile business here in association with W. W. Martin. After Mr. Martin's death he bought all interests and has continued to conduct the enterprise alone. During the thirty-eight years of his connection with local business interests Mr. Harton has become known for his spirit of enterprise and his tireless energy, being progressive in his policy and quick to act when the occasion demands. Not all of his time has been devoted to his mercantile establishment, for he has been active in financial circles as well. He was one of the organizers of the Bank of Conway and is director of that institution at this time. He is likewise a director of the Faulkner County Bank and Trust Company.

In 1880, in Faulkner county, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Harton and Miss Flora Moore, a native of Conway county and a daughter of N. W. Moore, a well known merchant of Springfield. To Mr. and Mrs. Harton eleven children have been born: D. O., engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Conway; B. M., assisting his father in the conduct of the mercantile business; William M.; George G., teaching school in Conway, who was principal of the high school at Medill, Oklahoma, last year; John James, in the store with his father; Marcus W., specializing in mathematics in Peabody College of Nashville, Tennessee; Balfour G., a student in Hendrix College, Conway; Mary, the wife of Joseph H. Crossett, a general merchant of McCrory, this state; Dove, the wife of F. S. Staples, professor of history in Hendrix College at Conway; Helen, a teacher of languages in Martha Washington College at Abingdon, Virginia; and Elizabeth, a student in Hendrix College. William M. is a veteran of the World war, having enlisted in the artillery at home while a student at Columbia University. He served with Company C, Three Hundred and Fifteenth Ammunition Train, Ninetieth Division, and was commissioned first lieutenant at Leon Springs, Texas. He went overseas in July, 1918, and was in the battle of St. Mihiel, as well as other important battles of that war. He is now living in Conway.

The political views of Mr. Harton coincide with the principles of the democratic party, for whose candidates he always casts his ballot. He has never desired political honors, however, preferring to devote his time to his business interests. The family are affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally Mr. Harton is a Royal Arch Mason and a Woodman of the World. He is one of the best known men in Conway, respected and honored for his conservative methods and sound business judgment. He has met the obligations of life with the confidence and courage that come of conscious personal ability, right conception of things and an habitual regard for what is best in the exercise of human activities.

His wife was born in Alabama and her demise occurred at the age of sixty years. She had many friends throughout the community and she took an active and prominent part in the affairs of the Presbyterian church. To their union the following children were born: La Fayette, whose name initiates this review; Flem, farming in Boone county; Ellen, the wife of C. B. Robinson, once sheriff of Boone county, but now a prominent and successful agriculturist; and Ella, the widow of W. W. Hale and the mother of one son, John J. Hale, of Fort Smith, where he is associated with the W. H. Miller Hardware Store. For many generations the Eoff family were consistent members of the Baptist church.

In the acquirement of an education, La Fayette Eoff attended the public schools of Bellefonte and later entered the Arkansas State University at Fayetteville. After putting his textbooks aside he engaged in teaching country schools for some time and then taught school in Bellefonte for about six years. At the termination of that time he purchased a mercantile store at Bellefonte, which he conducted successfully for a short time. In 1893 he was elected county clerk of Boone county for a period of four years. In May, 1898, he enlisted for service in the Spanish-American war, being mustered in at Little Rock. He was then sent to Chickamauga, Georgia, and from thence to Anniston, Alabama, where he served as first lieutenant of Company K, Second Arkansas Infantry. At the close of the war Mr. Eoff returned to Harrison, where he entered the employ of the old Boone County Bank, a connection he had maintained for a year when he was elected circuit clerk for four years. Following his incumbency in that office he ran for state auditor but suffered defeat. Subsequently he entered the Gordon Bank of Harrison and for two years was active as clerk in that institution. His next business venture was with the Boone County Hardware Company and in 1911 he organized the Farmers Bank of Harrison. This bank has a large number of stockholders, most of whom are farmers and Mr. Eoff is now chief executive of the institution. W. H. Price was first president and Mr. Eoff served as president and vice president for some time. The capital stock is thirty thousand dollars and the surplus three thousand, three hundred dollars. Mr. Eoff is untiring in his devotion to his banking duties and as a result the bank has grown to be one of the most stable financial institutions of the state.

In 1887 occurred the marriage of Mr. Eoff to Miss Daisy Coffey, who died in 1893. She was a daughter of W. B. Coffey. One daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Eoff, Lillian, who received her education in Mattox Seminary of Little Rock and in due time enrolled as student in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville. Subsequently she studied vocal and instrumental music in Belmont, Tennessee, and is now soloist in the Presbyterian church. She is now the wife of Ward Davis and to them two children, Dorothy D. and Jack Joseph, have been born. Mr. Davis is engaged in the men's furnishings business.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Eoff has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party, in the interests of which he takes an active part. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he has served the church as elder for a period of thirty years. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and has been eminent commander of the Knights Templars. He is likewise a Knight of Pythias and an Odd Fellow and has held most of the offices in both lodges. Although the greater part of Mr. Eoff's time is devoted to his business interests, his hobby is raising Poland China hogs and he has some of the finest in the state. He also owns a number of fine horses, among them Meteor Rose, a well known high school saddle horse. Mr. Eoff is a very capable man and attributes his success in business to the fact that he has always concentrated his efforts upon anything he undertook and has made it a principle not to identify himself with any activity that did not conduct its transactions in a perfectly legitimate and honorable manner.

F. C. KIRKPATRICK.

F. C. Kirkpatrick, editor of the Blade at Walnut Ridge, was born in Randolph county, Arkansas, on the 20th of July, 1891, a son of H. Kirkpatrick, was born in Tennessee on the 22d of February, 1810, and in later life was married to Anna Woodrome, likewise a native of Tennessee. In 1835 he came to Arkansas and located in Independence county. For one year he lived at Big Bottom on the White river and in 1836 removed to Lawrence county, and settled on Reed's Creek, about thirty-five miles northeast of Batesville. There he bought one hundred and sixty acres of good land and reared his family. His wife died in 1860, at the age of forty-six years. Later he was married to Mrs. Elizabeth (Goacher) Smithee. E. S. Kirkpatrick was a brick and stone mason, as well as a farmer, and built some of the first houses in Batesville. He was in every sense of the word a self-made man, for his only asset upon coming to this state was a team. Before his death he was the owner of five hundred acres of fine land and was financially independent. He served throughout the Black Hawk war, and at the engagement at Kellogg's Grove, under Major Dement, his horse was killed under him. His death occurred in September, 1876.

The paternal grandfather, Dr. J. N. Kirkpatrick, was born in Franklin county, Illinois, on the 30th of October, 1831, and received his early education in the subscription schools of the county. He rode horseback sometimes a distance of thirty-five miles to visit his patients and was one of the most highly respected and beloved citizens of the community in which he lived. When Dr. Kirkpatrick first came to Randolph county he had but twenty-five cents in his pocket and he borrowed a horse to ride. He achieved substantial success in life, however, and eventually owned three hundred and sixty-six acres of fine land in Randolph county and also some town property. Subsequently he engaged in the mercantile business at Imboden, Lawrence county, in association with a cousin, G. R. Kirkpatrick, and he was active in that connection for some time, retaining his farm lands. Later he removed to Tuckerman and engaged in the mercantile business there and in 1912 he came to Walnut Ridge, where he bought a flour mill. He is achieving more than substantial success in the operation of this mill, which is run by electric power, and he does a general milling business. In 1888 Mr. Kirkpatrick was united in marriage to Miss Mattie Reynolds and to their union two children were born: F. C.; and Eric, who is employed in the Hotel Baltimore at Kansas City, Missouri. He edited that sheet until 1919, in which year he came to Walnut Ridge and purchased the Blade. He has since published this paper, which, with a weekly circulation of two thousand, has rapidly risen to a position of prominence among the other newspapers of the county and state. What he has accomplished in a business way represents the fit utilization of the innate talents and powers which are his and the improvement of the opportunities which come to every individual. In this county he was united in marriage to Miss Jennie E. Goodwin, who is still living at the age of seventy years. To their union six children were born: A. G., whose name introduces this review; E. B., manager of the Cotton Oil Company at Helena; Ethel, now the wife of P. C. Smith, sawmill operator and lumberman of this community; Oscar, manager of the Melwood Mercantile Company at Melwood, Arkansas; Jennie, connected with Y. W. C. A. work in Helena; and J. G., extended mention of whom is made on another page of this work. Throughout his life the father gave his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. His religious faith was that of the Baptist church, while his widow is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

In the acquirement of his early education A. G. Burke attended the country schools of Phillips and Lee counties and after putting his textbooks aside secured a position with H. G. Homer & Company, a large mercantile establishment of Helena. He was associated with that concern nine years but in 1906 was elected circuit clerk of this county, an office in which he was active until 1920. In that year he tendered his resignation and became actively interested in agriculture. He has extensive land interests in this county and he is devoting his entire time and attention to its cultivation. For some time Mr. Burke has acted as receiver for the West Helena Consolidated Company, owning the interurban railroad, water works and land holdings, and he has proven himself a business man of ability. He has been successful in everything he has undertaken and no man stands higher in this community for integrity and sterling worth.

On the 16th of July, 1919, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Burke and Miss Nelle Minton, a native of Fortesque, Missouri, and a daughter of John and Julia Minton. She is a graduate of the University of Missouri and for some time was a student at Battle Creek, Michigan. Upon the completion of her education she engaged in teaching school and for some time was connected with the home economics department of the University of Missouri. To Mr. and Mrs. Burke one child has been born: A. G., Jr., six months old. Mrs. Burke is prominent socially and is a consistent member of and active worker in the Episcopal church.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Burke has given his political endorsement to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he is a Scottish Rite Mason and has also taken the degrees of the Knights Templar Commandery. He is a member of Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Pine Bluff and is likewise affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Burke is one of the leading Masons in the state and for the past fifteen or twenty years has been treasurer of the blue lodge. He is one of Helena's most public-spirited citizens and there is no movement for the promotion of the general welfare that seeks his aid in vain.

S. K. DUNCAN.

Judge S. K. Duncan, actively engaged in the practice of law at Waldron, was born in that town, April 7, 1870, his parents being Samuel K. and Isabelle (Gilbreath) Duncan. The father, who was born near Louisville, Kentucky, in 1833, was a son of Browning Duncan, who moved with the family in an early day to Tennessee and engaged in farming. The father was first married in Tennessee to a Miss Leonard and there were two children of this marriage, namely: Robert Tison Duncan, late of Alvarado, Texas; and Mrs. Lucy R. Dozier, late of Waldron, Arkansas. Mrs. (Leonard) Duncan died and the father afterward married Mrs. Isabelle (Gilbreath) Hamilton, mother of James M. Hamilton, now a resident of Waldron. She was born in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1837, a daughter of Hugh Gilbreath, also a native of Missouri, whence he removed to Arkansas at an early day, spending his last years near Clarksville in that state. Samuel K. Duncan, Sr. was a wagon-maker and followed his trade in Waldron for forty years. During the Civil war he was in the employ of the government at Fort Smith, Arkansas. He met with a fair measure of success in his business affairs and commanded the respect and goodwill of his fellowmen in every relation of life. Fraternally he was a Royal Arch Mason and religiously he was a member of the Christian church. He died in 1906. His widow survived him until 1913, when she was called to the home beyond. They had a family of five sons, four of whom are living: Dr. L. D. Duncan now engaged in the medical practice at Waldron; S. K. of this review; William B., a merchant of Ada, Oklahoma, and Dr. F. R. Duncan, who is a practicing physician of Waldron. Thomas M. Duncan who was circuit clerk of his county for a number of years, died in 1906.

Judge S. K. Duncan, the subject of this sketch, received his education in the common schools of Scott county and attended the University of Arkansas for a short time. He studied law while filling the office of deputy clerk of the circuit and county courts of Scott county, and in 1892 was admitted to the bar, later beginning the practice of law in Waldron. He served as county and probate judge one term and afterwards as circuit clerk for three successive terms. He served four years as cashier of the Bank of Waldron, beginning at its organization. He has always manifested much interest in public enterprise, has served many years as director of the schools of the town and in several capacities as officer of the town and was nominated at a mass meeting called at the instance of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and elected mayor of the town in 1922. He has perhaps done more for the upbuilding of the town, its schools and churches than any man of his means in the town. He entered the active practice of law in partnership with Judge W. A. Bates under the firm style of Bates & Duncan in 1912, and has since devoted his time to his law practice, which is extensive and has connected him with much important litigation heard in the courts.

In 1891 Judge Duncan was married to Miss Beatrice E. Vise, a native of Scott county, Arkansas, and a daughter of Captain Cary M. Vise, who was a farmer and also served his county as sheriff and in other official capacities. Mrs. Duncan was educated in Waldron, where she lived for several years prior to her marriage. She was devoted to her family, the education of her children and the betterment of her community and when she departed this life in August, 1921, her death was sincerely mourned by many warm friends, owing to the sterling traits of character which she had always displayed. Of this union three children survive. The eldest, Dr. Edgar E. Duncan, was graduated from the high school at Waldron and from the University of Arkansas, after which he took up the study of medicine at Johns Hopkins Medical College, Baltimore, Maryland, where he graduated in medicine and surgery in the class of 1919, and has since served one year as interne in the Johns Hopkins Hospital, and one year as assistant resident physician and one year as resident physician in the Hospital for the Women of Maryland, Baltimore. He enlisted at Camp Meade in the Medical Corps of the United States army in the World war, but was not sent overseas; Irene is the wife of Rev. Arthur A. DuLaney, a Baptist minister and member of the faculty of Central College, Conway, Arkansas, and they have two children, Arthur Ainslee and Beatrice; Isabelle, the youngest daughter, is the wife of Milmo Hon Bird, who is now serving as deputy sheriff of Scott county under his father, O. S. Bird, and lives in Waldron with his wife and daughter, Bettye Beatrice Bird. Judge Duncan was married in 1922 to Mrs. Maggie A. (Lewis) Caver, also a native of Scott county, and widow of George P. Caver, deceased, formerly a merchant of Waldron.

Judge Duncan is a member of the Baptist church and a follower of Masonic teachings, being a past master of his lodge. In politics he is a democrat. During the World war he served both as chairman of the county council of defense and the legal advisory board. He owns some real estate, including town property, but devotes his entire attention to his law practice.

J. H. HARTJE.

J. H. Hartje, engaged in the abstract, real estate and insurance business in Conway, is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in old Conway county, now Faulkner county, on the 24th of February, 1855. His parents were Augustus and Louisa (Bartlett) Hartje, both of whom are deceased. The paternal grandfather, Henry Hartje, was born in Germany and was for twenty-seven years in the military service of his native country. His death occurred as the result of wounds received at the battle of Waterloo. Jonathan Bartlett, the maternal grandfather, was born in Delaware and came to Arkansas in the early 50's. He took up one hundred and sixty acres of land in this state, whereon he resided until his demise, which occurred soon after his removal here. Augustus Hartje was born in Germany on the 14th of March, 1825, and came to the United States at the age of eleven years. He first lived in Maryland, where he arrived in 1836, and he immediately found employment. The only education Mr. Hartje received was that picked up by himself during his spare time. In 1849 he was married to Miss Louisa Bartlett, who was born in Delaware, on the 4th of March, 1830. Soon afterward they came to Arkansas, making the journey by boat. They landed at the mouth of Cadron Creek and Mr. Hartje acquired a tract of eighty acres about one-half mile west of the present site of Conway. This land was heavily covered with timber but Mr. Hartje cleared it and erecting a residence and outbuildings from the timber cut on the land, soon had it under cultivation. The nearest neighbors in that early day were six miles away. There were many wild horses and wild hogs in the vicinity of the homestead and wild turkeys would often come into the yard to fight the chickens. Mr. Hartje always followed general farming and stock raising and he won substantial success, owning four hundred acres of valuable land at the time of his death. During the Civil war he served his fellowmen as justice of the peace. Like many others he lost everything he had but with the characteristic determination and stanch courage evinced by him throughout his life, he started again and at the time of his death was financially independent. His demise occurred on the 23d of February, 1893. His widow survived him until the 25th of February, 1920. Nine children were born to their union: Mary E., who is now the wife of John Long, a farmer of Faulkner county; Louisa, the widow of J. R. Williams, who is residing in Braggs, Oklahoma, with her sons who are engaged in the mercantile business; J. H., whose name introduces this review; Letha, a resident of Conway; Frank, whose demise occurred at the age of twenty-four years; George, who died at the age of sixty-four years; and three other children who died in infancy. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the father was a member of the Masons, belonging to the blue lodge. He was a stanch supporter of the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government.

J. H. Hartje, upon attaining school age, became a student in the subscription schools of his native county, attending them for about three months in every year. The remainder of the time was spent in working on the home farm. In 1871 he left the parental roof and removing to Conway, obtained employment in the mercantile establishment of Stell & Covington, the second store of its kind then in business in Conway. He was with that firm for several years when he bought out their interests and for four years conducted the business on his own account. He handled a fine line of general merchandise and his keen business ability and courteous treatment of all patrons won for his store an extensive and important trade. For two years he was postmaster of Conway, having been appointed to that office under General Grant. At the expiration of his term of office, having sold out his mercantile interests, he obtained employment as a clerk in a large store here. He was active in that capacity for several years, when he was appointed deputy county and circuit clerk and in 1904 was elected county clerk for two terms. In 1910 he was elected circuit clerk for two terms and was incumbent in that office until 1914. During that time he opened an abstract office here and when his service as circuit clerk was terminated, he turned his attention to this enterprise. He has as a partner his son-in-law, G. S. McHenry, and they also write fire and tornado insurance and deal to some extent in real estate, handling for the most part lands in this state. Mr. Hartje has ever reached out along constantly broadening lines, and in both business and political relations he has, by reason of his cordiality, reliability and enterprise, won the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen.

In 1879 Mr. Hartje was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Ingram, a native of Lonoke county, this state, and a daughter of Henry Ingram. Her father was one of the pioneer settlers of this state, having come here from North Carolina at an early day. He engaged in farming here, where he resided until his demise. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hartje eight children were born: Bessie, the wife of G. S. McHenry, mention of whom has been made elsewhere in this sketch; Opie, cashier of the Bank of Conway; George F., a prominent attorney of Conway; Ingram, a bookkeeper in the Bank of Conway; Ruth, now the wife of John E. Lyon, assistant cashier of the Farmers State Bank of Conway; and three other children who died in infancy. Mrs. Hartje is well known in the club and social circles of Conway and she is prominent in the affairs of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, with which the family is affiliated.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Hartje has given his support to the democratic party but of late years has neither sought nor desired public office, preferring to devote his entire time and attention to the conduct of his business interests. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being a member of the blue lodge, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Hartje has met with deserved success in his business and as he possesses a genial and companionable nature and has been faithful in the discharge of every duty, either public or private, it may truly be said of him that he represents the substantial citizenship of Faulkner county.

T. P. AUSTIN.

Since 1917 T. P. Austin has been engaged in the poultry and feed business at Morrillton and in this connection has proven his worth as an enterprising and resourceful business man. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred at Atkins of the 23d of November, 1876, a son of T. A. and Cornelia (Bills) Austin. His father is an extensive farmer and stock raiser, who came to this state in 1871 from North Carolina, where he was born. He homesteaded eighty acres in Pope county, which he cleared and put into cultivation, raising corn and cotton. For some time he was active in that connection and then went to Hattieville, where for five years he was engaged in the mercantile business, achieving a substantial success. At the termination of that time, however, he returned to his farm near Atkins, where he is now residing, devoting his entire attention to agricultural pursuits. In 1871 in North Carolina Mr. Austin was united in marriage to Miss Cornelia Bills and to them eight children were born, two of whom are living: Hallie is now the wife of W. M. Hathaway, a farmer in Oklahoma; F. H., who married Miss Agnes Massey and engaged in farming and the general mercantile business in Morrillton, is deceased; Zebediah, Dora, James and Pearl died in infancy; T. P., whose name initiates this review; and Ernest, a farmer and cotton buyer of Atkins. Both Mr. and Mrs. Austin are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the father gives his political allegiance to the democratic party.

T. P. Austin received his education in the rural schools of Pope county and assisted his father in the operation of the home farm. In 1917 he determined to enter business on his own account and as a result went to Morrillton and established a feed and poultry business. He has since been active in that capacity and shows marked ability in developing and increasing the business, and in the constantly enlarging patronage accorded this enterprise is seen the success which has rewarded his labors. Mr. Austin also owns some valuable land in Conway county, which he rents and from which he receives a substantial income.

In 1898 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Austin to Miss Arkie McDaniel, a daughter of C. C. McDaniel, a farmer of Conway county. To their union three children have been born: Tilden Ray, whose death occurred in 1904; and Carthel and Carl, twins, living at home. Mrs. Austin is prominently identified with the women's clubs of Morrillton and she is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Austin votes with the democratic party but has never taken an active part in politics aside from exercising his franchise in support of measures which he deems of value in good government. His business affairs have gained him a very extensive acquaintance and won for him a prominent and enviable position in the business circles of Conway county.

EUGENE SEALS.

Among the valuable employes of the Cotton Belt Lumber Company is Eugene Seals, yard foreman for that concern at Bearden. He is one of Arkansas' sons by adoption, for his birth occurred in Nicholson, Mississippi, on the 30th of May, 1882, a son of George and Mary (McGhee) Seals, both natives of Nicholson, Mississippi. The father was engaged in the livery business in Nicholson for the greater part of his life and was one of the representative and substantial citizens of the community. His death occurred in 1899. His wife died in 1895.

In the acquirement of an education Eugene Seals attended the public schools of Picayune, Mississippi, and at the age of seventeen years apprenticed himself to learn the butcher business. He was active in that line of work for seven years in Nicholson and at the termination of that time, determining to learn something of the lumber business, he entered the employ of a lumber company in Nicholson, where he remained for two and one-half years. Subsequently he returned to Picayune as an employe of the Picayune Lumber Company and in 1911 he severed his connection with that business to come to Bearden. His intention on locating here was to establish a butcher shop but on arriving here he changed his mind and sought and found employment with the Cotton Belt Lumber Company as a common laborer. With determined purpose and laudable ambition he entered upon his labors and eight months later he was promoted to the important position of yard foreman, in which connection he has since been active.

In the acquirement of his early education Byron Morse attended the common schools of Jonesboro and later entered the Arkansas Military Academy at Little Rock. He was graduated from that institution in 1909 and immediately entered the business world, taking up the study of the abstract business in the office of Minor Markle of Jonesboro. EDWARD F. McDONALD

Edward F. McDonald, a member of one of the old and prominent families of Arkansas, has become well known as an educator but is now serving as sheriff of Grant county, and the thoroughness with which he performs the tasks that devolve upon him in this connection is making his name a menace to evildoers, while it carries with it a sense of security to all law-abiding citizens. He is one of Arkansas' native sons, his birth having occurred near Sheridan, in Grant county, on the 27th of November, 1887, and his parents were William D. and Emily V. (Rushing) McDonald, the former a native of Georgia and the latter of Alabama. As children they came to Arkansas with their parents, who settled in Grant county prior to the outbreak of the Civil war, in which conflict four brothers of William D. McDonald participated. He resides on the old family homestead and has devoted much of his life to land survey work in Grant and other counties, having been surveyor for Grant county for the past twenty years, while from 1898 until 1902 he served as sheriff on the county. The mother died in 1919, when seventy-two years of age.

In the acquirement of an education Edward F. McDonald attended the district schools, the Sheridan high school and the Arkansas State University, also completing a course in the Georgia School of Technology at Atlanta. After finishing his studies he took up educational work, with which he was identified for about fifteen years, teaching in the schools of Grant, Dallas and Saline counties, Arkansas, and was the first young man in Grant county to which the state issued a life certificate as a teacher.

When twenty-one years of age he was made county examiner, being the youngest incumbent of that position in the state, and he is the only Sheridan boy who has ever been principal of its high school. He was very successful as an instructor, imparting clearly and readily to others the knowledge that he had acquired and inspiring his pupils with much of his own interest and enthusiasm in the work. He continued to follow the profession until 1920 and was serving his sixth year as county examiner when he was nominated for sheriff of Grant county. He was elected by an overwhelming majority, carrying nine of the twelve townships of the county, thus indicating his high standing in the section where practically his entire life has been passed. He leaves nothing undone to enforce the law according to his conscience, being particularly vigorous in his prosecution of those engaged in illicit liquor traffic. He is fearless in the discharge of his duties and is recognized as a man of strict integrity, whom neither fear nor favor can swerve from the course which he deems right.

Mr. McDonald has been married twice. In 1908 he wedded Miss Cattie Stephens, a daughter of James G. Stephens, who was for many years prominently identified with mercantile interests of Sheridan but is now living retired. Mrs. McDonald died in 1917, leaving three children, two daughters and a son, Emma Aline, Catherine and Edward Lee. In 1920 Mr. McDonald was again married, his second union being with Miss Virgie Cole of Prattsville, Grant county, a daughter of Dr. C. F. Cole, a well known physician of this district. They are members of the Missionary Baptist church and since his seventeenth year Mr. McDonald has served as one of its deacons. He is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being a member of Sheridan Lodge, No. 233, and he is a prominent Mason, belonging to Sheridan Lodge, No. 260, of which he is serving as senior warden. At the last convention of the Grand Lodge he was elected state grand orator and has been chosen to take the thirty-second degree. He gives his best efforts to whatever he undertakes and his course has been characterized by integrity and honor in every relation, gaining for him the respect, confidence and goodwill of all with whom he has been associated.

WILLIAM P. FLETCHER.

William P. Fletcher is a prominent citizen of Lonoke, whose business capability has brought him to a position of leadership in that connection, while his broad vision and progressiveness in citizenship have left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the history of the state. He is now nearing the seventy-fourth milestone on life's journey and his career has indeed been one of activity and usefulness. He was born in Yazoo county, Mississippi, July 31, 1848, a son of Dr. J. P. and Mary Ann (Cooper) Fletcher. The father was a native of Rutherford county, Tennessee, and a son of John D. Fletcher, who was born November 28, 1804, and was prominently connected with the public life of that state, serving as a member of the Tennessee senate. He in turn was a son of another John Fletcher, who was born in Virginia, April 6, 1775. and removed from the Old Dominion to Tennessee, becoming the founder of the family in the latter state, where for several generations the family has figured most prominently and honorably. The father, Dr. J. P. Fletcher, was a graduate of the New Orleans Medical College and devoted his life to the practice of his profession in Mississippi, but his last days were spent in Lonoke county, where he departed this life on the 9th of March, 1907. His children were as follows; J D., who was a Baptist minister of Arkansas; J. J., who died as a practicing physician of Augusta, Arkansas; T. M., a dentist of this state; B. A., a physician of Augusta, Arkansas, who is deceased; William P.; Mary, the deceased wife of A. F. Huntsman of Lonoke; and Sue J., who was the widow of E. S. Lee of Arkansas when she departed this life.

It was in the year 1868 that William P. Fletcher and his brother, John D., came to Arkansas, while the father with his family arrived in this state in 1872, at which time the family home was established on a farm near Lonoke. The educational opportunities of William P. Fletcher were restricted because of Civil war conditions, but in the school of experience he has learned many valuable lessons, constantly augmenting his knowledge through reading, study and investigation. After coming to Arkansas he worked upon a farm. It was in the fall of 1868 that he removed to Lonoke, and in the same year he taught the first school taught in this city. Subsequently he became identified with the mercantile business and later with the drug business and through these connections made for himself a most creditable position in the commercial circles of the city and during this early period served as mayor of Lonoke. The sterling worth of his character and his keen interest in public affairs, based upon an earnest desire to promote the progress and welfare of the county and state led to his election for the office of sheriff and collector for four full terms from 1878 to 1886 and then to the office of state senator in 1886 and after serving for a four years' term he was reelected in 1902, remaining in the position for two full terms. He was a conspicuous figure in the senate concerning matters pertaining to the settlement of the state debt and he also aided in establishing the fiscal policy of the commonwealth and in adjusting financial difficulties inherited from the reconstruction days, especially the adjustment and payment of the old bond issues. Fletcher's Record of Tax Receipts (copyrighted) is a most comprehensive one, giving a complete record of every tax receipt issued in the county which enables the collector to balance his daily collections and correct errors, and has become one of the most valuable of tax references in the state. On the 31st of March, 1883, it was incorporated into law by the legislature by his permission, as the official record of taxation. Mr. Fletcher was also one of the members of the first history commission of the state of Arkansas and thus in many ways left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the records of the commonwealth. Aside from his service in connection with monetary questions he was also keenly interested in the proper development of the state charitable institutions and drew up most of the bills and measures that modernized the organized charities of the state. He was appointed a member of the board of state charities and assisted in bringing about the installation of a refrigerating plant and hydrotherapy, at the hospital for the insane. He also assisted in fostering the measure for the expansion of the insane hospital that accommodation might be furnished to all of the insane of the state, for previous to this time many mentally deranged people were kept in the county jails. Mr. Fletcher likewise assisted in bringing about many modern and healthful improvements at the Deaf Mute Institute, Blind School and Confederate Home, all of which were under control of the board.

Mr. Fletcher has likewise done an important work, inasmuch as he was one of the first to aid in the development of the rice industry in Lonoke county. He gave the use of one hundred and sixty acres to the government for a period of seven years for experimental purposes and personally spent twenty-five hundred dollars on the development of this land in order to establish rice culture here, proving the soundness of his views concerning the cultivation of this crop, which has proven a source of great income to the state from a new industry. Mr. Fletcher served for thirty years on the local school board and devoted his time and talent to public school education. His efforts have been of the greatest benefit along educational as well as other lines of progress, development and improvement. Wherever he has seen a possibility for aiding in any public way he has put forth earnest efforts in that direction and the results accomplished have been most beneficial to the state and his local community.

On the 4th of December, 1872, Mr. Fletcher was united in marriage to Miss Ella Ann Beard, a daughter of T. C. and Nancy (Boone) Beard. To Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher have been born nine children, five of whom are living. Mary, the eldest, is a graduate of the Lonoke high school and specialized in the study of music at Ouachita College. She is now the wife of Fletcher Cox of Lonoke, by whom she has two children; William P., Jr., the second child in the family of William P. and Ella Ann (Beard) Fletcher, attended the University of Arkansas and is now engaged in the real estate business and general farming interests in Lonoke, where he makes his home. He married Blannie Smotherman of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and they have one child; George B. Fletcher is a graduate physician, having completed a course in the medical department of the University of Arkansas, and was formerly on the staff of the State Hospital for Nervous Diseases. He was in London for special study when world war was declared. Returning home, he was afterward appointed a first lieutenant in the army and was assigned to duty at Camp Ben Harrison. REV. HARRY GOODWIN KNOWLES.

Rev. Harry Goodwin Knowles has been pastor of the Christian church of Little Rock since 1918. He was born in Salina, Kansas, November 11, 1887. His father, Dr. James Seward Knowles, was a son of a pioneer miller of Illinois. His career as a physician is marked by his love for and conscientious care of suffering humanity. He was for many years associated with the Presbyterian Hospital in New York city and was the founder and builder of the Lakeside Hospital in the city of Cleveland. His broad sympathy went out to all mankind and his life was one of public service, devoted to the uplift and benefit of the individual and of mankind at large. Dr. Knowles was married to Miss Gertrude Goodwin, a native of Eureka, Illinois, who is a descendant of Elisha Goodwin, who came to America in 1807. He was a famous minister of the Presbyterian church and one of the coterie of Presbyterian preachers who was associated with Alexander Campbell in establishing the Christian church. He, too, was widely known and beloved in the middle west, where he was a circuit rider in what was known as the Western Reserve and his labors in those early days covered Western Ohio, Indiana and Kansas. Dr. Knowles died in 1902. Gertrude Goodwin Knowles is still living in Kansas, where she has been a successful educator for twenty-eight years.

Harry Goodwin Knowles was educated in the common schools of Salina, Kansas, and in the Cotner University at Lincoln, Nebraska, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1909. His first pulpit work was done at Plainsview, Nebraska, where he served while a student, preaching for the church on Sunday for a period of three years. His next call was at North Platte, Nebraska, where he served the Christian church for seven years. He then took up evangelistic work, to which he devoted his time and attention for four years and in 1918 he came to Little Rock as an evangelist, holding a four weeks' service. On the 19th of November of that year he was invited to become pastor of the Little Rock Christian church and accepting the offer has filled the pulpit since that time. When Mr. Knowles came to Little Rock the membership of the church was six hundred and six and in November, 1921, it had reached thirteen hundred and twenty. Under his guidance and through his labors the church has grown rapidly and a movement is now on foot to erect a larger house of worship, for the indications are that it will soon be needed. Mr. Knowles is an aggressive, energetic servant of the Lord, ranking as one of the brilliant pulpit orators of the south, logical and convincing in his utterances and withal possessing broad human sympathy that wins the confidence and trust of his fellowmen and awakens in them the desire to follow the teachings which have been the guiding spirit of his own life, developing a character which they deem well worthy of emulation. He is now the vice president of the Ministerial Society of Little Rock, laboring earnestly with his fellow preachers of other denominations for the good of mankind. He is a member of the executive committee of the Arkansas Christian Missionary Society, and a member of the executive committee of the Interdenominational Sunday School Association. He lectures on Old Testament history in connection with the teachers' training course and was one of the organizers of the young men's Bible class, which now has a membership of one hundred and forty. He is a member of the committee on resolutions of the International convention of Christian churches and is continually alive to the needs and the opportunities of the church and of the public.

While he has accomplished much through his ministerial labors Mr. Knowles does not confine his activities solely to church work, but is also a dynamic force in connection with public interests. He is a director of the Pulaski County Tuberculosis Society and he served during the last eleven months of the World war as one of the dollar-a-year men. He takes a keen interest in civic problems and is a member of the Lions Club, an organization which is keenly alive to the questions which have to do with the city's welfare and her improvements. Fraternally Mr. Knowles is a Consistory Mason and in politics is an earnest republican.

On the 3d of April, 1907, Harry Goodwin Knowles was married to Miss Lavania

Cox, a daughter of George W. Cox, a farmer of Nebraska. Mrs. Knowles was born in Fairbury, Nebraska, and is also a graduate of Cotner University, their marriage being the culmination of a college romance. They are the parents of three children: Edward Goodwin, a high school student; Margaret J. and John Carroll, who are pupils in the grades. Mrs. Knowles comes from one of the old colonial families of Virginia. She is very active in church work and is truly a helpmate to her husband. It would be psychological in this connection to enter into any period of statement showing him to be a man of marked intellectuality and broad sympathetic spirit, for these have been shadowed forth between the lines of this review. All recognize the fact that he has been a dominant power for good since his coming to Little Rock, having made valuable contribution to the moral development of the commonwealth.

HON. JEFF DAVIS.

An historic figure passed from the scene of earthly activities when Hon. Jeff Davis departed this life January 3, 1913. Thrice was he elected governor of Arkansas and was also chosen to represent the state in the United States senate. He was a man of brilliant attainments, of fine spirit and high ideals and his public service constituted a valuable contribution to the state's development and progress. Arkansas has always been proud to number him among her native sons. He was born in Rock Comfort, Little River county, Arkansas, May 6, 1862, and was a son of Lewis W. and Elizabeth (Phillips) Davis, the latter a daughter of Bolen C. Phillips. She was born in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, December 4, 1832, and in 1835 was taken to Arkansas by her parents, who settled in Little River county. In 1860 she became the wife of Lewis W. Davis of Rock Comfort. In 1878 they removed to Dover, Pope county, and in that or the following year to Russellville, in the same county. There they resided until the death of Mr. Davis in 1907, after which Mrs. Davis lived in the home of her son in Little Rock, where she died in August, 1913. She took great pride in the extraordinary achievements of her son, who, on his part, gave her credit for the inspiration of his laudable ambition.

Jeff Davis was reared to manhood in Rock Comfort and Russellville, where he attended the public schools. His early youth had been passed on a farm, but agriculture held for him little attraction and, being desirous of becoming a member of the legal profession, he took up the study of law. He was for a time a student in the University of Arkansas and later was graduated in law from Vanderbilt University of Nashville, Tennessee, at the age of nineteen. Returning to Russellville, he there opened a law office in 1882. While advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, no dreary novitiate awaited him. He soon advanced to a place in the foremost ranks of the legal profession in the state and showed himself possessed of ability that enabled him to cross swords in forensic combat with the ablest representatives of the Arkansas bar. In 1890 he was elected to the office of prosecuting attorney of the fifth circuit and by reelection occupied that position for four years, or until 1894. His attention thereafter was given to the private practice of law for about five years and in the interim his practice steadily grew in volume and importance. In 1899 he became attorney general of Arkansas and continued to fill that position until elected the chief executive of the state.

It was at the biennial election of September 3, 1900, that Mr. Davis was chosen governor on the democratic ticket, winning a vote of eighty-eight thousand seven hundred and thirty-seven against that of forty thousand seven hundred and one votes cast for H. L. Remmel, the republican nominee. Endorsement of his term of service came in a reelection in 1902 and once more he was made the democratic candidate in 1904, thus winning the distinction of being the only person in Arkansas to be elected to the office of governor for a third term. His ability was pronounced. He closely studied all the vital questions and problems which came up for settlement and proved a splendid executive, bringing the most businesslike qualities to bear in the administration of the affairs of the office. Again Mr. Davis was called upon for public service when in 1906 he was elected United States senator to succeed Senator James H. Berry and in the national halls of legislation he ably defended and promoted the interests of the commonwealth which he represented. He was reelected in September, 1912, but died January 3, 1913, two months before the expiration of his first term.

Senator Davis was married in 1882 to Miss Ina McKenzie of Arkansas and to this marriage there were born twelve children, eight of whom are now living. Following the death of his first wife in 1910, Mr. Davis was married October 12, 1911, to Miss Lelia Carter, daughter of Dr. Wallace Carter of Ozark, Arkansas.

Without invidious distinction Senator Davis may be termed one of the eminent men that Arkansas has produced. He was an orator of great force and fervency and one who wielded great influence in speaking from the public platform. His words seemed to have a dynamic force that prompted his fellowmen to action and led to the accomplishment of the purpose which was the goal of his endeavor.

FRANK FARRIS.

Frank Farris is actively identified with the financial interests of Conway as vice president of the Farmers State Bank. He is a native of Arkansas, his birth occurring in Johnson county on the 16th of December, 1883, a son of Jefferson Davis and Amanda (Willis) Farris. His paternal grandfather, John D. Farris, was born in Illinois, where he engaged in farming until a short time before the Civil war, when he came to Arkansas and located in Johnson county. He acquired some land here and set out a large apple orchard. He achieved such gratifying success in that venture that he made apple growing a specialty. His death occurred in Johnson county, when he was sixty-five years of age. William Willis, the maternal grandfather, was born in Kansas, from which state he removed to Illinois and subsequently to Arkansas about the time of the Civil war. He located in Johnson county, where he farmed for many years, becoming a successful and representative agriculturist, but in later life he went to Kansas, and was there residing at the time of his death. Jefferson Davis Farris was for many years one of the prominent business men of Clarksville, where he conducted a general merchandise store under the name of the J. D. Farris Mercantile Company, and also owned a brickyard and engaged in the manufacture of bricks. In the conduct of those enterprises he gained more than substantial success and at the time of his demise in 1901 he was financially independent. Mrs. Farris is still living. To their union seven children were born: Frank, whose name initiates this review; Guy R., engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Conway; Ralph T., traveling salesman for the W. H. Norwood Wholesale Grocery Company of Conway; Le Roy, traveling salesman for the independent Packing Company of Forrest, Texas; Jefferson D., a student in Hendrix College; Mary R., now the wife of L. L. Thompson, a well known druggist of Little Rock; and Lillian L., the wife of Dr. Howell Brewer of Hot Springs. Mr. Farris was throughout his life a stanch supporter of the democratic party and was fraternally identified with the Woodmen of the World.

Frank Farris received his education in the public schools of Clarksville and after graduating from the high school entered his father's store. Upon the death of his father in 1901 the business was sold out and in 1903 he came to Conway as bookkeeper in the Bank of Conway. For ten years he remained in the employ of that institution, his conscientious performance of every duty assigned him winning him promotion to the position of assistant cashier. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers State Bank in 1913 and was elected cashier. In 1919 he was made vice president and is now active in that capacity. He has been a director in the bank since its organization and a dominant factor in the success of the institution. Mr. Farris is an ambitious and energetic man and by making use of every opportunity offered him he has steadily worked his way upward to a creditable place in the financial circles of the county. He owns considerable farm land throughout the county and rents the greater part of it out, thereby deriving a substantial income from its cultivation.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Farris has been a stanch supporter of the democratic party, having firm belief in the principals of that party as factors in good government. Fraternally he is a Mason and a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He takes an active interest in any movement for the improvement of the general welfare and to that end is a prominent member of the Rotary Club, of which he is a director. His interests are thoroughly identified with those of Faulkner county and he is readily conceded to be a representative citizen.

His popularity is evidenced by the fact that for twenty-five continuous years he was postmaster of Yellville. His demise occurred at the age of sixty-seven years. H. C. Butler was born in Marion county, Arkansas, in 1862 and died in 1914, at the age of fifty-one years. He resided in Arkansas throughout his life and won prominence as a merchant both in Summit and Flippin. Mr. Butler was appointed deputy county clerk and for four years served to the best of his ability in that office. In 1920 he was elected county and circuit clerk, in which offices he is active at the present time. Through his energy and persistence Mr. Butler has gained the confidence and good will of all with whom he has been brought into contact and he is justly accounted among the highly honored citizens of Marion county.

In 1912 occurred the marriage of Mr. Butler to Miss Jessie Flippin a daughter of T. H. Flippin, extended mention of whom is made elsewhere in this work. Three children have been born to their union; Mary, Nelson and Augusta, all at home.

Alf, who is now a farmer of Fort Smith, Arkansas; W. W., of this review; Rufus, who is an engineer on the Frisco Railroad and makes his home in Fort Smith, Arkansas; Will, who was an engineer on the Frisco line and lived at Fort Smith until killed in a wreck in 1907; Betty, who was the wife of Ray Boydson and died in 1906, while the other children all died unnamed in infancy. The religious faith of the parents was that of the Methodist church and in his political views Mr. Skelton was an earnest republican.

Dr. Skelton, of this review, acquired his early education in the schools of Russellville, Arkansas, and afterward attended the Little Rock University and also the Arkansas State University, where he became a pupil in the school of medicine. He thus studied in Little Rock for a year and afterward entered the Louisville Medical College of Louisville, Kentucky, from which he was graduated with the M. D. degree in the class of 1896. He began practice in Van Buren, Arkansas, where he remained for two years, and then removed to Alma, where he also spent two years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Fort Smith, where he practiced for two decades until his removal to Mayflower for the benefit of his wife's health. He practiced in Faulkner county and maintained his home in Fort Smith, although living temporarily in Mayflower.

On the 10th of June, 1900, Dr. Skelton was married to Miss Laura B. Yoes, a daughter of Jacob Yoes, a merchant and planter of Fort Smith, who served as United States marshal under President Benjamin Harrison. Dr. and Mrs. Skelton became parents of four children: Jacob Yoes, W. W., Marguerite and George W. The first two are at home and the last two died in infancy.

The religious faith of Dr. Skelton was that of the Christian church, to which church his wife also belongs, and fraternally he was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In his political views he was a republican and kept well informed on the vital questions and issues of the day but did not seek nor desire political office. He preferred to concentrate his time and efforts upon his professional duties, which were many and arduous, and he kept in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress through his membership in the Crawford County Medical Society and through his wide reading and individual study.

FRANK A. GILLETTE.

Frank A. Gillette, assistant general manager of the R. E. Lee Wilson & Company store at Wilson, is one of Mississippi county's most successful business men. He was born in Laclede, Missouri, on the 30th of October, 1879, a son of John H. and Mary (Walker) Gillette, the former a native of Mt. Vernon and the latter of Shawassee county, Michigan. Their marriage was celebrated in Laclede, where the mother had removed as a child with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Gillette are now residing in Shawassee county, Michigan, the father being retired. He was for years associated with the Adams and American Express companies.

Frank A. Gillette received his education in the public schools of Burlington, Iowa, and at the age of thirteen years began his business career, carrying a newspaper route there. He was active in that connection for six years and at the age of eighteen years entered the employ of the Burlington Lumber Company as a member of the office force. He remained with that concern four years and at the termination of that time went to Chicago, Illinois, and secured a stenographic position successively with the International Harvester Company, Fairbanks, Morse & Company and the National Biscuit Company. His stenographic work covered a period of two years and he then went to Memphis, where he became associated with James E. Starke & Company, lumber dealers and manufacturers. At the end of three months he resigned that position and entered the employ of the American Washboard Company at Fair, this state. Subsequently he was put in charge of the company's mills and achieved substantial success in that connection. In February, 1907, however, he severed his relations with that company and became associated with Lee Wilson & Company in Memphis as a stenographer. Later he became bookkeeper and in 1911 was made a member of the firm, becoming secretary and treasurer. A year later he was sent to Wilson, this state, at the time the company was a corporate body. In October, 1917, the corporation was dissolved, the officers dispensed with and the company became a common law trust. Mr. Gillette was then made assistant general manager, in which important capacity he has since served. He is a man of varied interests and is vice president of the Bank of Wilson; secretary of the Wilson Coal & Ice Company; secretary of the Wilson Milling Company; one of the partners of the Evadale Mercantile Company of Evadale; and assistant to the president of the J. L. C. & E. Railroad. Mr. Gillette is in every sense of the word a self-made man, for since he was thirteen years of age he has made his own way in the world. The road he has traveled has not been an easy one and many a man of less character and determination would have been overcome by the many obstacles that rose in his path from time to time. His close application to the thing at hand, his innate business ability and laudable ambition, won for him constant promotion and he well merits the position he holds among the most substantial business men of the town, county and state.

On the 14th of July, 1905, occurred the marriage of Mr. Gillette to Miss Emma Littleton of Memphis, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Gillette hold membership in the First Presbyterian church at Memphis.

Politically Mr. Gillette is a stanch supporter of the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Although he has never sought nor desired public preferment on his own account, he is interested in party affairs and has been active in the furtherance of every movement for the development and improvement of Wilson and the county. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Carson Lake Lodge, No. 658, F. & A. M. of Wilson; Osceola Chapter, No. 57, R. A. M. at Wilson; Osceola Council, No. 57, R. & S. M.; and he is likewise a member of Elizabeth Lodge, No. 170, Knights of Pythias of Wilson. He is deputy grand chancellor of the latter organization.

A representative member of the medical profession in Arkansas is Dr. J. B. Ellis, a resident of Helena. The paternal grandfather, J. B. Ellis, was born in Clarksville, Tennessee, and in early life took up the study of medicine. He enrolled in the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia and was graduated from that institution with the M. D. degree in 1845. He practiced at Ripley, Mississippi, for some time and then moved to Booneville, where he practiced many years. He was one of the prominent physicians and surgeons of the day. Ellis received his education also at the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia and received his M. D. degree from that institution with the class of 1875. He began practice at Booneville, Mississippi, but came to Arkansas in 1893 and located in Helena. He remained here until 1902, when he removed to Sherman, Texas, practicing there until 1920, when he went to Fayetteville, Arkansas, on a visit. He died there September 2, 1920. The marriage of Dr. and Mrs. Ellis was celebrated in Booneville, Mississippi, and to their union four children were born: Mrs. J. B. Miles, whose husband is with the Mutual Life Insurance Company of Little Rock; J. B., whose name introduces this review; Ira C., who is a cotton buyer with residence in Galveston, Texas; and Grace, who is the widow of Kirk Eubank and is residing in Sherman, Texas. Dr. George S. Ellis was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church, as was also his wife. Politically Dr. Ellis always gave his allegiance to the democratic party.

Dr. J. B. Ellis received his early education in the public schools of Helena and subsequently enrolled in the University of Arkansas, where he was a student for two years. He then determined to take up the medical profession as a life work and entered the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, from which institution his father and grandfather received their M. D. degrees. His degree was conferred upon him in 1901 and he immediately began practice in Helena, where he has remained. He has an extensive and important patronage and specializes in surgical work. Dr. Ellis has remained a constant student of his profession and takes postgraduate work at leading universities throughout the county most every year. In addition to his private practice he is an attending physician and surgeon of the hospital here and one of the teachers in the Nurses Training School. His instruction covers the diseases of children.
